We are able to announce that the New York State Anti-secrecy Convention is to be held at Binghamton late in October. Particulars will be given later.

The annual State Convention of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will be held in the Wesleyan Methodist church at Marengo, Iowa county, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 8, 9, beginning at 1:30 in the afternoon of the first-named day. All who are in sympathy with the anti-secrecy reform are invited to attend, and all churches in harmony with the movement are urged to send delegates. Free and ample entertainment is insured to those coming from a distance, by the Executive Committee.

By reference to the report of Rev. M. A. Gault, who is now laboring in Nebraska in behalf of the N. C. A. work, it will be observed that the first annual State Anti-secrecy Convention is to be held at Wahoo, in that State, October 18 and 19 (next month). Arrangements have not yet been completed, but it is confidently expected that there will be several pastors present from local churches opposed to the lodge, to give addresses upon the suicidal policy of mingling Christianity with the pagan worship of secret societies. Among those mentioned who will be in attendance are the following: Rev. E. B. Graham, Rev. J. W. Morton (North Loup), and Rev. W. C. Paden. Prof. S. M. Hill, principal of the Luther Academy, Wahoo, is to present the issue with Jesuitry, and Rev. Jno. M. French, pastor of the First United Presbyterian church in Omaha, will also address the convention. The Swedish Lutherans are strongly imbued with the importance of our work, and carry considerable influence in Nebraska. A full program is expected soon. Let our friends in the Western District rally on this occasion, in force.

The attempt to Christianize Freemasonry, in order to harmonize it with the orthodox church doctrines, is unmistakably a scheme of the devil to obtain possession of both the lodge and the church. Such a combination, however, is authorized by neither the Bible nor the Landmarks of Masonry.

"The increase of lodges still continues, but no wonder, when Masonic benevolence and beneficence are unparalleled in amount."—Voice of Masonry. The increase of saloons in Chicago continues, but no wonder, when beer, whisky and other intoxicants are unparalleled in amount. Both the lodge and the saloon seem to be very prosperous in a similar ratio.

Rev. W. C. Paden writes: "We desire the friends of anti-secrecy to bear in mind that I am now in the field for Kansas, Missouri and Iowa. I trust they will be free to write to me anything of interest to the cause, and especially that they desire a lecture, or lectures, in their communities. Always address me at Oakland, Kans." Bro. Paden will be sure to give satisfaction wherever he is called.

A letter from Rev. W. W. Ames, Menominee, Wis., on the 9th inst., announces the death of our excellent friend and co-worker, Capt. William Wilson, on the 4th, of old age and Bright's disease, after an illness of six weeks. He died strong in the assurances of a faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. One by one the pioneers of the anti-secrecy reform are passing away, but as they go they bear undeniable evidence to the justice of opposing the lodge in the name of the Lord of Hosts. An obituary sketch will soon appear in the Cynosure, together, we hope, with a portrait of our lamented co-laborer.

One of the lodge papers makes public the fact that fifteen residents of a certain city invested in one of the cheap endowment societies, which afterward passed into the hands of a receiver. Fourteen of them had paid in $99 each, in the hope of receiving $100 for a much less sum, and, at last accounts, had a prospect of getting nothing, or, at best, a mere trifle. The fifteenth member went into the society a fortnight or so sooner than the others, and as his certificate matured much earlier, his assessments were less in number, and he escaped with payments amounting to only $83, but he will receive about as much as the others. Assessments of $16 per member within fifteen days indicate a very unhealthy lot of members, or a sickly institution—perhaps a very mercenary one. How long would it take to ruin the average laboring man by these assessments?

In the Canon law, the undisputed fundamental code of Romanism, it is written: "The church is empowered to grant, or to take away, any temporal possession." A gentleman in Detroit, in his will, bequeathed the use of a certain house and lot in that city to the Roman Catholic church as long as the house (a frame one, we believe,) should resist the natural wear and tear of occupation and the elements; and when it should become, from those causes, uninhabitable, the possession of the premises should revert to a certain heir. The church accepted the property on the terms of the will; and to prevent the further decay of the house, completely enclosed it with a new one, making the bequest perpetual. It was a "smart" Yankee trick, but not too mean for the church which denounces "the godless public school."

The end has come to one of Chicago's most prominent plague-spots—the resort of gamblers and thugs—the Garfield Park race course. For years it has cast its gloom and blight upon the fair West Side of the city. It has been closed in ignominy and bloodshed, the result of the heroic treatment demanded by the law for its suppression. It is well; and while we may deplore the necessity of a resort to firearms and the extinguishment of three lives, we should not forget the hundreds of fair young lives whom it led into all the pitfalls of gambling and other vices. Chicago's atmosphere is clearer for the removal of the curse. Let us be thankful.

The editor of the Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter (Pittsburgh), in its issue for September, remarks: "There are but few if any of our city congregations in which there are not members of some of the many trades unions. What to do in these cases is a question which sessions must answer. One of our sessions has since the meeting commenced to deal with individual cases. A member of the I. O. U. W. has been told he must either give up his connection with it, or lose his church privileges. This is but carrying out the directions of Synod," which, at its last session, lifted up its protest "against the formation of those modern organizations, even when they are not secret, in which employer and employes are banded against each other in antagonistic unions to wage against each other an industrial war, dishonoring to God and damaging to the interests of both." "We urge separation from such defensive measure and the irreligious fellowship involved as by all means the safer and more consistent course for the true followers of Christ." If all the denominations in the Union were as plain-spoken in a determination to oppose the lodge as the Covenanters, its arrogance and evil would sooner come to naught.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

[A Pamphlet issued by the Mixed Lutheran Pastors' Conference of Sheboygan and Manitowoc Counties, Wis., (Concluded.)

CARELESS SWEARING IN UNNECESSARY AND UNCERTAIN THINGS.

The members of the Grand Army of the Republic admit that they have been obliged to render the oath of secrecy at their reception; so, then, the G. A. R. requires oaths. "The services for the uses of the G. A. R." prescribe for the installation of the officers the following formula: The official says: "You will raise your right hand and repeat after me the obligation of the office: I (A. B.) bind myself solemnly, on my word of honor as a man and a comrade of the G. A. R., faithfully and impartially to administer all the duties of the office which I am about to assume; so help me, God." See the Lutheran, page 55.

Who has given the G. A. R. the right to administer oaths? It does not, in this matter, act with the permission of the government. The government does not punish him as a perjurer who breaks an oath administered by the G. A. R. God has neither founded nor recognized the order. It is true, the Christian is permitted, after the example of Paul (1 Cor. 1: 23), in order to strengthen a declaration to call God for witness, if the honor of God demands it, or the salvation of one's neighbor makes it necessary, or if the exigencies of one's office and calling requires it. True, the head of the household is permitted, after the example of Abraham, to administer, under certain circumstances, an oath to those who belong to his household; but the household has been founded by God; the head of the house is the representative of God to those who belong to it. The same holds true, also, of the government; it was instituted by God. Who is it, however, that has given the G. A. R. the power to administer an oath? He who allows the G. A. R. to administer an oath of secrecy to himself takes the name of God in vain. He is not permitted to say that in this matter the command of the government compels him to swear, nor the honor of God, nor the salvation of his neighbor, nor his office or calling. A certain member of a conference reported how a member of a church who had refused to render the oath had his conscience quieted on that point; he was told that the only thing in question was the pass-word and other insignificant things concerning the ritual and the unwritten forms of the G. A. R.; that there was nothing dangerous contained in these; furthermore, that he might at any time withdraw if he should find anything that was against his conscience; for these reasons he had been impelled to render the oath. Did this man do right? Certainly not. The Word of God says: "Cursed is the man who puts his trust in man." He should have declared: "Swearing is for me a matter much too serious; I do not risk my soul thus carelessly; perhaps you tell what is true, but if I am to swear, your asseveration is not enough for me; I will have to ascertain for myself what things your ritual contains." And then, when he had become persuaded that the ritual contained nothing offensive or dangerous, and that the assumption of secrecy did not mean anything, then he could not have sworn at all, according to the teaching of Christ. He would then have been obliged to declare: "I will give you my promise that I will conceal these things; if that is enough for you, very well. I will not swear. I have learned from my catechism that swearing in insignificant things is a misuse of God's name; for Christ says: 'Let your speech be yea, yea; nay, nay; what is beyond this is evil.'"

Then the upshot of the matter would, perhaps, have been that the intention was to administer the oath of secrecy to him on account of certain things which possibly would have become the subject of discussion at a session. In that case he would have been obliged to declare: "Now there is additional reason for not swearing, if I have learned that swearing in uncertain things is careless swearing. King Herod gave his oath concerning uncertain things, and was thereby impelled to murder."

Let him who must swear take careful thought for himself; for it is a solemn thing to call God to witness the truth and to avenge falsehood. God is not mocked. He forbids, in his Word, not only false but careless swearing by his name.

God says: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless who takes his name in vain." If a Christian looks upon this divine command rightly, he will well take heed lest he swear in insignificant and uncertain things.

If, however, he has done this he will sever his relations with the society that has led him to it and leads also others the same, in order that he may not become participant in another's sins.

FRATERNAL RELATIONS WITH INFIDELS AND HETERO-DOX.

If we take a look at the persons who may be members of the G. A. R., according to the constitution of the same, we find that they consist of one-time war comrades who have obtained an honorable dismissal from the army. Just as upon admission to the army, there is no question raised whether the recruit is a believer or not; whether he is leading a Christian life or not; whether a member of the church or not; whether a Lutheran or Catholic; so also none of these things are taken into consideration upon being received into the G. A. R. There may, and actually do, belong to this society Christians and infidels, orthodox and heterodox, non-believers and scoffers of religion.

In the war, all of them fought side by side against the common enemy of the land. God also called him who was a Lutheran by means of the government and placed him at his post. If the danger for a faithful Christian life by means of constant relation with unbelievers were not small, nevertheless he was able to comfort himself in a special protection of his God; and the Christian who is concerned for his eternal welfare is, in this respect, heartily glad that the war, and with the war the life of the soldier, is at an end.

But how does the matter stand if a Christian enters without divine call such a society in common with those who are outspoken in not believing at all, or in believing what is false? If he cherishes friendly and fraternal feelings with them, can he in this case also comfort himself with the special protection of God? If he falls, by such relations, into soul-danger, is it not much rather true that in such a case the saying applies: "He who purposely walks into danger shall be destroyed?" The Word of God says: "Blessed is he who does not sit in the seat of the scornful." Peter sought, without any call, although with the best intention, the company of the enemies of Christ and of his disciples, and thereby fell, pitifully. It cannot be very wise. Friendly, fraternal intercourse with non-Christians has its effect, although unconscious. Every one may easily notice this in himself if he zealously reads the Word of God, or Luther's writings. It will have its effect if he reads the secular paper and thereby neglects being busy with the Word of God. This cannot be done without injury to his soul. Intercourse with men and with books has its effect, though it may be unnoticed. As Christians, we ought to seek relations with believing Christians.

THE RELIGION OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

It is, furthermore, to be considered that the Grand Army also has a religious tendency. Every post has its chaplain. Let us see just what are the duties of the chaplain. The formulary for this is to be found in the regulations concerning divine worship of the G. A. R., pages 53 and 54. The mustering officer says to him: "Comrade, you have been chosen by your comrades to conduct the religious exercises of the post. The rules and regulations demand of you that you are to preside also at the funeral of a comrade, if the same is under the direction of the post, and that you are to exercise such other duties in connection with your office as the post may order. Are you willing to assume the duties of this office and to carry them out with a reverent spirit?" After assenting to this, the officer continues as follows: "Comrade, you are expected thus to address your office that your comrades may follow your example and no reflection may be cast on the religion, the teachings of which for our instruction and guidance it is your duty to present."

So, then, the chaplain is solemnly bound to conduct the religious exercises of his post and to present the teachings of religion for the instruction and guidance of his comrades. That these are not mere farces, the services for the use of the Grand Army prove. In these we have, in the first place, the order of conducting divine services on Memorial Day when the celebration takes place in their hall. Then another one for the celebration in the cemetery, and, finally, another one for celebration in public halls. Still another formulary prescribes what is to be the order of exercises of dedicating a monument; another, still, prescribes the order at the funeral of a comrade; finally, there is another one in case the G. A. R. intends to celebrate the memorial of one or more of their deceased comrades. In all of these services the chaplain has to offer prayer and to say the benediction. It is also required that either the commander or the chaplain either read or deliver an address; thus, for instance, it says in the burial formulary. "The chaplain shall thereupon either recite the following or deliver an address of the same length." Page 38.

These addresses, also, are religious in contents; thus, for instance (page 38), "This open grave reminds us of the transitory character of human life. The Son of Man will come at an hour that you think not."

Like as the deceased at that time when he, weary, laid himself at rest on the field of battle, so also now he is in the hands of the Heavenly Father. God giveth his beloved sleep. We bring our comrade to his resting place, not doubting, but believing, that the merciful Captain of our salvation will call us to that brotherhood which endures without interruption on earth and in heaven. Jesus says, 'Thy brother shall rise again. I am the resurrection and the life.' We commit the body to the grave, where dust returns to the earth again and the spirit to God who gave it. Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, and dust to dust, awaiting the resurrection and the coming life through Jesus Christ."

So thus it is not a mere form of words by which the chaplains bound to conduct the religious exercises of the post and to present the teachings of religion for the instruction and guidance of his comrades. This he does when he reads such addresses and prescribed prayers, and certainly also then when he makes voluntary addresses or a voluntary prayer.

So, then, it is a fact that the G. A. R. man, when he belongs to the church, has two spiritual advisers, to-wit his pastor and the chaplain of his post; and these two do not work in the same mind and spirit, so that the one might represent the other one as the deacon of the church, or the teacher may represent the pastor when the latter is prevented from standing in his place. The chaplain has not been appointed by the church, but by the post; although he advises and serves members of the church, he is responsible neither to the pastor nor to the church for his addresses and prayers. For his addresses and prayers, and so also for the doctrines which he holds, he is not responsible to the church or pastor, but to his post alone. It is not the church, nor is it the real pastor who prescribes what is to be read, but the G. A. R.

What would a Lutheran church say if one of its members were at the same time a member of the Methodist church, and should demand that the Lutheran pastor and the Methodist pastor should together bury him, seeing that he was a member of both churches. Without doubt he would very soon have to hear: "No one can serve two masters; either you will have to be entirely with us or not at all."

One would certainly think that even the weakest ought to recognize that the appointment of a chaplain, now that the soldiers have returned home and are in churches who have their pastors, is a superfluous thing. But is the chaplain perhaps intended for the irreligious element in the G. A. R.? Is he, perhaps, for the purpose of teaching the advantage of the dispensing of the Word and the sacraments on the part of the unbelieving one? Is it, perhaps, the intention to say to him, you are right, there is no need of remaining attached to the church? A veteran who has risked his life for the fatherland has no necessity for the Word and the sacraments. It is true the pastors will make an outcry about your worldly mindedness, but never mind, we will take thought for a Christian burial for you. Are Christians willing to lend a hand to this and to become co-responsible for the destruction of these despisers? Is that a specimen of genuine love for them, thus to confirm them in their un-Christian frame of mind?

Listen; the chaplain declares at the grave of such a one, "He is in the hands of the Heavenly Father. God giveth his beloved sleep. The Captain of our salvation will call him to that brotherhood which endures without interruption on earth and in heaven." Is that your faith, Lutheran G. A. R. people? Are such despisers of the means of grace God's beloved ones? Are they, after death, in the hands of their Heavenly Father? You know very well that they are now in the hand of the righteous Judge, who declares, "Thou dost reject the Word of God and therefore I will reject thee."

NATIONAL REFORMATION—HOW?

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

For more than ten years I have given my time to national reform work, and so long as health permits I feel constrained to continue the work. I have a growing conviction that this work is most important to the salvation of souls and the coming of Christ's kingdom. No department of Christian work is so necessary at this time, because so much neglected. More than nineteen-twentieths of the churches' effort is now employed in applying the Gospel to men in their individual, family and church relations, to the neglect of their civil or political relations. The strategic movement of Satan in these times is to get control of the world's politics and operate it against the churches. He is doing this by inducing Christian people to restrict their efforts to prayer meeting, Christian Endeavor, missionary society and Y. M. C. A. work; and to neglect and even oppose efforts to bring religion in contact with politics. This is the secret of the opposition our anti-secret work and prohibition work has to encounter. It is because they propose to apply the law of Christ to the government and to the corporation, as well as to the individual. The prevailing impression in the churches is that evangelistic efforts for the salvation of individual souls are the only efficient means of national reformation. It regards, as dangerous and disturbing questions, the direct application of Bible law to government or the contact of religion with politics. According to this idea the nation is to be reformed by the same method with which Francis Murphy proposes to carry the temperance cause—warning us not to interfere with saloons or the liquor traffic, but duly persuade individuals to quit drinking. It is like permitting batteries to shell towns, and then try to save people by training them in the art of dodging. It is like letting the vessel sink, and then trying to save the passengers with life-preservers, or like allowing the building to burn while only trying to save the inmates by the fire-escapes.

This delusive idea is based on the popular error that the reformation process is always from the individual to the mass. How did God convert the Israelites from the sin of idolatry? How did he reform France from the oppression of a false religious aristocracy, and Great Britain from the oppression of the American colonies; or our government from the crime of American slavery? Was it by the conversion of individuals, and these in turn making other converts? Was it not rather by war and national revolution that the nation was converted?—and then the influence and power of the government was brought to bear upon the individual. How long would it have taken the Abolitionists to abolish slavery by converting individual slaveholders? But when God, by the civil war, converted the nation, and its influence was brought to bear upon the individual, the process was rapid and complete. By the same process we believe God will convert the nation from the modern idolatry of lodge-worship. The indications are that such secret organizations as Jesuitry and the American Protective Association will soon come in collision, and crimson the streets of our cities with blood; and likewise the capitalistic secret forces and the secret labor organizations are nearing a collision which will shake the nation and the world. In the meantime let us awaken the churches to the enemy that confronts them in the form of upwards of two hundred secret orders in our land, comprising more than two million members, all being trained in Christless rituals, prayers and ceremonies, paralyzing the religion of Christ and corrupting the church more than did the Baal-worship of Samaria.

TO STUDY THE BIBLE.

Mr. Moody's Bible Institute in Chicago is making great preparations for the coming winter and next year, with especial reference to the need there will be for aggressive Christian work among the vast crowds who will visit the Fair. Two new stories upon the main building are about completed. These will afford accommodations for one hundred additional men. Mr. Moody, himself, expects to spend a large proportion of the year '93 in Chicago, and is trying to secure leading men from the old country and America to preach the Gospel in English and other languages, and also to give instructions in the Institute, in addition to the regular corps of teachers.

Those who enter the school in October, or as soon after that as possible, will have the best opportunities in the work. In accepting applicants, preference will, of course, be given to those expecting to stay throughout the year. None are admitted but such as are preparing for some form of Christian work.

It seems likely that more room will have to be provided for the Women's Department in order to accept all the promising applicants.

Special attention will be paid to the work of the Musical Department of the Institute. It is proposed to gather and train a large male choir, to sing at the services to be held during the World's Fair, and extra privileges will be granted to pupils having exceptionally good voices, who will remain during that period. The musical terms begin the first Tuesdays of October, January, April and July.

All inquiries regarding any of the Departments should be addressed to Bible Institute, 80 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

WHY ROMANISM OPPOSES THE PYTHIAN KNIGHTS.

The most Rev. Archbishop of Cincinnati has written a letter setting forth reasons why Catholics should not join the Knights of Pythias. His objections to it may be imperfectly summarized as follows: All objectionable secret societies have more or less affiliation with Freemasonry, which has lately expressed its purpose to destroy religion; men are inevitably influenced by their associates and surroundings; Catholics who have been led into secret societies have too often fallen away from the practice of their religious duties; the initiation of the Knights of Pythias is made a religious ceremony; the candidate invokes on himself "all the anguish and torments possible for man to suffer" if he should ever expose the secrets of the order; he swears "to obey all orders that may be given emanating from the supreme lodge, so long as they do not conflict with my political or religious liberty;" and from the decisions of the king and his nine counsellors there is no appeal, as their "edicts once sent forth are established laws." The absolute authority of the rulers of the Knights and the absolute obedience demanded of the members are insufferable; and the ritual of the order is an infringement on the territory of the church. How can any free American citizen subject himself to the slavery of such an oath-bound secret society?—New York Catholic Review.

RELIGIOUS DIVISIONS OF EUROPE.

The population of Europe may be set down in round numbers as 350,000,000, and is divided religiously about as follows: Roman Catholics, 169,000,000; Protestants, 90,000,000; members of Oriental churches, 85,000,000; and about 5,000,000 each of Jews and Mohammedans. Italy with 31,000,000, as well as Spain and Portugal with 25,000,000, are almost wholly Catholic. Belgium with 6,000,000 is papal about twelve to one. In France, out of 39,000,000, less than 1,000,000 are Protestants. Austria contains some 37,000,000 inhabitants, of whom 12,000,000 are non-Catholic. In Switzerland nearly two-thirds of the 3,000,000 accept the Reformed faith. The German Empire holds 30,250,000 Protestants in a total of 48,000,000. Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and the Netherlands, with a combined population of 13,500,000, are almost solid against the papacy; the latter being overwhelmingly Presbyterian, and the others Lutheran. Great Britain and Ireland are Protestant by 29,620,000 against 5,640,000. Of the Catholics 1,370,000 are found in England and Wales, and but 330,000 in Scotland. In Ireland are found 1,155,000 Protestants and about 4,000,000 Catholics. Russia and Greece have a population of 100,000,000, of which two-thirds belong to the Greek church. Mohammedans comprise about one-half of Turkey's 5,000,000.

THE UNPATRIOTIC PENSION LIST.

This pension legislation is not primarily for the old soldier. It is for the pension shark, the pension attorney and the politician. It is for the "pull" that wasteful extravagance will give these people on the patriotic sentiment of the country. It is for the purpose of helping charlatans in power by playing falsely upon the very best sentiments of the human heart. There is no legislation on the statute book so soiled with corruption, so tainted with the meanest of human vices, as the pension laws.

In the years that have passed since the end of the war many of the old soldiers have died, but the pension disbursements have increased from $13,460,000 in 1866 to $134,000,000 appropriated for next year, while the list has grown from 127,000 to 676,000 pensioners. According to Congressman Tucker we seem to have just entered upon our career of pension extravagance. Bad as the past has been and the present is, the future is worse. There were 689,000 survivors of the war on June 30th, 1891—13,000 more than the pensioners on the rolls. There were 880,000 dead soldiers not represented on [the rolls] by widows or dependent relatives. This made nearly 1,570,000 persons entitled to be placed on the rolls. Of these 928,000 had made application. Upon this basis Mr. Tucker estimates that at the end of three years $281,000,000 will be annually required to pay the pensions. This is an enormous list—so extravagant that patriotism and gratitude can have little relation to it. Much of it is pure plunder for political purposes. It is more than ten times the pension list of Great Britain or France and more than twenty times that of Germany.

The amount we will give in gratitude to the dead would nearly pay for the 1,156,000 active soldiers of Great Britain, France and Germany. Here is the list:

Country.	Army.	Cost.
Great Britain.....	182,000.....	$ 91,000,000
France.....	529,000.....	121,000,000
Germany.....	445,000.....	55,000,000
Totals.....	1,156,000.....	$297,000,000

It is time that this evil should be reformed. In justice to the honest pensioners, to the deserving old soldiers, to the real widows and orphans of the defenders of the Union, in order that the memory of the republic's heroes shall not be maligned by association with the republic's plunderers, and for the cause of good government itself, the Democratic majority in Congress should gain the courage to deal honestly with this subject and to put into it the sharp-edged knife of economy. Bring down the pension list to honest figures and make a pension synonymous with honorable and patriotic service. This is one of the chief duties of the hour.—World.

MASONIC AGGRESSION IN ITALY.

The Grand Master, Adriano Lemmi, has mapped out a new plan of campaign for Freemasons in Italy against the Catholic church. The lodges must insist, so he said lately at a banquet in Florence, on "the abolition of the law of guarantees, prohibition of religious instruction and of religious marriage not preceded by the civil ceremony, the institution of divorce, and the suppression of the ministry of worship." Religion is no longer to be tolerated by the State. The secret societies, having apparently accomplished the downfall of the temporal power of the Pope, are bent on destroying his spiritual authority. They will advance their lines now, and having begun by rejecting the influence of Christianity in the Government, they will forthwith proceed to efface it. The step from negation to persecution is to be taken, and a new chapter of suffering will at once begin for the church in Italy and for the holy Father. However, in hoc signo vinces—our hope is perennial that the Cross will yet triumph over the Triangle.—New York Catholic Review.

CLEVELAND AND SIGMA CHI.

A dispatch from Indianapolis, Ind., August 31, says: "That part of the proceedings of the Sigma Chi convention recently held in this city relating to the admission of Grover Cleveland as a member of the order has just leaked out. The University of Michigan 'Sigs,' a prominent law chapter, invited Mr. Cleveland to join the order last winter while he was lecturing there. He accepted the honor, but by a recent change in the constitution all honorary membership is barred, save by special dispensation of the grand council. So Mr. Cleveland and the Ann Arbor Sigma Chi had to wait the action of the Indianapolis convention of last week. It was known some months ago that politics had crept into the question and a vigorous fight was expected. A most vigorous debate on the question, 'Shall we initiate Cleveland?' was carried on for seven or eight hours at the convention here. The Cleveland men lacked a few votes of the three-fourths majority required and the minority was as firm as granite. So the matter was compromised by Mr. Cleveland's membership being accepted without formal initiation, and the matter was peacefully settled."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The "cholera scare" and its uses.—The Iron Hall and its corrupt methods.—Is the world growing better?—Middle-aged working women.—A good work for the next International Woman's Congress.

The "cholera scare" is not without its beneficial uses. If human beings refuse to live with a decent regard to sanitary laws; if whole families are allowed to cook, eat, sleep and work in one room, and sewers are permitted to overflow and empty their filthy contents into bays and rivers, poisoning the fishes and preparing the way for the angel of the pestilence, all the balsam-scented air of our woods and hills will not save us from the dreaded scourge. The need of city mothers as well as city fathers was never more urgently proved and illustrated than at the present time. Everybody knows what kind of a housekeeper the average man makes when he lives alone; and the mystery of it is how we can expect anything better when the average man, taken not individually, but in the gross, attempts to do the house-keeping for our cities and large towns. A woman does not clean up partially, or by fits and starts. She goes at it systematically and thoroughly, bringing to light the hidden things of darkness in attic and cellar, which, if her worse half ruled alone, might for all him rest undisturbed till doomsday. If a few such women could be given the important positions in our cities and large towns which are now filled by foreigners, there would be little fear of the cholera. We should have cleaner streets, more scientific methods of disposing of our garbage, and a renovating or tearing down of all buildings unfit to be homes for human beings. When woman comes to the front, look out for a grand spring-cleaning all around. No wonder that our foreign fellow-citizens, with whom squalor and filth have been a birthright for generations, are almost a unit in denying her the ballot!

The Iron Hall investigation reveals more and more "rotteness in Denmark" the deeper it goes. Supreme Justice Somerby's letter, alluding to his visit to Maine to buy up the Legislature of that State, says: "It is expensive business, but it pays in the long run;" and the statement that he had "fixed" the New Hampshire body, shows the corrupting power of these orders. Perhaps such business does "pay" from the standpoint of Somerby and men like him; but the question is who gets the pay? Who got the fruits of the $10,000 which was used in New England to secure the passage of laws to favor these swindlers? Surely not the poor, deceived, hard-working men and women who deposited their money in good faith, and find that they will receive little or nothing back.

The Watchman has recently had an editorial on "Manless Churches," founded on an estimate given by the Epworth League that "two-thirds of our church members are women, and that they do about three-fourths of all religious work." The noticeable thing about this editorial is its persistent ignoring of the real source of the trouble. The Watchman considers that the best reason why this is so is to be "found in the temptations incident to the more public life which man leads in his constant exposure to worldly influences," and "his opportunity to see more of the inconsistencies and failures of professing Christians." Now, an examination of the membership roll, in most of our country churches, will show that in the latter part of the last century and the beginning of this, the sexes stood nearly equal, where now a male adult applying for admittance is almost an unheard-of thing. Set by the side of this fact the opposite one, that the lodges never lack for members, and we have found an answer to the problem by a shorter cut than that taken by the Watchman. Furthermore, the disparity between men and women as regards exposure to worldly influences, no longer exists in the same degree as formerly, now that women are found more or less in all the walks of public and professional life. This question is a vital one to our churches; and better that our leading religious journals preserve a discreet silence than treat it thus superficially.

In the last Fortnightly Review, Coventry Patmore says: "Christ and his apostles did not prophesy that the world would get better and happier for his life, death, and teachings, but rather that it would become intolerably worse." One cannot read the newspapers thoughtfully and not see that so far from getting "better" or "happier," the world seems to be growing every day sadder and more wicked. The way in which a portion of the public press has fairly gloated over every circumstance, true or untrue, in the Borden case which could be made to throw a darker shadow over the accused woman, has seemed to me perfectly horrible; I could almost go farther and say fiendlike. Think of coolly saying, as one paper did, that the failure of Prof. Wood in his chemical analysis to find anything that could criminate Miss Borden "was a great disappointment." Such a comment is instinct with savagery;—the tiger's claw under the velvet sheath of our boasted civilization. It is safe to say that Miss Borden, with scarcely a particle of evidence against her, would not now be lying in prison to await further trial if she had been a man and a Freemason.

A petition to the West End Company, signed by many of the saleswomen of Boston, to put on extra cars for their convenience, brings out the fact that these saleswomen are "docked" for every minute lost in the morning, without any regard to the cause of the delay, which may be perfectly unavoidable on their part; and thus to them a street "blockade," when they are hastening to their work, may mean serious financial loss. How hardly this iron rule must fall on many a poor girl who perhaps has a helpless parent or young brother or sister dependent on her scanty earnings! Another hard thing in the life of a woman who works for her daily bread, is that when she grows middle-aged, a time when men are considered in their prime, she is liable to be discharged to make room for some younger applicant. And especially, if she be a school-teacher, she fares as hard as the ministerial profession with its "dead-line of fifty." This is one of the wrongs to the sex which women's organizations should not fail to take up, for it is the cause of more hardship than is generally realized, the victims being mostly of the uncomplaining type whose appeal for justice is made in silent tears to the Judge of all the earth, and not from the platform, or through the columns of the press.

It is rumored that the styles of the First Empire are to be resurrected, which would mean the banishment of the corset, as of course that garment would be superfluous with the waist-line just below the arm-pits. Pleasing as Empress Josephine or Madame Recamier may have looked in the Grecised, would-be classic styles of that day, I doubt if we, with our changed ideas and manners, will ever go back to them. One tries to imagine our slender, willowy damsels and plump matrons in such a rig, but imagination refuses to take the leap. Why can't there be a symposium of the leading women of all nations to settle this everlasting dress-question at once and forever? The International Congress of Women might spend their time much less profitably than in thus trying to break the shackles which hinder the sex from attaining its highest development. Let designs be submitted, and those which shall best combine the hygienic ideas of the dress-reformers with artistic adaptation to the feminine form, be selected as the basis of a permanent style of female dress. Then shall the reign of bustles, trains and corsets be perpetually at an end; then shall be evolved a simple, graceful, common-sense fashion of dress;—one which shall both please the eye and minister comfort to the wearer; and the consolidated good sense of womankind will lay down the law how we shall dress ourselves, and not the demi-monde of Paris, London or New York.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7, 1892.

The setting up of a Gospel tent in the southwest section of Washington, under the auspices of the Salvation Army, has been the cause of the beginning of a suit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the outcome of which cannot fail to interest the citizens of all cities, as well as those of Washington. When it was first proposed by the Salvation Army to establish this tent, a number of residents in its immediate vicinity signed a petition to the Commissioners of the District, asking them not to grant a permit for its erection. After considering the petition, the Commissioners decided that so long as the owner of the ground upon which the tent was to be erected did not object, and the services in the tent were conducted with a reasonable regard to religious decorum, they could not refuse the permit any more than they could a permit applied for by any regularly established church organization.

The tent was erected some weeks ago, and largely-attended evening services have been regularly held therein. Now, two citizens, living adjacent to the tent, have filed a voluminous bill with the court, against Capt. John W. Proctor, who is in charge of the tent, charging him with maintaining a nuisance, and praying the court for a permanent injunction against the continuance of the tent. Capt. Proctor is charged with disturbing the complainants and their families by his loud preaching and exhorting, which, the complainants say, excites the rabble which attends the meetings, causing them to join in the loud shouting, singing and clapping of hands which is a component part of all the services held in the tent. The question raised by this suit is one which involves the construction of two guarantees of the Constitution of the United States—religious liberty and toleration, and the right of the individual citizen not to be interfered with in "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." It is by no means a new question, nor is it one that is easy to satisfactorily answer. If the court grants the prayer of the complainants, many will consider the decision a violation of the guarantee of religious freedom, which brought to our shores thousands of good men and women who were largely instrumental in making this country what it is to-day. On the other hand, should the court decide to refuse the injunction, there will be many who will regard the decision as an invasion of the individual rights of private citizens. It would, perhaps, be well if the question could be permanently disposed of by having it passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, although I am not informed as to whether either of the parties to the present controversy proposed appealing the case from the District to the U. S. Supreme Court.

There is considerable talk about and admiration of Mrs. John A. Logan's pluck in undertaking the task of raising $1,000,000 for the woman's department of the great Methodist University to be erected here, and those who are most familiar with Mrs. Logan's energetic method of working in all her undertakings predict that she will succeed in this the greatest of them all. If good wishes will help her, she has them in abundance from all classes of people.

There is no excitement here about the cholera. Our people are assured that the national government is leaving nothing undone that medical science and ingenuity can suggest to keep the disease away. The rest must be left to an all-wise Providence.

An able and strong sermon against intemperance, particularly among the female patrons of drug-store soda-fountains, which was preached Sunday evening by Rev. E. Hez Swemm, was marred by an unjust statement concerning an organization, known not only in the United States, but in many foreign countries, for its good work. Mr. Swemm, in concluding his sermon, said: "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is not for the salvation of men only. Yet I have never heard them say one word in reference to women. I call upon you, women, to look out for your own sex as well as that of the men." As might have been expected, the president of the W. C. T. U. made a reply to this statement as soon as she learned of it. She said: "I am sorry that one of our honored city pastors has never heard of the Hope and Help Mission, conducted under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., through which help has come to over 700 women during the last five years. True, many of these were simply poor women temporarily out of employment, but far too many have been addicted to drink, until they had lost will-power and hope, and, alas! too often all that is most sacred to womanhood. We deplore the drink habit among women, and are daily doing all in our power to save them from the curse." *

REFORM NEWS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD'S WORK IN CANADA.

MARKHAM VILLAGE, }
County of York, Ontario. }

DEAR CYNOSURE, with family greetings:—With pleasure I report the anti-secrecy lectures delivered in this section by one of your agents, Rev. J. P. Stoddard. He exposed some of the great evils that so much hinder the cause of Christ in this day and age, destroying vital godliness in many Christian hearts and blighting many homes. The lectures were very much appreciated by most of those that attended. Of course, the secrecy devil was considerably roused, but then that is what we want—to rout him out of his lair and expose his deceitfulness and meanness which he and his followers call "charity."

Your agent also preached very acceptably for us here, on the Sabbath day. May God bless him in his arduous and blessed work, is the prayer of many hearts in this community. We would gladly welcome his return in the near future.

Wishing you God's abundant blessing in your work, I remain your brother to cry aloud against all evil, especially in high places.

(Elder) DAVID S. SHANTZ.

ANOTHER WEEK IN THE CONFERENCES.

BISHOPS ARE NOT ALWAYS RIGHT.

Tuesday, the 6th inst., at the invitation of Rev. H. H. Succop, pastor of a large parish whose church is at the corner of Superior and Bickerdike streets, I visited the Chicago conference of German Lutheran ministers. It was a body of strong men, and some thirty or more were present. The N. C. A. representative was received by unanimous vote, and addressed the conference briefly on the especial feature of our work which is now being taken to the churches; promising to speak more at length, if desired, at the conference for Northern Illinois, soon to be held in Oak Park, near this city. One of the pastors was appointed to confer with the secretary further about the work; and very "earnest heed" was given by all present to a theme which our foreign pastors have studied with far more care than have their American brethren.

In the evening of the same day Pastor C. O. Brohaugh of Trinity Evangelical Lutheran church had arranged that I could address his young people's meeting. It was a most interesting gathering of something like one hundred youth with a few of their seniors. It was with deepest satisfaction that I marked the effect of the argument on the importance of right beginnings, and the danger of evil ones, and especially of once setting foot over the threshold of a secret society and worshipping at its altar. In private conversation with a group of the young men their convictions seemed to be thoroughly aroused; the address was requested for publication, and two invitations were accepted to speak to Sabbath congregations.

In conversation with brethren in different branches of the M. E. church, I have found the influence of Bishops Walden, Newman and Fowler in giving adherence to Freemasonry a serious evil, checking the enthusiasm of many pastors in preaching a full and free Gospel of love to all men and separation from the unfruitful works of darkness. Good men, who sympathize with our work, dread to preach truth that condemns the practice of their church leaders. So, too, the same restraint made Bishop Fitzgerald, though not a Freemason, refuse to let me speak on Friday to the German Conference meeting in Kenosha, Wis. I did not very much object to his ruling against my speech, though the pastors, so far as I could learn, were unanimous for it, but believed he ought to compromise on the request for a representative from the body to meet other like representatives for conference at our next annual meeting. Several pastors promised to present this request, which seemed not unreasonable, and some of them wish to attend the meeting, whether delegated or not.

I was pained to learn from one conference, whose distance compelled me to reach it by letter, that, while very heartily endorsing the reform, they refused as unanimously to aid this work among the churches by appointing a delegate.

This resulted from a misunderstanding. Our annual meeting will not, it is true, be composed of Christians of the same sect name, but all will be one in respect to the great question of Christ vs. the lodge; and no one will be in danger of contamination there, nor will they be having communion with those who seem to take the "cup of the Lord" and "the cup of devils" (1 Cor. 10: 20-22) at the same time. Let us remember, too, that when a man gets into the lodge he is our neighbor fallen among thieves. Christ in us will try to rescue him and not turn to the farther side of the highway.

Brethren, pray for this work.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

FROM THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

DENISON, Kans., Sept. 2, 1892.

We have opened the battle against the anti-Christian powers of darkness in church and state by two able and effective lectures, delivered by Rev. W. C. Paden in the R. P. church at Denison, commencing on the 31st of August, in which the "Objections Considered" was his theme; on Sept. 1, the "Relation of Freemasonry to Christianity and to Christian Duty."

These themes were ably handled before small but attentive and appreciative audiences, being backed up with the best Masonic authors in such a way as to be plain to every one, leaving the profound impression that this is Antichrist organized, and, consequently, no place for any of God's people. Brethren, send for this servant of the Lord to help turn on the light.

Yours in the work, J. A. TORRENCE.

THE OREGON CONVENTION.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept 5, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having just read Bro. P. B. Williams' outline sketch of the District Christian Association Convention that met at Canby, Oregon, I felt that it would rejoice the hearts and add an inspiration to the faith of the brethren "scattered abroad" to hear a little more about the same.

In the first place the convention was the most pronounced religious meeting it has been our privilege to participate in upon this coast. There were representatives from many denominations. The prayer of Christ seemed to have been answered in a good measure, "that they all may be one." There was much prayer, earnest spiritual singing and old-fashioned, Holy Ghost exhortation to a spiritual life and separation from the world. The whole convention was a spiritual, holy revival, from beginning to the end.

The second day was a prohibition convention, and, spiritually, followed, with intensifying power, the same line as the day before. It was a grand success. In the evening, a large number signed the pledge. Among them was a goodly array of young men and boys.

Rev. S. Matthew, the father of this movement, is quite aged and has been unwell; his sight is failing him, but he has the true Spirit of God in him. He is one of the old-fashioned, whole souled, up-and-down men for God who have for many years been baptized with the Holy Ghost; that makes them "swift witnesses" against not only the sorcery of Freemasonry, but every other sin. He paid every preacher's expenses. Let every reader of the Cynosure pray that this man of God may be spared some years to successfully finish the much-needed work.

The subject of "Social Purity" was discussed, and God's blessing especially rested upon that line of thought. The purpose is to hold district conventions and push the work of the separation of God's people from the worshipers of Baal in these holes in the wall, and all sin and the enlightenment of the people in regard to true spiritual worship, that they may be converted to the true and living God.

Father Matthew, the next day after the convention, took his "grip" full of anti-secrecy, anti-devil worship literature, and came to Portland to the Oregon M. E. Conference, intending to have the question discussed there. Bishop Walden, who is reported to be a thirty-three-degree Freemason, with the ruling power of the conference of the same complexion, would not allow any such exposure of the works of darkness. So the old Elijah-troubler-of-Israel had to return home without a contest with the hundreds of the prophets of Baal.

Baal worshipers know too well, in these days, "the God that answers by fire," and the devil has taught them to hide in the dark and avoid a contest that must certainly bring defeat. "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." "He that doeth righteousness cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." W. T. ELLIS.

WORK IN NEBRASKA.

KEARNEY, Neb., Sept. 5, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After presenting the question of a Nebraska State convention to the brethren of the Swedish Lutheran conference at Funk, and at the U. P. Synod here, it has been decided to hold the Nebraska State convention at Wahoo, Oct. 18 and 19. In addition to those mentioned last week who have promised to make addresses, we have engaged Prof. S. M. Hill, principal of the Luther Academy at Wahoo, who will present the issue with Jesuitry, and also Rev. John M. French of the First U. P. church, Omaha, who will make an address. The issue with the Jesuits is an exciting question in Omaha and other large cities of the State. The American Protective Association is being organized extensively over the State to resist their encroachments. It is a secret order, and is enlisting the masses in the Protestant churches. In Council Bluffs they have been compelled to guard halls in which they have held their meetings. There is great danger of an open conflict between these orders in the near future.

I was much encouraged by the Swedish Lutheran conference at Funk. After my half-hour's address, these devoted pastors came forward and invited me to visit and lecture in the churches, and eight of them gave me their subscriptions for the Cynosure. I was quite favorably impressed with the sincere devotion and simple faith of these Swedish Christians. Their service is conducted in the Swedish language, and they use mostly the Psalms of David in praise, singing some of the old familiar tunes of the Scottish Covenanters; indeed, if it were not for the strange language, you would think yourself in a Covenantant congregation. Their ministers are well educated, noble looking men, who speak out on reform questions with the courage of strong conviction. Their church bears the impress of being born in the great Reformation. There is a reverence and devotion characterizing their service which contrasts strongly with that of many American churches.

The U. P. Synod here will adjourn this evening. I hope for an opportunity to present the cause before them to-day. Dr. H. P. McClurkin is here, who in former years figured prominently in reform conventions. He still speaks out with his old-time fervor when reform issues are up for discussion.

I occupied the pulpits in two of the churches here yesterday, but was warned by both pastors not to introduce the subject of anti-secrecy. I made good use, however, of my tracts at the

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROFIT-SHARING AS A SOLUTION OF THE LABOR PROBLEM.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 23, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As the labor question, evangelistic work and social purity are three of the most important departments of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I hope for the sake of this philanthropic body of women you will give space to this little article.

The Carnegie troubles with the laboring men have brought the labor problem to the front in the minds of all. The only solution lies in the divinely-given Golden Rule, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also unto them." This has been strikingly illustrated by the millionaire merchant prince and evangelist, Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, who has taken into partnership five of the heads of departments in his great wholesale house in New York, pronounced by the New York Times "probably the largest in the world." The New York press is full of praise for this notable deed. The New York Herald says: "On its face the transaction was simply the reorganization of the house of Charles N. Crittenton as an incorporated company."

As a matter of fact it was a voluntary surrender by Mr. Crittenton of a considerable interest in his very prosperous business to five of his old employees. Many employers have adopted one means or another of making their employees sharers in the profits of their business and thereby securing their hearty co-operation. But the voluntary transfer by a man of large means of a large interest in his business to his employees without the payment of a penny, is unique.

Edward G. Wells, third vice-president of the company, says: "It is capitalized at $800,000, Mr. Crittenton having turned into it every dollar's worth of assets of the house of Charles N. Crittenton, of which he was the sole owner. The stock is all taken, being held by Mr. Crittenton, Messrs. Alfred B. Kennedy, William A. Demarst, Franklin B. Waterman, Thomas E. Delano and myself. Mr. Crittenton is president of the company."

"All of the men who have been taken into the company are old employees, the youngest of the five in point of service being myself, with a record of thirteen years in Mr. Crittenton's employ. Mr. Kennedy, who is the buyer for the house, has served twenty-six years; Mr. Demarst, the head of the retail department, twenty years; Mr. Delano, the general manager, twenty-eight years, and Mr. Waterman, who runs our advertising department, sixteen years. Others may be taken in."

"I presume that we were selected on account of our long service and thorough familiarity with every detail of the business of the house, but I should not be surprised if some other old employees were taken into the company later."

Mr. Crittenton is himself devoting his entire time to evangelistic work and his fortune to founding Florence Crittenton Missions for the rescue of erring girls. The story of their founding touches all hearts to tenderness and all eyes to tears. A few years since his little 4-year-old Florence, on her dying bed pleaded, "Papa, sing 'The Sweet Bye and Bye.'" With choking voice and breaking heart her father sang the beautiful words and her beloved spirit floated heavenward on the wings of song. Though the Bye and Bye might be sweet, the present without his darling seemed so overwhelmingly dreary that he did not care to live. But in his sorrow the Saviour, who had taken the little child in his bosom, brought comfort to his bleeding heart and he found strangely true the words of Christ, "My peace I give unto you."

Then he began to prove that he was indeed a follower of the lowly Nazarene who forever dignified labor by being himself a carpenter, who in the midst of his toil uttered these royal words, which would forever settle all strife between capital and labor, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another."

Mr. Crittenton was so full of love that he went down into the slums and helped to uplift the fallen; and one night when he was pleading with a poor erring girl to leave her life of shame, he said in the words of Christ, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more." Through her tears she said, "Where can I go?" Quick as a flash came the thought, "Where can she go?" Scarce a door save a door of sin is open to her; and then and there he determined as a memorial to his own little Florence to found a home where other fathers' little girls lost in the whirlpool of shame might be rescued and restored to a life of virtue. So at 21-23 Bleeker street, New York, nine years ago, was opened the First Florence Crittenton Mission, a large double four-story house, where food and shelter and clothing and a home are freely given; and under the influence of Mother Prindle, the W. C. T. U. matron, hundreds become Christian women. Over five hundred girls annually find a home here and three-fourths of them are redeemed.

Mr. Crittenton has also established Florence Crittenton Missions in New Brunswick, N. J., San Jose, Sacramento, Los Angeles and San Francisco, California. The latter was formerly known as "The Pacific Rescue Home," successfully carried on by a number of philanthropic people, but since Mr. Crittenton has become its president the name of his darling child has been given to it.

These missions represent an investment of nearly a quarter of a million dollars, while his private charities foot up nearly as much more. It is the dream of his life to found a Florence Crittenton Mission in every large city in America and Europe, and plans to that end are made with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, under the leadership of Miss Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset.

As an evangelist, Mr. Crittenton is wonderfully blessed of God, thousands having started heavenward under his loving ministrations. He gives his services freely, and though himself an Episcopalian, being an officer of Holy Trinity church, Harlem, New York, he is perfectly at home in pulpits of all denominations, where he is warmly welcomed by the pastors. Perhaps the one distinguishing characteristic is the universal love he inspires in all hearts, which make many think as a little child said, "Mamma, don't you think Jesus when he was on earth must have been like Mr. Crittenton?" Fraternally,

HORRIBLE MASONIC BLASPHEMY.

SEYMOUR LAKE, Mich., 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—When God called me out of the Masonic lodge, he let light shine on the Masonic obligation.

The question is asked: "Where were you first made a Mason?" Ans.: "In my heart." "What made you a Mason?" Ans.: "My obligation."

The light shines on the last part of the obligation with such power that it is evident that the gates of heaven must be closed against any adhering Mason. The readers of the Cynosure may ask why? My answer is: It is blasphemy against God. The question may be asked: How do you make that out? The last part of the obligation reads or says: "All of this I promise, or swear—so help me God!" Calling on God to help me to keep this terrible oath! calling on God to help me commit murder, when he says, Thou shalt not kill! What did I do but commit blasphemy when I took this terrible obligation? Compare the Masonic obligations with God's Word, and see how they clash.

Oh, ye Masonic preachers, how the devil has blinded your eyes and stopped your ears! I wonder not that you have lost God out of your hearts. Surely, Satan is blinding the world through secretism!

My prayer to God is that he will keep the National Christian Association pure and in the narrow road to heaven. Yours in Christ,

D. BENJAMIN.

A VISIT TO EASTERN NEW YORK.

WEST HEBRON, N. Y., Sept. 5, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It has been our privilege to visit West Hebron, N. Y., this week. We came over the Fitchburg Railroad, and passed through the Hoosac tunnel. This tunnel is $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles long and cost \$15,000,000. It was begun in 1851. In 1862 the State of Massachusetts took charge of the work, and completed it in 1867. They pierced the mountain from each side; first used powder; then dynamite, and when that failed, glycerine. The calculations of the engineer were so accurate that the two shafts met in the centre of the mountain, not one-half inch out of range. This was the greatest triumph of the age.

It was followed by the Mount Ceniz tunnel, connecting France and Italy by rail, in 1871. This tunnel is seven miles, $4\frac{1}{4}$ furlongs in length. Others followed.

With high mountains tunneled, great rivers bridged, and oceans traversed by floating cities, this world has become one small neighborhood. There are no hermit nations. All can hear the Gospel.

West Hebron is twenty miles east of the Hudson, and south of Lake George. The county in which it is located is the grant of the Duke of Argyle to the Scotch seceders who came here in 1764. They were followed by Associate Reformed Presbyterians. In 1858 these two bodies were united. There are now in this county twelve large and flourishing United Presbyterian congregations.

The country is broken. From a high hill I could see the Green mountains of Vermont on the east, the Adirondacks beyond the Hudson on the west, lakes and rivers, hills covered with pines, gardens in the valleys—a scene quite as enchanting as that upon which Moses looked from Pisgah's summit.

The Reformed Presbyterian congregation of West Hebron is small but strong. Their pastor, Rev. T. A. Rusk, is doing good service. The United Presbyterian congregation of this place celebrated its centennial two years ago. The United Presbyterian congregation of Argyle celebrated its one-hundredth anniversary last Wednesday. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Turnbull, gave a sketch of its history. These thirteen Psalm-singing congregations in Washington county make this a model after which we expect all the counties of all the States to pattern when the great reformation shall have been accomplished. We received much encouragement and strength in mingling with this lion-hearted people.

Stedman; Out of Pompeii, by William W. Campbell; Pioneer Pack Horses in Alaska, by E. J. Glave; Christopher Columbus (continued), by Emilio Castelar; Columbia's Emblem, by Edna Dean Proctor; Claude Monet, by Theodore Robinson; Two Poems, by Anne R. Aldrich; The Chosen Valley (continued), by Mary Hallock Foote; Herbert Mapes (obituary), by Robert U. Edwards; A Mountain Europa, by John Fox, Jr.; A Bachelor's Counselings, by Richard M. Johnson; Phyllida's Mourning, by Grace W. Conant. The conventional departments of Topics of the Times, Open Letters, and In Lighter Vein, are replete with minor articles of considerable interest. New York: The Century Co., 33 East 17th street.

American Gardening for September is an able representative of the higher possibilities of fruit, vegetable, floral and arbaceous culture, beautifully printed and illustrated, and presenting a fine variety, as follows: Some Attractive Native Plants, by L. H. Bailey; Notes on American Wild Flowers, by W. A. Brotherton; Our Native Orchids, by Frances Wilson; Washington Park, by E. A. Long; An Ideal English Garden, by Lilian Chauter; The Economic Plants of Japan, by C. C. Georgeson; A Talk on Road-Making, by George Troop; Taste and Tact in Arranging Ornamental Grounds, by E. A. Long; This Year's Floral Fashions, by Emily Louise Taplin; Prospects and Problems for the Grape-Grower, by Nott Vineyardists; Grape-vines from Grafts and Cuttings, by S. Miller; Seasonable Observations at Woodbanks, Editorial Notes; A Strawberry Aftermath, by a Number of Specialists; Field Notes, by L. B. Pierce; Celery-Growing in Florida, by Stephen Power; Subtropical Plants for Winter, by James MacPherson; Practical Notes on Pansy-Growing, by David B. Woodbury; The Lilies of the Field, Emily Louise Taplin; One Bouquet a Day, by L. Greenlee; Buds, Blossoms, Fruits; Comments by Readers; Dictionary of Seasonable Garden Work; Current Garden Lore; Light from the Societies; Questions Asked and Answered. The Rural Publishing Co., Times Building, New York.

The September installment of the Cup-Bearer is a choice specimen of a child's magazine; and although it is edited, printed and published in the "windy city" of Chicago, is, in its unpretentious way, the worthy rival of older and more popular periodicals in the same line. The visit to Gunther's candy-store and rare antiquities, by the editor, is a charming description of one of the notable resorts of Chicago; and, with the dozen other attractions which it contains, the entire number amply commends itself to the numerous class for whose delight and instruction it is prepared. The New Era Publishing Co., 358 Burling street, Chicago.

Our Animal Friends, published by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (New York: 10 East 22d street) ought to be a regular visitant in every home. It is a grand instructor in the methods of treating domestic and other animals with kindness and proper care. There is often too much thoughtlessness and neglect in looking after the comfort of even our cherished pets.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES.

Please notice that this is the ONLY Commentary upon the whole Bible published at a moderate price. It is, therefore, within reach of everyone, while no Commentary published is so highly commended or so well adapted for the home, the teacher or the preacher, when a practical, concise, critical and spiritual work is desired.

In the critical Biblical literature of the century, few books have been so unqualifiedly indorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in Biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work, in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In extra fine English Cloth, sprinkled edges, the full set (4 vols.), - - - $8.00.
In Half Morocco, the full set (4 vols.), - - - 10.00.

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments by Jamieson, Fausset and Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rt. Rev. J. H. VINCENT, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Bishop Vincent in placing this Commentary in the first rank of all Biblical aids.

We present this work to our Christian readers with the conviction that it will be welcomed as a most valuable addition to the Biblical literature of the day, and will be found to possess

ADVANTAGES OVER ANY OTHER SIMILAR WORK, IN THE FOLLOWING IMPORTANT PARTICULARS:

1st. Its Thoroughness. This Commentary is not written by one writer only, as is the case with Clark, Henry, Scott, and others, but by three of the ablest scholars of the present day, and these have quoted extensively from the works of no less than one hundred and fifty of the most eminent Biblical writers of the present and the past.

2d. Its Modernness. New light is continually being thrown upon the Scriptures by the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shone, by investigation in science, the expository labors of scholars and critics, and the discovery and deciphering of ancient inscriptions, monuments, and manuscripts, thus rendering the commentaries of former days comparatively useless.

3d. Its Compactness. The text and the comments are not printed in separate parts, as is usually the case, but are intermingled, so as to form one continuous history. There are no blank spaces, nor is the book filled up with unnecessary portions of the text. It is what it purports to be—a Commentary—not a Bible. "It is literally packed," says Bishop Wiley, "full of good things."

4th. Its Brevity. Dr. Smith, editor Chicago Standard, says: "I have, in several instances, seen a sermon in a sentence."

5th. Its Liberal Spirit. It is more unsectarian than any other Commentary. "The names of the authors are a sufficient guaranty against any denominational traits in it." These authors are each of a different denomination. The hearty recommendation of the leading men of all denominations gives this still greater emphasis.

6th. Its Scripture References. These are more numerous than will be found in any Commentary extant. Parallel passages are given wherever they are needed. Scripture is thus explained by Scripture, and the Commentary will thus be found to answer the purpose of a Concordance to a very great extent.

7th. Its Illustrations and Maps. These are sufficiently numerous to decidedly enhance its value and attractiveness; while the great majority of Commentaries have no illustrations.

8th. Its Cheapness. No Commentary of its size and merit was ever sold for anything like the price.

CHARLES P. SUMNER, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL was the intimate friend and biographer of Washington, and was himself a Freemason in his youth. Marshall left the lodge in 1793. He had then for some sixteen years been acquainted with Washington, who died six years later. Marshall wrote to Hon. John Bailey from Richmond, Oct. 18, 1833, of Washington and Freemasonry: "I do not recollect ever to have heard him utter a syllable on the subject."

TESTIMONIALS

Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., Giving in "No. 1 of Chautauqua Text-books" a list of "Aids to Bible Study," says: "The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown."

Rev. Edwards A. Park, D. D., Andover Theo. Sem. I have been more and more pleased with the Commentary of Jamieson, Fausset & Brown, the more I have read of it. I can cheerfully recommend it.

Rev. Joseph Cummings, D. D., LL. D., Prest. N. W. Univ. My first impression on the great merits of your Commentary have been confirmed upon further examination.

Rev. Philip Schaff, D. D., Union Theo. Sem., New York. I do not hesitate to recommend it to English Bible readers as a sound, judicious, devout, and—considering the size—comprehensive exposition of the Word of God.

Rt. Rev. Thomas M. Clark, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island. It must be of immense practical value to all students of the Bible, and especially to Sunday-school teachers.

Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., late Prest. of Bangor Theo. Sem. I have looked over the Critical, Explanatory and Practical Commentary, and have formed a highly favorable opinion of its contents; it is sound and evangelical throughout, a safe instructor to those who commit themselves to its teaching.

Rev. James McCosh, D. D., President Princeton College. It is the work of highly competent scholars, who have succeeded in bringing out the mind of the spirit as revealed in the Scriptures. It is clear, brief, judicious, and eminently fitted to be useful alike to pastor and people.

Rev. J. N. Murdock, D. D., Sec'y Am. Baptist Miss. Union. I know of no work that throws so much light on the Scriptures, gathered from many sources, and condensed into so small a space.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, London, England. I think it is the best Commentary upon the whole Bible which has been issued within the last fifty years, and I should be very sorry to be deprived of the pleasure of consulting it.

Rev. Norman Macleod, D. D. The most practical, suggestive, orthodox, and scientific Commentary which has ever been published in this country.

Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Editor S. S. Times. A comprehensive Commentary on the entire Bible, at a moderate cost, has been long desired by American School-teachers. I think that the work you now offer is admirably suited to meet that want. I do not know of its equal, within its scope and cost, and I believe it will have, as it merits, a very wide circulation, and will do great good.

Rev. Joseph F. Tuttle, D. D., President Wabash College. It is a noble work that ought to be placed on a hundred thousand shelves in this country.

Rev. Stuart Robinson, D. D., Louisville, Kentucky. Having for more than twenty years been myself engaged in the popular exposition of the Scriptures from the pulpit, every Sabbath evening—and, of course availing myself of all the aids within my reach—I have met with none among them which so well accomplishes the great end of a popular exposition—viz.: to show the people, in the fewest words, how to read the Bible for themselves—as the very comprehensive Commentary of Jamieson, Fausset & Brown.

Rev. James B. Angell, D. D., LL. D., Prest. Univ. of Mich. I am acquainted with no Commentary of such conciseness which is so likely to prove satisfactory and helpful to American Christians.

Prof. Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D. Prest. Dartmouth College. An admirable companion for the Sabbath-school teacher, for heads of families, and for daily readers of the Bible, and inferior to no work of the kind and compass with which I am acquainted.

The present edition of this excellent work deserves, and undoubtedly will receive, a large circulation among families and students of the Scriptures who wish to learn what God has revealed and taught. Aside from the Bible itself, they can go to no better source of instruction.—Interior, Chicago.

The unqualified commendations of this Commentary, from the highest sources, together with its already extensive and rapidly increasing sale, have given it a position in the religious world superior to that of any similar work, and prove conclusively that it will soon be universally adopted by Sabbath-school teachers and Bible readers generally, to whom its uses has now become indispensable.

Address, NAT'L. CHRISTIAN ASS'N.,
221 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

THURLOW WEED: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, to Friends in 1794, Quoted by Myron Holley: "The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice, in a Letter to Edward Everett, July 22, 1833, said of Freemasonry: "That the institution ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

HON. SAMUEL DEXTER, in an Open Letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

JOHN MARSHALL: "I never did utter the words ascribed to me, nor any other words importing the sentiment they convey. I never did say, 'Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected.' The fact mentioned in the resolution, that I have been in a lodge but once, so far as I can recollect, for nearly forty years, is evidence that I have no disposition to volunteer in this controversy, as the zealous partisan which this language would indicate."—Letter to Hon. John Bailey, Oct. 18, 1833.

GOVERNOR RITNER, in response to a communication from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, prepared a vindication of General Washington from the stigma of adherence to secret societies, in which he proves from authentic documents:

1. That in 1768 Washington had ceased regular attendance on the lodge.
2. That in 1798, shortly before his death, his opinions were the same as thirty years before when thirty-six years old.
3. That he was never "Grand Master" or "Master" of any particular lodge.
4. That in 1781, as appears by the record of King David's lodge, Newport, Rhode Island, it was not agreeable to Washington to be addressed even as a private Mason.
5. That all the letters said to be written by Washington to lodges are spurious.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Speech in the Senate: "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment to their judgments, and my own conscience to their keeping! No. No, sir. I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

THANKS TO WASHINGTON.—Edward Livingston was the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States and the great Masonic champion of his day, and Andrew Jackson was also a high Mason. In view of Washington's non-affiliation and his farewell address there can be little doubt that General Jackson and Edward Livingston considered Washington a seceded Mason. The following is an article published in 1830 in the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, which is an evidence of striking import:

"Who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington?—When General Washington retired to private life, Congress passed resolutions giving thanks to this great man. Only three men were found in Congress at that day, that voted against these resolutions. One of these three is now dead, and we do not wish to disturb his ashes. The grave should cover the foibles of all men. But there are two men now alive, whose names are on the journals of Congress, denying the poor pittance of a vote of thanks to Gen. Washington. We ask who these two men are."

"We have asked this question without expecting an answer from those to whom it is addressed. But there is no reason why our readers should not be gratified with the fact. Let the journals of Congress reply—'They are Andrew Jackson and Edward Livingston!'"

Never let the most wary commander fancy himself secure from discovery: for rocks have eyes, and trees have ears, and the birds of the air have tongues, to betray the most secret enterprise.—WASHINGTON IRVING.

ALL ABOARD AT JAFFA FOR JERUSALEM.

The passage of the first through train on the railroad from Jaffa (the ancient Joppa) to Jerusalem, on the 29th of August ult., marks an era in the history of Palestine and the world.

There was nothing very strange in the construction of thirty or forty miles of iron track even in the slow-moving Turkish Empire. The strangeness is in the long neglect to build it.

Four hundred years ago the condition of Palestine was not materially different from what it was fifty years ago. Turkish rule has not been prolific of progress, and the influences of Christian governments have been too conflicting to exert any permanent effect. The two-fold curse of barrenness and of bad government have kept this ancient home of the Jews (Palestine) from being anything but a desirable land, except for the nomadic tribes that have roamed among its mountains and valleys. Meanwhile, America has been discovered and explored, almost filled with people, and in many places covered with a perfect network of railways. The shores of the Great Salt Lake, in the heart of the American continent, were to resound with echoes of the locomotive long before those of the older Dead Sea of Palestine.

But the tide of civilization that has been tending westward during all these centuries now begins its reflow towards the East. Egypt has felt its influence, and better government and greater prosperity have been brought to her people. The whole Turkish Empire feels that if civil rule is to be prolonged there must be at least an attempt at good order and public security. The interest which the entire Christian world has in the sacred places of Palestine, the constantly increasing number of travelers to that land, the great unrest of the Jewish people in all parts of the world, but especially in Russia, have fixed attention on Palestine, and demanded its rehabilitation. Now, one hour from Jaffa to Jerusalem, at a cost of two dollars, takes the place of a dangerous and tiresome horseback journey, at large expense, and with wearisome delays.

The fertile valley of Esdraelon is now brought into close contact with excellent markets. The Bedouin freebooter will find his occupation gone when he confronts the locomotive; and under reviving industries there will be an encouragement for better local government.

Above all, the Hebrew can hardly fail to see that the land of his fathers is the land not simply of the past, but of the future, and of that wonderful promise recorded in Ezekiel 37: 21-27: "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people."

THE NUMBER OF SECRET ORDERS.

A correspondent recently requested us to print the number of secret lodges and their membership in the United States. The task is not an easy one; but from statistics and estimates, for the year 1891, we gather the following suggestive figures, which are so far official that they can be relied upon.

Besides the purely "fraternal" and ostensibly "benevolent" orders, there are the Orangemen and the so-called "patriotic" orders opposed to Romanism. Of these we have no account.

Mr. O. M. Shedd, Secretary of the "National Fraternal Congress," furnishes the following statement in detail, as printed in the American Legion of Honor Journal for September, 1892. The Journal is published at 20 Beacon street, Boston, Mass. Mr. Shedd's summary does not include Freemasons, Odd-fellows, labor unions, or the orders mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Ancient Order of United Workmen, Knights of Honor, American Legion of Honor, Royal Arcanum, Knights and Ladies of Honor, Knights of Pythias, Order of Chosen Friends, Order of United Friends, Senate National Union, Equitable Aid Union, Knights of Maccabees, Royal Templars of Temperance, Knights of the Golden Rule, Supreme Council Home Circle, Supreme Lodge of Mutual Protection, Fraternal Mystic Circle, Royal Society of Good Fellows, Supreme Camp Fraternal Legion, Improved Order of Heftasophs, Northern Mutual Relief Associations, United Order of Pilgrim Fathers, Protected Home Circle, Artisans' Order of Mutual Protection, Iowa Legion of Honor, Independent Order of Foresters, Order of Golden Chain, Knights of St. John and Malta, Modern Woodmen of America, United Order of Golden Cross, Legion of the Red Cross, Modern Woodmen of the World, United Friends of Michigan, Ancient Order of Foresters of America, New England Order of Protection, National Provident Union, Legion of Justice, Empire Knights of Relief, Royal Conclave Knights and Ladies, Free Sons of Israel, B'nai Berith (Dis. 1), Catholic Benevolent Legion, Catholic Knights of America, Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, Golden Star Fraternity, Empire Order Mutual Aid, National Benevolent Legion, Order of Scottish Clans, Knights of the Golden Eagle, Order of Canadian Home Circles. These forty-nine societies (with the exception of the Legion of Red Cross, which furnished no report for 1891), showed a total membership of 2,606,097, and paid total benefits of $26,894,793.95. Their total receipts from all sources were $28,377,234.62, and their total payments on losses and expenses were $27,506,546.59. The foregoing list does not include the "Iron Hall," which is just now running the gauntlet of public opinion and the courts, relative to the character of its purposes and methods.

The Philadelphia Ledger furnishes these figures of organized labor: American Federation of Labor, 588,617; Knights of Labor, 300,000; independent bodies, 108,000; total, 996,617.

The Freemasons in this country, it is stated, number 600,000 and the Odd-fellows about as many more. The Good Templars and Rechabites are not brought into the statement, and many others, undoubtedly, exist but are not reckoned in the account. The total membership of all must reach nearly or quite 5,500,000.

As a sufficient commentary on this showing, we quote from a paper written by a high-degree Mason: "While the names, rituals, etc., of these many organizations differ, the principle is the same. You cannot condemn one and justify any other. Even a secret temperance society involves the essential principles of Freemasonry, and one who is a faithful member of the one cannot be a consistent enemy of the other." "We who are more conversant with the order know that the Mason's lodge is non-Christian, and even anti-Christian. No Christian has any business with the titles and regalia they use; the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is humble, serving and aspires to be useful to others, while Masonry is proud, vain and loves display. The higher in the order a man stands, the more vain titles, the more decorations, feathers and collars he is entitled to wear. What a heaven of a 'Grand Lodge above' he must expect!"

CHURCH VS. LODGE.

"Nearly every paper, from the days of Martin Luther to the present time, has denounced Freemasonry, either by a bull, encyclical, or some other demonstration. What good have these tirades done? Masonry is stronger to-day than it ever was. The time is past when the word of a pope can shake the tiled walls of the Masonic fraternity."—N. Y. Sunday Times.

"Bishop Hennessy has informed a correspondent of his that 'the Catholic church does not allow its members to join the Knights of Pythias, or any other secret society.' And Bishop Cosgrove says that 'according to decree 247 of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore that society is to be numbered under the forbidden societies, and consequently no Catholic can join or belong to it.'"—Catholic Review.

The "any other secret society" is a phrase too sweeping in its identification of secret orders.

Where do the Jesuits, the Clan-na-Gael, United Irishmen, Catholic Order of Foresters, and Hibernians come in? And yet the Catholic church has no plea against them. Strange, is it? Not at all. They are members of the Catholic church and bow to its authority. The Masons and Knights of Pythias do not.

EXPOSITION POETRY.

The closing stanza of Prof. John K. Paine's "Columbian March and Chorus," to be performed at the dedication of the Exposition buildings at Jackson Park, next month, is as follows:

"All hail and welcome nations of the earth!
Columbia's greeting comes from every State.
Proclaim to all mankind the world's new birth
Of freedom, age on age shall consecrate.
Let war and enmity forever cease,
Let glorious art and commerce banish wrong.
The universal brotherhood of peace
Shall be Columbia's high, inspiring song."

What we would like to know, Is God in it? If not, we prefer the older couplet:

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow;
Praise him, all creatures here below."

Really, we would like to know what is meant by "the world's new birth of freedom," and what is the use of trying to unite all nations in "the brotherhood of peace" without the aid of Christianity? Will some one, not a pagan, tell us.

ALLEGED MURDER BY THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

A dispatch to the press, from Topeka, Kan., Sept. 1, reports that the Farmers' Alliance in Center township, Chautauqua county, that State, has the charge of murder placed at its doors. It is alleged that the plot was there formulated for the murder of John T. Frazier in 1890. Frank Kimsey and Jerry Hutton, two of the leaders, have been arrested, and warrants are out for every member. Frazier was a wealthy Texas cattleman, who, with his partner Gibson, drove large herds of cattle into the county to pasture. At that time there was a scare among the farmers about Texas fever raging among the herds. Objections were made because Frazier and Gibson had brought their cattle there, and the Farmers' Alliances throughout the country adopted resolutions condemning them. The cattlemen refused to take their stock away, and Gibson was poisoned. A short time afterward Frazier's mutilated body was found in a marsh.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

On Wednesday morning of last week, at Hampton Falls, N. H., the poet and friend of humanity, John Greenleaf Whittier, passed from time to eternity, beloved, honored and admired for his manly virtues as well as his poetic genius. Sprung from humble New England parentage, he first saw the light in 1807.

Raised upon a farm, with scant opportunities for obtaining an education, by making shoes he earned sufficient money to pay for his tuition at the Haverhill Academy during a term of six months. Then he taught the district school long enough to pay for another term at the Academy.

June 1, 1826, he submitted his first poem to William Lloyd Garrison, editor of the Free Press. It was received with marked favor; and from that day the great Abolitionist and the poet became firm friends.

Three years later Whittier assumed the editorship of the American Manufacturer, at Boston; the following year he succeeded Geo. D. Prentice as editor of the Haverhill Gazette. Subsequently, for a brief term, he edited the Hartford New England Weekly Review; but in 1832 failing health compelled him to relinquish journalism, and for several years, his father dying, he conducted the home farm. In 1835-6 he served in the only public office that he ever filled—a representative in the Massachusetts Legislature.

Then and onward he was an ardent Abolitionist—the poet of freedom, the Secretary of the American Anti-Slavery Society. All through his earlier writings the spirit of the despised party to which he belonged was eminent, and not until the exigencies of civil warfare brought slavery to a sudden close did he cease to labor for its extinction.

Such was Whittier, the record of whose life is his best epitaph. Human praise can add little to the exaltation of the dead poet. He sleeps the sleep of the just and pure patriot; and his memory is blessed to all his posterity.

—Rev. L. G. Jordan, who first came to us from Texas years ago, and has since proved himself a live worker in reforms, is now preaching in Philadelphia, his residence being in the Williamsport suburb. He finds some of the pastors about him earnestly opposed to the lodge.

—Miss Frances E. Willard tells us, in the Union Signal, why she is a prohibitionist. If she had not done so, we should have said that it was because she couldn't help it. She is that sort of a woman who would be a prohibitionist if she was a man, and not being a man, like a sensible woman, she is a prohibitionist anyway.

—A good practical Commentary on the Bible, and one that has achieved an enviable popularity, is that of Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, which is advertised on the seventh page of this paper. Bishop Vincent, of the M. E. church, pronounces it "the best condensed commentary on the whole Bible." It is eminently designed for a profitable study of the Scriptures, and its price is very reasonable.

—Parties in search of sound evangelical books relating to Christian evidences, Bible readings, young men's helps, work among children, prophecy, missionary labors, biographies, comfort and consolation, commentaries, etc., are requested to send to this office for the "Condensed, Classified Catalogue of the National Christian Association," which will be sent free on application. It contains descriptive titles of hundreds of useful and instructive books, with their respective prices.

—In the annual convention of the American Bankers' Association, at San Francisco, last week, the report of the executive council recommended the adoption of a resolution favoring the doing away by all bankers of the customary three days' grace on all notes. The recommendation provoked a lively debate, but was finally adopted. When this action was referred to Chicago bankers, they indorsed it, but it was pronounced "impracticable." This feature may disappear when the measure is put into actual operation.

close. I spoke for an hour, last Wednesday, at the W. C. T. U. convention in Thayer county. It was a beautiful day, and we met in the grove near Rufus Park. They have the strongest W. C. T. U. in the district, led by Mrs. Park, who has Scotch Covenanter blood in her veins, and with her husband and family is at the front in the most radical reform work.

The pastors from the surrounding towns were present and a good audience from the country around. The platform was of good seasoned oak, and from it I was permitted to speak freely on the anti-secret issue. M. A. GAULT.

THE CANBY ANTI-SECRECY AND PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

This part of Oregon is the first oasis I have found in this Sahara of secrecy—the Pacific Coast. The sacred fire from heaven having died out upon the altars of some of the anti-secrecy churches, the strange fires of a strange god have been kindled by idolatrous priests in the very shrines of Jehovah. Incense now goes up to Baal where once incense of prayer, of praise, and of service went up to God. How strange it is that so few of those who have not bowed the knee to Baal themselves never succeed in finding the hole in the wall which Ezekiel describes in the vision which God carried him five hundred miles by the hair of the head in order that he might show it to him! But there are those, and some of them preachers of the Gospel, who are so blind to these things that they would become bald-headed before they would make any discovery. But, thank God, there are not only some individuals, but some churches in this part of Oregon which see the evils of secrecy and enter an earnest protest against it. The radical wing of the United Brethren and the Free Methodist churches have more strength here than anywhere else on this coast. The Friends, also, have some strong colonies in northern Oregon, but they are ignoring one of their ancient landmarks, their rule against the admission of persons who are members of secret oath-bound societies.

The time chosen for the conference was opportune. It was the same week in which the Oregon Conference of the M. E. church met in Portland, presided over by Bishop Walden, who within the last year placed himself on record for the thirty-third time as a worshiper of the false Christ of Freemasonry, Hiram Abiff. After learning this fact, Father Matthew, the originator of this convention, an aged Methodist Episcopal preacher, wrote to Bishop Walden, expressing his surprise and sorrow; but the only answer Mr. Walden condescended to make was in the form of a Knight Templar Easter service. But can it be possible that the learned D.D. and LL. D. does not know that the Christ of Knight Templarism is the Christ of the Blue Lodge, who is not the Christ of the Gospels, but one of the many anti-Christes which have gone out into the world? Mackey, in his "Jurisprudence of Masonry," says, under Landmark Third, page 19: "The legend of the third degree is an important landmark, the integrity of which has been well-preserved. There is no rite of Masonry practiced in any country or language in which the essential elements of this legend are not taught. The lectures may vary, and, indeed, are constantly changing, but the legend has ever remained substantially the same. And it is necessary that it should be so, for the legend of the Temple Builder constitutes the very essence and identity of Masonry. Any rite which should exclude it, or materially alter it, would at once, by that exclusion, or alteration, cease to be a Masonic rite." It does seem as though a Methodist bishop ought to know enough about heathen mythology to know when he is submitting to any of its rites. And ought he not to know Christianity well enough to distinguish it from the counterfeit invented by the Jesuit priests of Paris? Verily, if some of these reverend gentlemen master a few more courses of study and get a few more of the letters of the alphabet affixed to their names, they won't know anything. And it may be well to state, in this connection, that this infection seems to be general, especially among the Methodist Episcopal preachers on this coast. "Ascension Day" was duly celebrated by the Knight Templars of Tacoma, the Rev. F. B. Cherrington, pastor of the First M. E. church, taking part. Now, if the legend of the Temple Builder "constitutes the very essence and identity of Masonry," then whose ascension was celebrated, if not that of Hiram Abiff?

HOW AND BY WHOM THIS CONVENTION WAS GOTTEN UP.

It is the result, principally, of one man's work. Rev. S. Matthew, of Canby, who is now more than three-score and ten, has been preaching, praying, writing and distributing tracts against this lodge-religion for some fifteen or twenty years; in this way, together with the work of the anti-secrecy churches here, the foundation was laid for a successful convention. But in order to awaken enthusiasm on this subject, it was necessary to use some extraordinary means. Bro. Matthew saw this, and the Lord having prospered him financially in his old age, he was moved by the Spirit of God to use some of it to inaugurate this work. So, after having circulated copies of a constitution for an auxiliary branch of the N. C. A., and having secured some sixty-five members, he issued a call for a convention.

To show his faith by his works, he offered to pay the traveling and hotel expenses of all who might come as delegates from northwestern Oregon. The result was quite a respectable attendance of both men and women. Up to date, over four hundred members have been secured, thirty-five of whom are preachers, and thirty of whom were at the convention. Father Matthew has been a liberal supporter of foreign missions; but after having watched the encroachments of secret society idolatry in his own denomination for at least a quarter of a century, he is convinced that this anti-secrecy work is more important than even the conversion of the heathen abroad. It is a well-known fact that Christian churches are sending Freemason missionaries to heathen countries, who, instead of getting the heathen converted to Christ, lead the educated, and in some cases converted, heathen into the secret sun-worship of Masonry, the very same religion from which they have been converted.

The president of Bowdoin College, in an article in the Forum, tells the condition of the churches in some parts of Maine. He quotes statistics and the statements of careful observers, to prove that in not a few of the country places the churches have so dwindled as to have on their rolls only the names of a few women, with hardly enough men to do the practical work of a church organization. In one county where there are 6,987 families, 4,850 attend no church; in another county, where there are 7,288 families, 4,577 attend no church; in fifteen counties, which contain 133,445 families, 67,842 families attend no church.

The title of this article is "Impending Paganism in New England." Who will write one on Impending Paganism in the Methodist Episcopal church? The author of the article above referred to attributes this state of the church in Maine to sectarian rivalries; but, while much may be due to this cause, is it not true of these families of Maine that they have accepted of the religion of the lodge in lieu of the religion of Christ?

As the secretary of the convention has no doubt given a detailed report of its proceedings, I will not need to say much about it.

WAS IT A SUCCESS?

The venerable promoter of the enterprise, in his opening address, expressed the wish that all the exercises might be characterized by deep spirituality and the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. There was no note of discord on this point, and the wish was so fully realized as to elicit the remark from many present that it was the most religious convention and the most harmonious that they had ever attended. It was a decided success, religiously, on both days and both lines—that of anti-secrecy, and that of prohibition.

It was a success so far as the discussion of the subject of secrecy was concerned. My own part of the work was not well-done, because of my physical condition; but the others performed their parts in a very creditable manner.

Rev. R. Loggan, of the United Brethren church, read a lengthy and able paper on "The Religion of Freemasonry." He was followed by P. B. Williams in an extempore address which was logical and masterly. During the afternoon and evening a number of short speeches were made, some of which were quite pithy and pointed. One of these was made by a seceding Mason.

THE IMPRESSION MADE

upon the members of the convention and upon the community was profound, and there was quite a stir among the Freemasons and other secret society members in the town. The anti-secrecy sentiment in the churches which are on that line was re-enforced; and there were some from other denominations which will carry the war into Africa.

It was a success, because it made provision for the continuance and enlargement of the work. A committee of seven was appointed to confer with the National Association and secure the services of an agent and lecturer for the coast; and another of three was appointed to secure volunteer lecturers. The following persons were enrolled by the latter committee, viz.: Rev. J. Cripps of Seattle, Wash.; Rev. J. C. Scott of Fremont, Wash.; Rev. P. B. Williams of Portland, Ore.; Rev. R. Loggan of Portland, Ore.; Rev. H. L. Barkley of Woodburn, Ore.; Rev. W. T. Ellis, of Portland, Ore.

The work is to be prosecuted in this State by lectures, sermons, the circulation of literature and by the calling together of anti-secrecy men and women in county conventions.

The leading feature of the prohibition exercises of the convention was two most excellent addresses by Mrs. A. W. Unruh, of McMinnville.

They covered the most important points requiring discussion, and the subjects were presented in an able, lucid and elegant manner. A number of extempore addresses were delivered; and the interest was not only sustained but increased up to the close of the convention. The exercises, both days, were interspersed frequently by the singing of the long-metre Doxology, and will long be remembered because of the manifest presence and power of the Holy Ghost.

Readers of the Cynosure, pray for us that this feature of the work may continue, and that He who holds the keys of David may throw many doors of usefulness wide open before us, in spite of the tylers of the lodges and the churches.

THE HOME.

ABIDE WITH ME.

Stay with me, Jesus, in the light,
When all is calm, and fair, and bright;
Be with me in each glad some hour,
My sun and shield, my safety tower.

Stay with me, Lord, when friends increase,
When all within, around, is peace;
When joys and comforts all abound,
Leaning on thee may I be found.

Stay with me, Lord; in toil, in care,
In pain, in grief, my burden bear;
To-day as yesterday the same,
Immanuel still be thy name.

Stay with me! yea, I know thou wilt,
Who gave thy life, and bore my guilt;
Help me to dwell, O God, in thee,
Thus in thy light to ever be.

LIFE IN A NEW ENGLAND VILLAGE.

Every genuine New England village is like an apple orchard. The trees are all apple trees, and yet there is not one of them that does not insist upon its own individuality, and assert successfully its right to a special character of its own. If its neighbor leans to the north, then it will go to the east or south. At any rate it will be something in and for itself. So, as the crowding file comes towards us through the narrow passage, we catch for every fact its own peculiar traits. That man looks not unlike the city type. He is a rich man, and is always ready to lend money to the poor farmer, taking his farm, his cattle, and his furniture for security. The next one, with the bright blue eyes so full of kindness, the face bronzed and full of lines, every one betraying fun and good humor, is the old stage driver. There is not a man, woman or child within a radius of ten miles whom he does not know, and scarcely a stone on the ten-mile mail route that he does not recognize as an old friend as he drives past twice a day in all weathers. He it is who can manage the most obstinate horse, and make it do his will by dint of native shrewdness and tact. Following him comes a tall, slender, somewhat stooping farmer with the kindly farmer's face. He lives in the delightful old brick house by the side of the stage road, known and respected of all, and the men who hire out to him for the summer think themselves fortunate, for he is "just and kind." Here comes a mechanic—a wheelwright, carpenter, farmer. The sharp, watchful mechanic's eye looks clear ahead, and has no need to lower itself before any man. There are lines of sorrow and lines of care, but when he smiles they all disappear in a glow of sunshine like those that sweep over the landscape in which he has always lived, smoothing out the ridges in their gleam. He is the grave-digger, too, and knows all the resting-places under the grass of the pretty little cemetery, which he cares for as if it was his own garden. The young man behind him in shirt sleeves—"boiled shirt" sleeves—caught up with elastic, is the Democratic candidate. He has run over from the grocery store to cast his vote, presumably for the Republican candidate, as they are very good friends, and as soon as he has got rid of it, runs back again to his business. The next one, tall and dark, the "honest man" who was once sent as representative, has driven four or five miles with "the nicest colt you ever saw," and has just come down from the platform, where he has been helping to count the vote. Following him, a very old man leaning on a stick. We seldom see him except at night when he comes after the cows. There is something touching in the fact that it is always the very old men or the very little boys that go after the cows at night.

It makes one think of what some phrenologist has said that when a baby is born, God sends it into the world with a bare head, so that every one can see just what material, what powers, it has to work with. Then he covers it up with hair and says, "See what you can do with that!" And the child goes on working till, after his work is almost done, God uncovers the head again, that all may see what has been accomplished by the man. So the old man who goes after the cows must often remember how he used to run behind them long years ago, before he had almost "got through," as the people here touchingly say when a man dies. And so they pass farmer after farmer, though almost every man of them is something more than a mere farmer. There is nothing which strikes a city-bred person with more astonishment in the New England villages than the number of things every man can do.—Harper's Magazine for September.

STORY OF GENERAL GRANT.

The Louisville Courier-Journal tells a story of General Grant which it says has not been in print. It shows that the great general had a large heart as well as rare good sense. He must have felt, as every patriotic Northerner would, indignation for the murder of Colonel Ellsworth; but the daughter of the man who committed the deed was in no way responsible for it.

Early in the war the New York Fire Zouaves were a crack regiment commanded by Colonel Ellsworth. Every man in the ranks had been a fireman, and it was confidently believed that Ellsworth's command was able to put down the rebellion without assistance. The colonel was a young man, handsome, gallant, burning with military ardor, and thirsting for military fame. He was as much the idol of the North as Ashby was, a few months later, the idol of the South. The Fire Zouaves were the first troops to march into Alexandria, Va. Their colonel was at their head, and after the town had surrendered Ellsworth saw a rebel flag flying from a hotel.

Instead of ordering a squad to remove it, he bolted into the house, ascended the stairway, went out on the roof, and captured the flag; descending he was confronted by the landlord—one Jackson—who shot him dead. Jackson himself was then shot to death, and the affair created more sensation than considerable battles a few years later. After the war a daughter of Jackson secured an appointment in one of the departments at Washington. She was a modest, diligent, and capable young woman, and discharged her official duties acceptably. In the course of time a superloyal gentleman was put in charge of the bureau in which she worked. He soon discovered the antecedents of the young clerk and discharged her. She was friendless and penniless, and as a last resort went to the White House and called for General Grant. He received her, and she related her story to the silent man. Without saying a word he took a piece of paper and wrote: "The war against men is ended, and my administration shall not begin one against women. Restore Miss Jackson to her former clerkship instantly." This was addressed to the loyal bureau official, and the young lady is yet in the public service.

A MARRIAGE IN MEXICO.

Nine o'clock was the hour appointed for the marriage. Formerly it was customary here for the wealthy to marry at 12 o'clock—midnight; afterwards, as early as 5 or 6 in the morning. This custom has been given up, and a more convenient hour has been fixed.

A few minutes before 9 the church was very well filled. Mrs. Pressly, Miss Boyce, and I were sitting not far from the altar, thinking that it would be a desirable place for both seeing and hearing. As we were awaiting the arrival of the bridal party, our eyes were feasting on the elegant decorations of the church. The main altar of the Virgin was ornamented with white and gilt flowers, which the long burning wax candles made splendid; beautiful vases of flowers were sitting at the feet of many of the saints; the images of the Virgin were robed in pure white. Peter, the fisherman, had exchanged his costly robe of green and brown satin for an equally extravagant one of blue and red. We noticed that every one who entered the door went to an earthen vessel in one corner of the church, and with fingers dripping with the "holy water" made crosses on their foreheads. Even the babe in its mother's arms was taught to dip its fingers in the so-called blessed liquid, and make crosses on its little face.

As the old clock in the steeple chimed the hour, "aqui estan," here they are, was whispered. We then prepared ourselves to get a good view of the bride as she passed up the aisle. Just as we were expecting to see her, four little boys in red flannel passed, followed by the priest with clasped hands, and attired in a robe of white satin, elaborately embroidered with gilt. Before we had fully decided whether we should look before or behind us, the priest was reading the ceremony, while the sweetest strains were pouring from the grand organ. The party had come in very quietly, and stopped just inside the door. We did not see the order in which they entered. When we looked around, the bride and groom were kneeling—their hands joined; the godmother, godfather, father and sister of the bride, and sister of the groom were kneeling around them, and the priest in a plush chair in front of them, reading the vows in a very low voice. We could not hear what was said, but saw the jeweled finger, and the silver chain linking them together. The groom then placed a few coins on a salver which the priest held in his hand.

This we naturally thought was the marriage fee. But the priest, after blessing it, and jingling it for some time, gave it to the bride.

These coins are called "arras," thirteen pieces of money, usually gold, which the bridegroom gives to the bride, as a pledge, in the act of marriage—endowing the bride with all of his worldly possessions.

The organist then played a grand march, while the party, preceded by the priest, with the groom on his right, and the bride on his left, walked up the aisle, and knelt on the plush cushions before the altar of the Virgin. Again the music was soft and sweet. The effect on the stop "vox humana" was quite touching. All the party held long lighted wax candles. In all the storehouse of memory I think I have not a prettier picture than that.

The bride is a beautiful woman of almost pure Spanish type, a full round face, soft black hair, large, expressive brown eyes, complexion just tinged with the hue of olive, and a graceful figure. She was dressed in pure white—the only color being the little green sprays in the garland of orange blossoms around her shoulders. Her dress was of handsome satin made with a very long train, over which her delicate veil lay in soft folds. She held in her hand a bouquet of the loveliest flowers. The groom usually pays for the bride's trousseau. The groom wore a full dress suit of black goods, white kid gloves, and gold spectacles. They knelt about an hour, while the priest was reading, chanting and praying in Latin, and fuming the air with incense.

The latter was the most impressive feature of the service; and we thought of the prayer filled with the fire of holy love and fervor, which the "sweet singer" asks "may be set forth before thee as incense."

After the priest had blessed the happy couple, he accompanied them to the door, each of them holding his robe. They both kissed his hand; and went to the house of the bride's father, where the civil marriage was performed. They had followed the Spanish proverb, "Before you marry, have where to tarry," and are now in their own home in San Luis Potosi.—Macie Stevenson, in Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

DANGEROUS NEGLIGENCE.

Every one knows, in a general way, how fatal habits of carelessness may prove. Yet few mothers—we say mothers, because the training of the young is mainly in their hands—are sufficiently impressed with the importance of vigorously training their children to habits of carefulness.

An old Latin proverb said, "The mothers of the timid seldom weep." We do not wish children trained to timidity, but to thoughtfulness—to considering the probable consequences of their conduct. Certainly, in the transition period from childhood to youth, the formation of right habits in this respect can be begun.

"I didn't think," should not be a full excuse for many little misdeeds, or for a costly piece of carelessness.

If the habit of negligence is once formed, it will assert itself through life—possibly in a disastrous way. If a habit of carefulness is formed, it will be a life-long benefit—probably beyond all that its possessor may realize.

Stagings are constantly giving way, resulting in death or broken bones, because those who put them up were careless in their construction. A friend of ours, a retired housebuilder, never had an accident of the kind during his long life. He had formed the habit of assuring himself that every stick of timber and every nail was sound, and that every nail was well driven home.

A gentleman who had gone to watch with a sick friend opened a door which led to the cellar, but from which the stairs had been removed. He fell and was killed. What a wicked neglect to have such a door unbarred in the front hall!

A mother stepped out for a moment, leaving a tub of boiling water on the floor and a young child in the room. She was detained somewhat, and returned to find her child scalded to death.

At a camp-ground last summer a lady intending to do some ironing filled her stove with wood and went to a neighbor's while the irons were heating. The stove door opened, coals fell out, the cottage and several others were burned, and the utmost exertions barely saved from destruction all the other cottages and public buildings, with many grand and priceless trees.

A physician left his horse and buggy in a lane a short distance from his patient's house, where he thought he could see them from the window. The horse was well-broken, kind, tractable, and accustomed to stand untied for hours. But it quietly backed out of the lane and ran, and killed another horse. The law held it a case of gross neglect, and the physician had to pay for the other horse, besides the cost of the suit.—Youth's Companion.

TO BOYS COMMENCING BUSINESS.

Be on hand promptly in the morning at your place of business, and make it a point never to be late, and perform cheerfully every duty. Be respectful to your employers and to all in authority over you, and be polite to every one; politeness costs nothing, and it will help you wonderfully in getting along in the world. And above all, be honest and truthful. The boy who starts in life with a sound mind in a sound body, who falls into no bad habits, who is honest, truthful and industrious, who remembers with grateful love his father and mother, and who does not grow away from church and Sunday-school, has qualities of mind and heart that will insure him success to a remarkable degree, even though he is endowed with only ordinary mental capacity; for honor, truth and industry are more than genius.

Don't be foppish in your dress, and don't buy anything before you have the money to pay for it. Shun billiard saloons, and be careful how you spend the evenings. Cultivate a taste for reading, and read only good books. With a love for reading, you will find in books friends ever true and full of cheer in time of gloom, and sweet companionship for lonely hours. Other friends may grow cold and forsake you, but books are always the same. And in closing, boys, I would say again, that with truth, honesty, and a living faith in God, you will succeed.

Honor and shame from no condition rise;
Act well your part; there all the honor lies.

KEEPING THE HOUSE IN ORDER.

Mrs. Fairchild was sick, and as there was no help in the kitchen, there was nothing for Mr. Fairchild to do when he came at night but turn in for an evening of housework.

There was always an accumulation of dishes to wash, rooms to sweep, and shelves to arrange, to say nothing of meals that must be either bought or cooked.

He did not mind the work for a few nights, it seemed only a relief from his office work; but what puzzled and annoyed him was that nothing stayed in order. There were just the same dishes to wash and just the same rooms to sweep night after night; there was no change, no variety, in the work. After a week of it he became heartily tired of housework, but he had to keep at it just the same.

In time Mrs. Fairchild's health returned, and household matters ran again in the smooth, comfortable way as of old, with this difference, that Mrs. Fairchild noticed that her husband never asked her when she was going to do this or why she had not done that.

She was surprised to find that he was even wearing some of his clothes untrimmed.

She chided him gently for not having told her of his wants, and he replied:

"Why, dear, I never realized how hard your work, even your sewing, was, until you were sick and I had to do it. I tried to mend the lining of my coat, one day; it took me an hour to do it, and I was actually tired when it was done. I never realized," he added, "what heroines good wives and mothers are to do the drudgery of house-keeping uncomplainingly and unflinchingly for months and years together, with often never a word of appreciation from those for whom they work."

Dear, tired housewife, don't get discouraged because the house will not stay in order. It is a mountainous task to keep a house in order. Don't try too hard; be particular indeed about actual cleanliness, but better tolerate a little disorder than worry your life out overdoing what will never stay done.—Selected.

HOW WE LEARN GREAT THINGS.

Great truths are dearly bought. The common truth,
Such as men give and take from day to day,
Comes in the common walk of easy life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way.

Bought in the market at the current price,
Bred of the smile, the jest, perchance the bowl;
It tells no tales of daring or of worth,
Nor pierces even the surface of a soul

Great truths are greatly won. Nor found by chance,
Nor wafted on the breath of summer-dream;
But grasp in the great struggle of the soul,
Hard buffeting with adverse wind and stream.

Not in the general mart, 'mid corn and wine;
Not in the merchandise of gold and gems;
Not in the world's gay hall of midnight mirth;
Not 'mid the blaze of regal diadems;

But in the day of conflict, fear and grief,
When the strong hand of God put forth in might,
Ploughs up the sub-soil of the stagnant heart,
And brings the imprisoned truth-seed to the light.

Wrung from the troubled spirit, in hard hours
Of weakness, solitude, perchance of pain,
Truth springs, like harvest from the well-ploughed field,
And the soul feels it has not wept in vain.

TEMPERANCE.

"THE NEW DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE."

[From the Fourth of July Address of Jno. C. Woolley, at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, New York, 1892.]

Our fathers rebelled against non-representation in a foreign court; comes now the greater rebellion against misrepresentation in our own. They fought for independence; we fight for inclusion and the right of line in honest government. It is high time.

The will of God is "House File number one" in every civilized congress. Who stands for that at Washington? What business has Jesus Christ at Albany? None, whatever, save what he has equally at Sing Sing.

Federal, state and municipal legislation ignores the Christian man, or, worse still, makes him seem to say in ordinance and statute, there is no God but policy, and party is his prophet. For instance, the Chinese exclusion bill, in violation alike of contract and conscience, could not have become a law without the consent of a Christian President; but it has gone, a slimy, cringing, dastard thing, into the literature of bad faith and is the law—the price of votes to be got for it ferce nature—"on the hoof," as cattlemen say. And henceforth our missionaries to China ought to preach Janus instead of Jesus, "for the sake of euphony." My church will celebrate to-day by spurning that and any candidate that stands for that.

Again, the trend of population is to cities; the trend of cities is to the political enthronement of the vicious, and the trend of the vicious is to lower drifts of baseness. It is not easy to say whether Republican government in American cities is simply lunacy or grand larceny. The gambler and "Madame" bawd confer with mayors-elect as to the policy of each new administration, and the police confess their inability to more than "hold their own" with criminals, and to be an alderman is, ipso facto, to be a "suspect."

The cause is alcoholic in the main. The cardiac artery of the municipal body politic is the liquor traffic pulsing with the rhythm and resistless might of law, pumping torpor into the industries, poverty into the home, paralysis into the spine, and insanity, vice and crime into the brain of citizenship, and never resting, any more than the heart of a man rests this side the grave; and all this hellish enginery has piety for its balance-wheel, for I need scarcely remind you that every recognized saloon in the States, except the two in the Capitol at Washington, are steadied and regulated by being belted on to the church by license laws. The figure is no stretch of truth, for the principle of license is an alloy of piety with cowardice, hypocrisy and greed.

A municipal corporation has no soul or body, it is true, but it has a moral character, and the greatest municipal question to-day is whether moral character is a thing to contend for, when by treating it as a commodity we can sell it in our own streets and alleys for a fair equivalent for such stuff, cash in hand. The matter bristles with economic questions which I do not touch, because they are not worth the breath of a busy man; but although the commercial theory of piety went down at Aceldama, yet, it seems to-day that, in politics, the purse of the disciples is carried by Judas Iscariot redivivus, for the saloon-keeper, fitly representing the whole spawn of crime, is not afraid to say to the Christian citizenry, "You have virtue; what will you take for it for a year?" and we have hawked our principles so long, that now we put a tag upon the public conscience every year and expose it in the city hall for sale, before we are asked to sell; and the orthodox excuse for the baseness is, that to decline to sell would tempt the potential ravisher to use force; to prevent that, we are advised to yield and compound the felony, in advance, for money; we do. And the Christian state becomes the mistress of the Christian church's deadliest enemy.

Again, four-fifths of the Christian power of the commonwealth is ungeared from the political main-shaft, because it belongs to women, who could not if they would give it to men, and the church weakly adjourns from year to year without a quorum, and the world wags its head, saying, "She would save others; herself she cannot save." And Christian men, "blown" like bird's eggs, so they will not spoil, are kept by political collectors in cabinets as curios. I propose we stop that, and before we grind another grist, belt on the power of women.

Martin Luther's Reformation was a toy compared to this, if we could celebrate to-day an end of that; for if it could run through the land to-morrow morning that Christian men had united to-day in a new declaration of independence, the liquor-dealer and his cousin germane, the "practical politician," would "fold their tents like the Arabs and as silently steal" something and leave the country for the country's good. For the liquor traffic has been tried and convicted, but by bribery of the judges, has been reprieved from year to year; let it be called now for sentence. It is nonchalant but nervous; it has millions of slaves and patrons, but few friends, and every friend it has is a traitor to something else. Are the judges purchasable this year? Yes, and worse than that, men in high places—leaders, statesmen, who are called Christians—sneer at the prosecutor and call him fool, and knave; but let them have a care at whom they sneer!

"Hear the word of the Lord God; thus saith the Lord God, because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned, and against the land of Israel when it was desolate, and against the house of Judah when they went into captivity. Behold, therefore, I will deliver thee to the men of the East for a possession, and they shall set their palaces in thee, and shall make their dwellings in thee. They shall eat thy fruit and they shall drink thy milk; and I will make Rabbah a stable for camels, and the Ammonites a couching place for flocks; and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

The temple of God on the earth is the family; the real sanctuary of godliness and patriotism in this country is the American home. Drink is the great profaner of that sanctuary, the arch-insult of virtue, the scourge of motherhood and desolator of the land; yet the men who make war upon the drink traffic are more jeered at than sneaks and hypocrites. There are Ammonites amongst us in Christian America; let a man offer himself in wager of battle, champion of the home against that traffic, and forthwith the whole pack, "little dogs and all, Blanche, Tray, Sweetheart, see, they bark at him."

A LESSON FROM PAUL'S EPISTLES.

LESSON XIII.—Third Quarter, 1892.—September 25.

SUBJECT.—The Lord's Supper Profaned.—1 Cor. 11: 20-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.—1 Cor. 11: 28.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

A crying abuse condemned. Vs. 20-22. Some of the Corinthian converts were wealthy, and retained when they became Christians many of their former selfish and voluptuous habits. Abuses of various kinds crept in among them; scandalous sins, as well as heresies and divisions. Our present lesson deals with an evil which so far as we know was peculiar to the Corinthian church—the making of the Lord's Supper a mere drunken festival. The early Christians held what they called a love-feast before they celebrated the supper, in imitation of the Passover, the eating of which by our Lord and his disciples preceded the instituting of the Eucharist. All clubbed together and brought their portions, the rich, extra portions for those who were poorer; and it was at this initiatory feast, but not at the Lord's Supper proper, that these excesses and abuses which are here so severely rebuked took place. The rich had precedence, and obliged the poorer ones to sit down later at a second table. The natural results were gluttony and drunkenness on the part of the more favored, while others had to go away hungry, and in making a most offensive line of demarkation between the two classes at a place and on an occasion when to recognize any such difference is sacrilege. Any spiritual celebration of the Lord's Supper was thus rendered impossible. How often it becomes an almost meaningless thing because the communicants have been immersed in worldly cares and pleasures all the week; and how often the same selfish caste-spirit is manifested in our churches, the members of which say in effect, "we want no poor people among us." Can such a church ever celebrate worthily this divine ordinance?

2. The true way of celebrating the Supper. Vs. 23-27. Paul was honored with a special revelation in this matter, for at the time of his conversion none of the Gospels were in existence. The fact that there were no written words on this subject tends to explain in a great degree these abuses. It was certainly some excuse for the Corinthian church, whose converts had only just emerged from heathenism; but the church of Rome has corrupted the ordinance full as much, though in a different way by her fable of the "real Presence," her adoration of the Host, and denial of the cup to the laity. As instituted by our Lord it was simplicity itself; and yet no other has been so overlaid with the traditions of men, and so hedged about with pompous display and vain ceremony as this. The simpler the manner of celebrating it, the nearer we come to the primitive form. Our Lord "broke" the bread, which shows that the "wafer god" Rome has put in its stead has no authority in Scripture. He "gave thanks," even though holding in his hands the symbols of the fearful death he was about to suffer for our redemption. Then, however bitter the cup we may be called upon to drink, if we have the same spirit that was in him we too shall offer thanks. "Take, eat." How tender and free the invitation. Can we not trust with every care and burden One who thus gave himself for us? Shall we count any sacrifice too great, remembering that he sacrificed all things that we might have eternal life? "This do in remembrance of me." It is not our weak, sinful selves that we are to remember at his table; we are to remember him. If a dead or absent friend gives us a parting memorial, it is our friend, not ourselves, that the gift is designed to recall to memory. "Ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come." The two things are not to be separated. To simply show forth his death would be useless, meaningless without the latter part, "until he come." The church has too much lost sight of the fact that one prime object of the institution was to testify to the world that she expects her Lord to come again. One of the greatest evidences of the truth of Christianity is the survival of this ordinance—through wars and revolutions, the disruption of empires, and all the silent, subtle changes in human belief, it has continued to comfort believers, and will last till this dispensation gives place to another.

3. The sin of eating and drinking unworthily. Vs. 27-34. This may be done by making it a mere formality, without any spiritual discerning of the truth it was meant to commemorate. We are to examine ourselves, not in order to feel worthy, for it is our unworthiness which gives us a right to be there—if we were not sinners there would have been no need of such a sacrifice—but to know if we are walking in the Spirit, or fulfilling the lusts of the flesh. "For this cause," etc. Their gross carnal habits brought upon them disease, and, in some cases, death. The gluttonous and intemperate cannot expect long lives. If they had thus "judged," or examined, themselves, they might have been "chastened," but not "condemned" with the unbelieving world."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The Baptist missionary car has been recently side-tracked at various places in California, where most interesting services have been held. It is estimated by the missionary in charge that the services held by means of the car have been blessed to the conversion of more than 500 persons. California has contributed $2,500 toward the purchase of a second car.

—Of the 8,000,000 Negroes in America, 1,400,000 are Baptist.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Bishop Taylor has attended twenty-three camp meetings this season. After attending three more he goes to California, and, after the meeting of the missionary committee, he sails for Africa. The bishop looks somewhat worn, but he is better than when he was last home.

—Another Methodist church is to be built in Harvey, Ill. The foundation will be laid at once. A building costing not less than $4,000 will be completed by January, 1893. The community interested has no fears as to the success of the undertaking.

—The circulation of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes' volume of sermons, entitled "Ethical Christianity," has been prohibited by the Russian censor. This is a distinction enjoyed by no other Methodist.

—Rev. Wade Preston, formerly of the Little Rock conference, who some three months ago left the M. E. Church South and went into the Baptist communion, and whose defection was heralded throughout the land, has returned to his first love.

—Bishop Taylor gave eleven-twelfths of his last year's salary to the African work.

—The Methodist Episcopal church has thirty-six missions among the Cherokees and Choctaws, and over 6,500 adherents.

—Dr. Lambuth is planning for a vigorous campaign to extinguish the missionary debt of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It aggregates about $118,000.

—The new census shows that of the 20,347,360 church members in the United States, 2,240,354 belong to the Methodist Episcopal church. The church property is valued at $96,000,000.

—British Methodists are moving for "fixity of tenure" in the pulpit. There are exceptions now for London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Manchester, and Birmingham. Six years are proposed as the available term.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The American Presbyterian church is conspicuously able to take care of itself and take care of the truth as well. A year ago Patton and Princeton influences were blamed for the deliverance given in the Briggs case in Detroit. Neither Patton nor any other professor in Princeton was in the last Assembly, but the Assembly was quite as conservative as its predecessor of a year ago. Ecclesiastical leaders, called "wheel-horses," over there, were also accused severely for the Detroit verdict, but the "wheel-horses" were conspicuous by their absence in Portland. The Assembly of this year was composed almost exclusively of new men, but Dr. Briggs had no more defenders than he had a year ago. The fact is, the American Presbyterian church is the most conservative member of the Presbyterian family. There are so many varieties of the ecclesiastical mollusk over there that the orthodox people find it highly necessary to keep their vertebral column stiff. The fence is so high that nobody can sit on it with any reasonable amount of comfort and consistency. Our neighbors know their own business and attend to it properly.—Canada Presbyterian.

—Dr. T. Dewitt Talmage had a grand interview with the Czar of Russia, was assigned rooms in the palace, banqueted by the nobility and city authorities, presented to the empress and all the children of the imperial family, and had a long conversation with the czar, we are told, on subjects political and religious.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—Bishop Walker, whose cathedral car was recently described, is about to add another traveling church to its means of usefulness. A wealthy New York citizen, with extensive interests in the West, has presented him with a "Gospel barge," for use on the Missouri River. It is ninety-three feet long and twenty-five feet wide, and is appropriately fitted up for church services. It will be called "The Missouri Missioner," and the bishop hopes to be able in this barge to visit the mining-camps for a distance of 500 miles.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Heidelburgh University at Tiffin, Ohio, of which the Rev. J. A. Peters, D.D., is the energetic president, will enter the new academic year with an increased equipment in building, professors and courses.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—The new Archbishop of Westminster, Dr. Vaughan, successor so far to Cardinal Manning, was installed on August 15 last. A papal envoy had brought the "pallium" from Pope Leo, and the new archbishop was duly invested with it; "a ceremony," says a London paper, "not performed in England since Cardinal Pole received the pallium in 1556." We read further that "before being decorated with the pallium the archbishop recited to Monsignor Stonor, the papal envoy, the oath of allegiance to the Pope. The 'veneration' of the pallium followed. The clergy, nobility, and humbler laity kissed it kneeling." The pallium itself is described as "a narrow collar of pure white sheep's wool, adorned with purple crosses, with two lappets hanging before and behind, and fastened by jeweled pins. What Peter would have thought of it," adds the paper quoted, "is doubtful." Perhaps, after all, not so very doubtful.—Standard.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. J. B. Galloway has been installed as pastor of Caledonia and Arlington congregations in the presbytery of Wisconsin. This work is in a prosperous condition. His address is now Poynette, Wisconsin.

—The Synod of Iowa, in session at Colfax Springs, adopted the following resolutions relative to the temperance question:

The continuance of this evil and the changing phases which it assumes makes it an imperative duty to give expression,

1. To our abhorrence of the liquor traffic in every form, licensed or unlicensed, legal or illegal, in drug-stores or in saloons.

2. To our belief that abstinence is the only safety for the individual, and is the duty of every Christian.

3. To our earnest exhortation to the voters of the United Presbyterian church to use their ballots at the coming election in such a way as to most effectually check and rebuke this traffic; and we would call their attention to, and endorse the action of our General Assembly in declaring that "only that party that will wash its hands of complicity in the awful crime of the licensed saloon traffic, by taking positive ground against, it can expect their support and votes."

WORLD'S FAIR RELIGIOUS EXHIBITS.

—Preliminary steps have been taken by several religious denominations, looking to what may, inexplicitly, be called a religious exhibit in the Columbian Exposition. There is provision for a showing of this character in the classification of the Department of Liberal Arts, of which Dr. S. H. Peabody, formerly of the University of Illinois, is the chief. The Presbyterians, the Congregationalists and the Christian denomination have already taken action in the premises. In this connection the following suggestions as to what might properly be gathered in such an exhibition will be read with interest. It is taken from a circular prepared by the committee appointed by the Presbyterian General Assembly:

1. Statistics—Representing the growth, extent and distribution of the various organizations, by means of maps, charts and globes.

2. Publications—Representative collections of distinctly religious books and periodicals.

3. Education—Illustrations of theological seminaries, colleges and schools, including those in mission fields, under directly religious control.

4. Evangelistic Work—Representative church, Christian association, Sunday-school, and other buildings for religious uses.

5. Charities—Illustrations of hospitals, asylums, orphanages, reformatories, and other charitable institutions under religious control.

6. History and Biography—Pictures and memorials of men, places and events of special interest in connection with religious work.

Accompanying the exhibit should be comprehensive descriptive publications concerning it and the work it illustrates.

Here are some of the questions suggested for presentation at the proposed "Parliament of Religions," to be held during the Columbian Exposition. The Parliament includes all sects:

"How do you worship the Supreme Being?"

"How do you explore the will of the Supreme Being?"

"What do you call evil or sin?"

"What does your religion teach about family life?"

"How does your religion deal with the poor?"

"What do you know about human existence after death?"

"What do you believe about the judgment of mankind after death?"

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO AND WORLD'S FAIR.

The Catholic bishop of Chicago has been made defendant in a $10,000 damage suit in the Circuit Court by John Malinowski, a contractor. The latter was employed to build a church at West Hammond, Ill., on a foundation which was already constructed. After the work was completed the church fell over, and Malinowski claims it was on account of the defective foundation. This suit involves a dispute over the amount to be paid the contractor.

Frank D. Kettelle, son of Judge George D. Kettelle, of the Superior Court, was thrown from a buggy in a runaway and killed.

Dr. D. R. Brower, who has recently returned from Europe, said that he did not think cholera would gain a foothold in this country.

The annual report of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroads shows a large increase in revenue.

Mayor Washburne, in a letter, approves the course of Chief of Police McClaughry in the Garfield Park raids.

A theatre building is to be erected at Jackson Park.

The idea of erecting a grand stand on the lake front is indorsed.

Adams and Cobb will have 1,600 wheeled chairs in operation next year at the Fair.

Arrangements are being made for a general decoration of business blocks during the dedication.

COUNTRY.

All the lumber mills at Marinette closed on Friday. Between 2,000 and 3,000 men went out.

Two deaths from cholera occurred upon the steamer Wyoming in quarantine at New York, Friday.

Friday was the forty-second anniversary of the admission of California into the Union. It was observed as a legal holiday.

Andy Jefferies and Adam Foster, two 20-year-old colored men, were executed in the jail yard at Spartansburg, S. C., on Friday.

Anarchist Bergman, who attempted to take the life of H. C. Frick, stated in an interview that if his sentence was for more than ten years he would kill himself.

The old Academy of Music at Cleveland, Ohio, was totally destroyed by fire Thursday afternoon, involving a loss of $10,000, partly insured.

Mrs. James Fisher, wife of a prominent physician of Durand, while watching the performance of a wild West show, in connection with the Winnebago County Fair, was hit and fatally injured by a bullet fired from a pistol in the hands of one of the performers.

Governor Fifer was unable to speak at Peoria Thursday, owing to illness. Besides the severe cold, from which he has not entirely recovered, he is suffering from his old wounds.

Congressman Luther F. McKinney, of Manchester, N. H., was Thursday nominated for governor by the Democrats of that State.

Dun and Bradstreet's latest weekly report of trade states that crop, stock and money markets show a decided improvement in all lines, except that export trade has been interfered with by anti-cholera measures, and stocks are in professional hands.

Wisconsin Democrats renominated the old ticket, headed by Governor George W. Peck.

Cholera has come in to cause hesitation in business, says Dun's review of trade, while industry and business were improving daily and prospects were brighter than ever. Crop prospects are better; money is in greater demand but ample supply everywhere, and industries are producing more than ever before. Fears that exports may be curtailed by the pestilence in Europe has depressed the markets. Manufactures in this country have never been in better condition on the whole than that which reports now indicate. All the textile branches are producing more and consuming more than ever, and the demand has rarely pressed so closely upon the supply. Most woolen mills are running night and day to meet orders and cotton mills are crowded while stocks of goods in sight are phenomenally low.

Sufferers from dyspepsia have only themselves to blame if they fail to test the wonderful curative qualities of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In purifying the blood, this medicine strengthens every organ of the body, and even the most abused stomach is soon restored to healthy action.

The Temperance Manufacturing town of Harvey has had indeed a wonderful growth. It has grown within the last two years from a prairie to an energetic, go-ahead, and independent manufacturing town of nearly 5,000 inhabitants. Harvey has several church organizations, not a saloon in the place nor any possibility of one, and a permanent basis for growing prosperity in the location of a dozen or more great manufacturing plants, employing over 2,000 hands.

THE "SERMONS AND ADDRESSES,"

by Jonathan Blanchard, is a noble volume in behalf of reform, but it is to be regretted that so few friends of reform, readers and supporters of the Christian Cynosure are availing themselves of the opportunity of securing copies for themselves and of inducing others to buy it. "Being dead," our beloved teacher "still lives" in his works, and in his writings reflects the great and noble spirit that actuated him in his effective life-work. There should be an earnest desire to possess his manly and fearless assaults upon the evils of his day and ours, to study them in the light of Christianity, and to cherish them as lasting mementoes of his services in the cause of truth.

Of this volume, the (Baptist) Standard of Chicago aptly says, referring to his early lecture, "Temperance a Political Test:" "Other like great questions have occupied him during the almost sixty years since that date. He was with like promptitude enlisted against secret societies, against slavery, against Sabbath desecration, and has been, indeed, during his whole career, the advocate of great principles lying at the very base of Christian society and the Christian state. A book like this, apart from the brief but interesting autobiography with which it opens, is a history. One learns from it what are the subjects which for more than a half-century have occupied the thoughts and energy of such men as Dr. Blanchard, and also something as to the phases such questions have assumed, from time to time; more especially the fundamental principles announced in the beginning and substantially at the foundation still. Happy the man whose privilege it has been, during so long a period, to devote such high powers in a service so grand and so beneficent."

The book is neatly printed, substantially bound, embellished with a portrait, and sold at this office for seventy-five cents, postage included.

HOME AND HEALTH.

GRAPES AND THEIR USES.

A pyramid of grapes of different varieties makes a handsome centerpiece for the table and a delicious dessert. Grape shears are very unique and should be used on the table, as many of the clusters are too large, and with shears can be easily separated.

Iced Grapes.—Take perfect bunches of grapes and wipe them, dip into white of egg well beaten, then sift fine sugar over them and lay them on a sieve in a warm place, where they will dry quickly. These are very ornamental.

To prepare Grape Juice for Winter.—Select ripe, perfect grapes, pick them from the stems, leaving out any that are unripe or imperfect, wash and measure, and put them in a porcelain kettle with one pint of water to three quarts of grapes. Cook slowly ten minutes, skim off anything that rises; while hot pour into a jelly bag and drain; wash the kettle and return the juice, put over the fire, and as soon as it comes to a boil, dip into fruit jars same as fruit. Put the covers on securely. Keep in a cool, dark place. Pack the jars in a wooden box which is a little higher than the jars are, then put a cover over the top; this will keep them from the light. This makes a pleasant and healthy beverage with the addition of a little sugar and cracked ice.

Spiced Grapes.—Allow five pounds of grapes, three pounds of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one of allspice, and half a teaspoonful of cloves. Wash the grapes and take the skins off; boil the skins in water until tender; cook the pulp and strain through a sieve; when the skins are tender add them to the pulp; then put in the sugar and spices and cook slowly, watching them closely that they do not burn. When thick enough put in jars and cover closely. Keep in a cool place.—M. J. Ashton.

SUCCESS IN CANNING.

Good fruit and good sugar are essential, of course; fruit that is so soft that it contains a large surplus of water, or so over-ripe that fermentation has already set in, may be pardoned for getting spoiled; and the cook cannot be blamed except for using fruit which cannot help being spoiled. The next point is the application of sufficient heat to drive out the air; after this, effort is to be directed toward keeping it out. This is attained by filling the cans to overflowing with fruit and syrup. The fruit may be allowed an instant to steam and settle, and then the cover is to be put on and screwed on at once.

The probability is that the difficulty usually lies with the rubber ring. If this is too small, it will stretch a little; but if too large, nothing can make it fit. Sometimes the rubbers harden with use; sometimes they soften. With the porcelain-lined top, they sometimes stretch and push out of place at one point, when of course the can does not seal. Again, with the two-piece top, the metal ring may become bruised so that it does not screw far enough to press upon the cover. All these points must be watched, and then after the fruit is cold it may be put away in a dark closet. A boot box will make a practicable closet, if no other is available; or, failing other methods of excluding light, each can may be placed in a paper bag.

The plan of cooking the fruit in a boiler with a wooden frame at the bottom is a good one, if the fruit comes in large quantities, so that many cans can be cooked at once. It consists in filling the cans with fruit, filling the spaces with a previously prepared syrup, and placing the cans covered up to the shoulder in cold or lukewarm water, where they will remain until the water has boiled from fifteen to thirty minutes. The jars are then removed, filled to the brim with hot reserved syrup, and sealed at once. The time required for boiling and the amount of sugar vary according to the ideas of the cook.—Rural New Yorker.

FARM NOTES.

POULTRY FOR THE FARMER.

Poultry on the farm, says a writer in the Rural New Yorker, should net the owner at least $1 a head clear profit; but as a rule the case is just the reverse, the hens putting the farmer in debt each year. I have no faith in an exclusive poultry farm, believing that there is too much risk in it, unless the entire business is gone into—broilers, roasters and eggs. Then, if the operator has any experience and working capital, he can make a success of it. But there is a big opening on the farm for poultry culture. There will be money in every farmer's pocket if he will kill off all the hens over three years of age; if he grade up his common hens with thoroughbred males; if he will provide better shelter; if he will keep the premises cleaned; if he will stop corn feeding and supply better feed; and if he will give the hens as good attention as he does the cows.

I stopped one day at a farmer's to look at his poultry, and thought as I watched the movements of the hens, is it a wonder that poultry on a farm don't pay? Two hundred fowls in one flock, and an average of two eggs a day! At least half of the flock ran in age from four to six years. The house was an old dilapidated shed, and the roosts the highest points of the trees. I did not ask him what he fed; it was not necessary. He was but a fair example of what one generally finds on the farm of a man that knows that there is not a dollar in "a whole flock of hens."

But I have been visiting farms where the owners take a pride in poultry, and are making a good thing out of the investment. They use poultry as an adjunct, and they find that it pays to give the fowls the best of care. A farmer in the town of Hammonton, N. J., by the name of Swank, combines broiler-raising with the milk business. With a brooding-house of 1,000 capacity, and a dozen cows, he says he can make more clear cash than at general farming. Another farmer devotes his time to the butter and egg business, believing it to be the best combination. He keeps nine fine Jersey cows, and about 300 fowls (Brown Leghorn and Black Minorcas), and by feeding good egg foods to the latter, and the best of feed to the former, and by providing warm and comfortable stabling, has butter and eggs for sale just when those articles are scarce and when prices are at their best. Henry Philipps, of Hammonton, combines broiler-raising with the growing of fruit. He has the largest brooding-house (one having a capacity of 5,000 every ten weeks). He also ships every season tons of small fruits, and seems to be in the best financial health. Mr. Adams, of the same place, combines egg-farming with the growing of small fruits. F. W. Steuhmer, also of Hammonton, raises vegetables and eggs.

And so I might go on and give a score or more of illustrations with which I am personally acquainted, but these will do to show the value of poultry as an adjunct. If instead of having a big flock of 100 or 200 fowls of a "hit or miss" character, the farmer would cull out all old fowls and pick out the most serviceable ones, and then mate them into families, headed by good thoroughbred cocks or cockerels, he would soon learn the value of a well-protected henry. There is no use in trying to keep poultry on the "hit or miss" plan. Well cared for, they are a profit; neglected, they are a loss. If every farmer properly situated would give the business the proper attention, it would not be long before Uncle Sam would have to give up the large importations of eggs he is annually compelled to make from abroad in order to supply the increasing demand.

OUTLOOK OF THE MODERN FARM.

There is no doubt that the outlook for the farming interests is bright. The exceptional crops of last year will not be yearly repeated, but the era of continued low prices for farm products is probably over for good, and he who by intelligent labor reaps good returns from that labor will be pretty sure of obtaining good prices for those returns. The reasons for this are on the surface. The supply of available public land suitable for agricultural purposes is about exhausted. An increased acreage in any crop will mean a decreased area in some other crop. The increase of population, together with the exhaustion of the supply of new land, will both tend to increase the demand and lessen the pro-rata production, except as the latter is affected by improved methods of farming, which latter would mean better returns to the intelligent, go-ahead farmer. This does not mean that every farmer has a golden future assured him. But it does mean that he who employs the same intelligence and industry on his farm that the successful merchant does in his business, will have an even greater measure of success than the latter. In all other industries, methods have been revolutionized in the last twenty years, and those who have failed to keep abreast of these changes have been pushed to the wall. In the farming industry the same change has taken place, but not to so large an extent. But methods and implements have changed enough to show that he who clings to old practices and old ideas will drop to the rear and remain a member of the grand army of grumblers. It requires thought, study, experiment and enterprise to wring success from the conditions which govern agriculture to-day.—Practical Farmer.

The announcement was made in this column, last week, on what was considered good authority, that the New York State Anti-secrecy Convention is to be held at Binghamton late in October. A note from Bro. W. B. Stoddard informs us that by an arrangement made at last year's convention, it is to be held at Walton, Delaware county, next month. The date has not been announced.

Letters from Rev. L. Mendenhall and T. P. Robb, President and Secretary of the Iowa State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, announce that the Iowa State Anti-secrecy Convention has been postponed from the 8th and 9th days of November next until the 15th and 16th—one week later. The first appointment brought the hour of meeting on election day, which fact might have been a detriment to the convention by preventing the attendance of many friends of the cause. Secretary Robb writes that programs have been made out, but incompletely, and include addresses from Pres. Blanchard, Rev. M. A. Gault, Rev. W. C. Paden, and others. The Convention will assemble in the Wesleyan Methodist church at Marengo, Iowa county, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 15, 16, beginning at 1:30 in the afternoon of the first-named day.

Friends will kindly remember that the first annual State Anti-secrecy Convention of Nebraska is to be held at Wahoo, October 18 and 19. Arrangements are not yet complete, but among those who are expected to attend are the following: Rev. E. B. Graham, Rev. J. W. Morton, (North Loup), and Rev. W. C. Paden. Prof. S. M. Hill, principal of the Luther Academy, Wahoo, is to present the issue with Jesuit-ry. Rev. John M. French, pastor of the First United Presbyterian church in Omaha, will also address the convention. The Swedish Lutherans are strongly imbued with the importance of our work, and carry considerable influence in Nebraska. A full program is expected soon. Let our friends in the Western District rally on this occasion, in force.

The Catholic Review complains that the Freemasons in Europe are unanimously in favor of non-sectarian schools. That is because Masonry is only a "religious" institution, while Romanism is both religious and sectarian.

Among the marked effects of the renewal of the Chinese exclusion law by Congress, is the course pursued by the "Six Companies," a Chinese oligarchy having a prominent interest in the immigration of the "Celestials" to this country—in fact, one of its greatest promoters. The regulation requiring all existing Chinese citizens in the United States to register and furnish their respective photographic portraits to the government, met with pungent opposition from the "Six Companies," who advised non-compliance with the law. Acting on this advice, the Chinese in Chicago (whom a contemporary classes as "Highbinders," but probably unjustly) have perfected an organization, for the alleged purpose of defying the laws and protecting its members. It is too soon to affirm what will be the result of this combination against the government. The situation is to be regretted. The law is unjust, and the formation of armed resistance to it is equally culpable. The spirit of anarchy is not lessened by these events.

The fourth Congress of Peace and Arbitration, otherwise known as the Universal Peace Congress, and formed of 308 delegates from the various Peace societies throughout the world, met at Berne, Switzerland, on the 22d of August, ult. M. Louis Ruchonnet, Federal Councillor of Switzerland, presided. In his opening address he said: "We are here assembled to organize war against war. That is the common object of all the associations here represented. We desire that justice may control all relations between nations, as it has long governed those of private individuals. We demand that differences between States shall be settled by arbitration and not by the sword." This was the keynote to the entire proceedings of the Congress; and while the increasing armaments of European nations, with the augmenting social disorders in nearly all countries, offered but little encouragement for continued peace, the spirit of the Congress was hopeful in the interest of arbitration as a means of averting threatened conflicts; and on this basis the consultations were conducted.

Last week was distinguished by the reunion of naval veterans at Baltimore, from the 15th to the 19th inst., and the interest of the occasion was heightened by the presence of the government's "white squadron" in the harbor at Baltimore. The National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Washington began on the 20th inst. The attendance is immense, and it is said to be the greatest military assemblage in Washington since the great review of returning soldiers in 1865. The number of these veterans is gradually lessening; but what puzzles the average citizen is the continuous accessions made to the list of government pensioners. Commissioner Raum reports that not less than 25,000 pensions were dropped from the rolls last year through death. Next year he estimates that the number will be no less than 40,000, and the following year 50,000, with no original claims to add. Yet every week long lists of new pensions are granted to others than original claimants. What for? And will the list ever cease to grow until the "Sons of Veterans" and grandsons of veterans are dead? No reasonable person will object to the pensions paid to the real veterans or their widows; but their posterity should be able and willing to earn a livelihood without government support.

Isn't the Chicago Catholic News slightly unjust when it remarks that "President Harrison perpetuates the vindictive spirit of hatred of the Irish that influenced his ancestor, one of Cromwell's bloodthirsty officers, who directed the slaughter of tens of thousands of men, women and children in Ireland?" Without expressing any partiality for President Harrison, or wishing him success in the present campaign, we must say that he hardly deserves this denunciation. The public records show the exaltation of numerous Irishmen to fat Federal offices in this administration, among whom is Patrick Egan. If these men have proved themselves unworthy of the honors conferred upon them, the President has need to exercise caution in promoting more of them. Besides, it is not fair to lay the sins of the fathers upon the children.

In the trial of the iron-works strikers of Homestead, Pa., for overt acts, including resistance to officers of the law and destruction of private property, the defendants received but little comfort from the charge of the presiding judge to the grand jury. Said he: "He is a party to a riot who is active either in doing or countenancing, or supporting, or ready, if necessary, to support the unlawful acts of any one who joins the rioters after they have actually commenced; and he is equally as guilty as if he had joined with them while assembling for the purpose; and all persons who promote, encourage and take part in a riot whether by words, signs, or gestures or in any other manner, are to be considered as rioters. There are no aiders or abettors in this offence; all concerned in any way as stated are principals." This expression of the judge was fully supported by former judicial decisions. All are guilty under the law; and if the law is duly respected when the cases come before the proper tribunal, it will probably be vindicated and the rioters taught a salutary but bitter lesson.

MASONIC RELIGION.

Religion, according to Mr. Webster, is a "system of faith and worship." There are many such systems. Prominent among these are Buddhism, Judaism, Christianity, and Freemasonry. Of these many systems there are some having the form of godliness; but the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is the only "pure and undefiled religion." However beautiful the form, if the power to keep its votaries "unspotted from the world" is lacking, regardless of the fact that the orphans and widows are visited, such religion is false. Be the system what it may, except it give redemption from sin and its dire consequences, it fails to meet the necessities of our race. Realizing this fact, some of these systems claim to meet this requirement. If they accomplish this great object, man's salvation here and hereafter, they are to be accepted as true; otherwise they are false.

Masonry claims to be a religion, saving from sin in this world, and in the world to come,—as will be readily seen by the writings of its acknowledged standard authors. It is a system of faith and worship, having its religious rites and ceremonies, and claiming to meet all the needs of man's nature; hence they cannot "conceive that anything can be suggested more, which the soul of man requires." As a Master Mason, they "find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added." What other religion claims to perfect man thus?

Again, as found on page 205 of Mackey's "Lexicon of Freemasonry:" "The Master Mason represents a man saved from the grave of iniquity, and raised to the faith of salvation."

Same volume, page 16: "Acacian—a term derived from akakia (innocence), and signifying a Mason, who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin."

Thus in plain, unmistakable terms is the Masonic faith declared. Can Masonry substantiate its claims of salvation? Does it meet its obligations? Let it reply in its own behalf.

A Masonic midnight funeral service was held in this city, a few nights ago (the first held here), over the remains of a prominent Mason. The service was published in full in the Sunday Oregonian. Though held in the lodge-room, it was not secret; many of the non-Masonic friends of the deceased were present.

We quote in part from the Oregonian: "The last office at the obsequies of a Knight Kodesh were carried out according to ritual." After ordering the body prepared for burial, owing to its length the writer omits the fore part of the service. "The Eminent Commander struck three blows on the iron cross (painted black) at the head of the casket, after which there was heard some plaintive music, and the coffin lid was removed, exposing the body of the dead knight. The hands and feet were found tied with a cord; the temples adorned with a chaplet of laurel and vine leaves; and on the heart was a bunch of freshly-culled violets. On the breast was a cross of gold sparkling with jewels.

"When the music ceased the Eminent Commander said: 'Knights, serving in your respective stations, give heed to my commands, and make answer to my questions! What means the chaplet of laurel and vine?'

"Orator—'That man lives for honor and enjoyment.'

"Em. Com.—'There are better things than these to live for in this world, and better things await the good and wise in a higher life. The laurel and vine decay and perish; honors fade like leaves, and enjoyment bears but little fruit, except regrets. Disparage not the dead by such vain distinctions.'

"The master of ceremonies took the chaplet from the temples of the deceased.

"Em. Com.—'What means the sparkling cross?'

"Almoner—'That dignities and splendor are the prizes of life.'

"Em. Com.—'How cometh man into the world?'

"Senior Expert—'Naked and poor.'

"Em. Com.—'As we brought nothing into the world with us it is certain we can take nothing out.' We leave behind us all the glories of our earthly state, and lay down all our dignities when we drop into the grave. Take from the dead the glittering bauble for which he no longer cares.'

"The cross was then taken from the breast of the deceased.

"Em. Com.—'Why are his hands and feet bound with cords?'

"Orator—'To show that in this life man is the slave of his habits, and bondman of his circumstances.'

"Em. Com.—'Death has ended that bondage, and freed our brother from that servitude. Remove the bonds.'

"Em. Com.—'What mean the violets on his breast?'

"Orator—'They are the symbol of purity and affection, the offering of brotherly love to one who deserved to be remembered, and whose death should make us sad and sorrowful.'

"Em. Com.—'Do you know of a truth that our brother in the coffin is dead, and doth not merely sleep?'

"Junior Warden—(Taking the hand of the dead). 'The flesh cleaveth not unto the bones, nor the skin unto the flesh. Verily, our brother is dead.'

"Em. Com.—'How looketh his grave?'

"Sr. Warden—'Deep, dark, narrow and cold.'

"Em. Com.—'Even such will be the grave for each of us. Yet there the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. Brethren, do the last sad offices for the departed, and give him a brother's blessing, for he was one of us; and though the dead cannot come to us again, they do see and hear us.'

"The officers in succession slowly approached the coffin, and each laid his right hand, the Senior Warden, on the head; the Junior Warden, on the eyes; the Orator, on the cheek; the Treasurer, on the mouth; the Almoner, on the heart; the Senior Expert, on the hands, and the Master of Ceremonies, on the feet of the dead, each accompanying this solemn rite with a fervent blessing, as follows: (I omit all these except the Grand Master's closing one.) Then the Grand Master struck the iron cross three times with the iron hammer, and in a deep and solemn voice said, 'I bless thee, O dead brother, in the name of Almighty God, in the name of the Order of the Holy House of the Temple, and in the name of the Knights and brethren here assembled. May the light of the face of God shine upon thee, and bless thee! Amen.'

"This closed the ceremony."

The above ceremonies were held over the remains of a "thirty-third degree member of the Scottish Rite," who "served for four years as Eminent Commander of the Knights Templar." Certainly, having "lived in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity" for nearly thirty years, and having "step by step passed through every important office in the fraternity," this Master Mason was, according to Masonic belief, "free from sin."

Here is a great discrepancy. The hands and feet of this deceased Knight are bound to show that in this life man is the slave of his habits, and the bondsman of his circumstances. We see now the extent of Masonic freedom from sin. Then the Eminent Commander informs us that "death" has procured the freedom from servitude, and ended the bondage. Freemasonry was, then, in no sense the emancipator; and there is no redemption from sin in this life. Is it not apparent that Freemasonry contradicts itself. It is a self-evident fact that all Freemasonry has to offer is bondage and servitude to sinful self on earth, with death as the emancipator from this; and as an emancipation, a "deep, dark, narrow and cold grave," to be followed by a hoped-for future "higher life." Assuredly, then it, does not meet its obligations.

Neither can Masonry substantiate its claims as a religion which saves from sin. Masonry rejects the One of whom it was said: "His name shall be called Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." Masonry has no Christ, no cross, and no Redeemer; hence no salvation from sin. Therefore it repudiates its own false claims.

It rejects the Bible, and it rejects the Christ of the Bible. It perverts the Scriptures by omitting the name of Christ from every passage they quote in which it occurs. It will be observed the Saviour's name is not once mentioned in the "impressive and beautiful service" (?) of the "Knight Kodesh;" not even in the blessings pronounced.

"Bound with cords!" A fitting emblem! After its emancipator, death, has accomplished his work, Freemasonry can offer nothing more in keeping with itself than bondage. Death, too, is its sanctifier. They speak of their "holy dead," and the Junior Warden says: "They who have lived well, and honorably, and usefully, are consecrated by death."

Verily is Masonry a false religion. It serves one good purpose like all others of its kind: it sets the true in bold relief. There is genuine salvation; but not in Masonic rites and faith.

There is a Gospel of which we are "not ashamed, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." It is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It makes no pretences. It is humble, as much so as the lowly Nazarene; but through him it offers salvation, freedom from sin. "If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Blessed freedom! Freedom from the guilt and power of sin. Christ has no bond-servants. No cords of carnal death here! This is "the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." It is freedom here, and glory hereafter.

The Gospel portrays no "dark, deep, narrow, cold grave."

"For Christ himself hath in it lain,
And Christ has conquered there."

The salvation of the Bible is free, "without money and without price." No initiation fee; no dues; and no "degree" of saving grace, can be received for any money. One of old who vainly imagined it, was told, "Thy money perish with thee." Christ purchased a full and free salvation for us. Through him we become "heirs of God and joint heirs of Jesus Christ;" no longer servants of sin, but of righteousness, children of God, and heirs of glory.

One of the clearest evidences that the current religion of to-day is not the religion of the Bible, is the fact that it is not pure and undefiled. It is a mixture. It has form, but lacks power. Even its ministry is no longer clean. Church members, ministers and bishops deny Christ, and seek the secret lodge; notwithstanding the command, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." Disobedience to the command forfeits the promise. They reject sonship and heirship. They will be of the many to whom it will be said: "Depart from me, I never knew you." "Many shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able."

Reader, have you "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," or do you reprove them?

"If we deny him, he also will deny us." Let us, then, accept of his salvation, and acknowledge him in all our ways, by doing whatsoever we do, in word or deed, to his glory.—Alice C. Philips, of Portland, Oregon, in the Earnest Christian.

SURVIVING REMNANTS OF SUN-WORSHIP.

LIGHTS IN WORSHIP.

The pagan origin of lights in worship is universally acknowledged. Their use was sharply condemned in the earlier times. (See Tertullian, Apologeticus, chap. 46, and Ad Uerum, lib. 2, chap. 46.) The Synod of Elvira (305 or 306 A. D.) condemned their use in cemeteries, where they already formed a part of the services for the dead. Canon 34 reads: "It is forbidden to light wax candles during the day in cemeteries for fear of disquieting the spirits of the saints."

Baronius explains this as follows: "Many Neophytes brought the custom from paganism of lighting wax candles upon tombs. The Synod forbids this, because, metaphysically, it troubles the souls of the dead; that is to say, this superstition wounds them."

Abespine gives another explanation, which is, that the Synod accepted the belief that was then general, that the souls of the dead hovered around their tombs. "The Synod consequently forbade that wax candles should be lighted by day, perhaps to abolish a remnant of paganism, but also to prevent the repose of the souls of the dead from being troubled." (See Hefele, History of the Councils, etc., to 325 A. D., pp. 150, 151, Clark's edition, Edinburgh, 1872.)

Maitland says:

The burning of lights is specified among the idolatrous rites forbidden by the Theodosian Code: "Let no one in any kind of place whatsoever in any city, burn lights, offer incense, or hang up garlands to senseless idols." Vigilantius, in reference to the custom of using lights in divine service, exclaims: "We almost see the ceremonial of the Gentiles introduced into the churches under pretence of religion; piles of candles lighted while the sun is still shining; and everywhere people kissing and worshiping, and I know not what; a little dust in a small vessel wrapped up in a precious cloth. Great honor do such persons render to the blessed martyrs, thinking with miserable tapers to illumine those whom the Lamb, in the midst of the throne, shines upon with the splendor of his majesty." This passage proves that Vigilantius, who must have known well the customs of paganism, was struck with the resemblance between them and the rites newly introduced into the church. (The Church in the Catacombs, p. 225, London, 1846.)

But love for paganism was too strong, and the custom soon became universal. Paulinus, Bishop of Nola (396 A. D.), glorified in the use of lights. In "Natalis" (3: 100) he says:

"The bright altars are crowned with thickly clustered lamps, the fragrant lights smell of waxed papyri; day and night they burn; so that night glitters with the splendor of day; and day itself glories with heavenly honors, shines the more, its lustre being doubled by innumerable lamps." (See Maitland, p. 228.)

The persistency with which the use of lights yet holds a place in many branches of the church shows how long and how vigorously paganism has continued to corrupt Christianity.

"ORIENTATION."

Another residuum from sun-worship led to building churches with the altar at the East, praying toward the East, burying the dead with reference to the East, etc. Of the pagan origin of the custom, Gale speaks as follows:

"Another piece of pagan demonolatry was their ceremony of bowing and worshiping towards the East. For the pagans universally worshiped the sun as their Supreme God, even the more reformed of them, the new Platonists, Plotinus, Porphyry, and Julian the apostate, as it appears by his oration to the sun. Whence it came to pass, that the sun rising in the East, they usually worshiped in that way (as the Jews in Babylon usually worshiped West, because Jerusalem stood west thence). Hence, also, they built their temples and buried their dead toward the East. So Diogenes Laertius, in the life of Solon, says that the Athenians buried their dead towards the East, the head of their graves being made that way. And do not anti-Christ and his sons exactly follow this pagan ceremony in building their temples and high altars towards the East, and in bowing that way in their worship? (Court of the Gentiles, by Theophilus Gale, part 3, book 2, chap. 2, section 3, paragraph 4.)

Various explanations were made concerning this practice, to cover up the prominence of this paganism. For instance, Clement of Alexandria says:

And since the dawn is an image of the day of birth, and from that point the light which has shown forth at first from the darkness increases, there has also dawned on those involved in darkness a day of the knowledge of truth. In correspondence with the manner of the sun's rising, prayers are made looking towards the sunrise in the East. Whence, also, the most ancient temples looked towards the West, that people might be taught to turn to the East when facing the images. "Let my prayer be directed before thee as incense, the uplifting of my hands as the evening sacrifice," says the Psalms. (Stromata, book 7, chap. 7.)

Tertullian seems to avoid the charge of paganism while defending this practice, as follows:

Others, with greater regard to good manners, it must be confessed, suppose that the sun is the god of the Christians, because it is a well-known fact that we pray toward the East, or because we make Sunday a day of festivity. What then? Do you do less than this? Do not many among you, with an affectation of sometimes worshiping the heavenly bodies, likewise move your lips in the direction of the sunrise? It is you, at all events, who have even admitted the sun into the calendar of the week; and you have selected its day, in preference to the preceding day, as the most suitable in the week, for either an entire abstinence from the bath, or for its postponement until the evening, or for taking rest and for banqueting. (Ad Nationes, chap. 13.)

EASTER FIRES.

Another element of pagan sun-worship continues to the present time in the Easter fires, which abound especially in Northern Europe. Fire is regarded as a living thing in Teutonic mythology. It is often spoken of as a bird, the "Red Cock." Notfuer, "Need-fire," is yet produced by friction, at certain times. Such fire is deemed sacred. On such occasions all fires in the neighborhood are extinguished, that they may be rekindled from the Notfuer. This fire is yet used to ward off evil, and to cure diseases in domestic animals. Traces of sex-worship appear in connection with the producing of this sacred fire; "two chaste boys" must pull the ropes which produce the friction necessary to generate the fire; and a "chaste youth" must strike the light for curing the disease known as "St. Anthony's fire." In Scotland such fire is held as a safeguard against the "bewitching of domestic animals."

Grimm, who is the highest authority on the mythology of Northern Europe, has abundant material touching all forms of fire-worship in that region. Here is a single extract with reference to Easter fires:

At all the cities, towns and villages of the country, towards evening, on the first (or third) day of Easter, there is lighted every year, on mountain and hill, a great fire of straw, turf and wood, amidst a concourse and jubilation, not only of the young but of many grown-up people. On the Weser, especially in Schaumburg, they tie up a tar-barrel on a fir-tree wrapt around with straw, and set it on fire at night. Men and maids, and all who come, dance, exulting and singing; hats are waved, handkerchiefs thrown into the fire. The mountains all around are lighted up, and it is an elevating spectacle, scarcely paralleled by anything else, to survey the country for many miles around from one of the higher points, and in every direction at once to see a vast number of these bonfires, brighter or fainter, blazing up to heaven. In some places they marched up the hill in stately procession, carrying white rods; by turns they sang Easter hymns, grasping each other's hands, and at the hallelujah clashed their rods together. They liked to carry some of the fire home with them.

For these ignes paschales there is no authority reaching beyond the sixteenth century; but they must be a great deal older, if only for the contrast with mid-summer fire, which never could penetrate into North Germany, because the people there held fast by their Easter fires. Now, seeing that the fires of St. John, as we shall presently show, are more immediately connected with the Christian church than those of Easter, it is not unreasonable to trace these all the way back to the worship of the goddess Ostara, Eastre, who seems to have been more a Saxon and Anglican divinity than one revered all over Germany. Her name and her fires, which are likely to have come at the beginning of May, would, after the conversion of the Saxons, be shifted back to the Christian feast. Those mountain fires of the people are scarcely derivable from the taper lighted in the church the same day; it is true that Boniface calls it ignis paschalis, and such Easter lights are mentioned in the sixteenth century. Even now, in the Hildesheim country, they light the lamp on Maundy Thursday, and that on Easter day, at an Easter fire which has been struck with a steel. The people flock to this fire, carrying oaken crosses, or simply crossed sticks, which they set on fire and then preserve for a whole year. But the common folk distinguish between this fire and the wild fire produced by rubbing wood. Jager speaks of a consecration fire of logs. (Teutonic Mythology, by Jacob Grimm, four vols., London, 1883, vol. 2, p. 115.)

MIDSUMMER FIRES.

Midsummer was the central point of a great pagan festival in honor of the sun, who had then reached his greatest height, from which he must soon decline. Catholic Christianity continued these festivals, in St. John Baptist Day. Many of the peculiarities of these midsummer fires were similar to those of the Easter fires already noticed. The following description of the modern festival in Germany is taken from Grimm:

"We have a fuller description of a Midsummer fire, made in 1823 at Konz, a Lorrainian butstill German village, on the Moselle, near Sierk and Thionville. Every house delivers a truss of straw on the top of the Stromberg, where men and youths assemble toward evening. Women and girls are stationed by the Burbach springs. Then a huge wheel is wrapt round with straw, so that none of the wood is left in sight; a strong pole is passed through the middle, which sticks out a yard on each side, and is grasped by the guiders of the wheel; the remainder of the straw is tied up into a number of small torches. At a signal given by the Maire of Sierk (who according to the ancient custom earns a basket of cherries by the service), the wheel is lighted with a torch, and set rapidly in motion; a shout of joy is raised; all wave their torches on high, part of the men stay on the hill, part follow the rolling globe of fire, as it is guided down the hill to the Moselle. It often goes out first; but if alight when it touches the river, it prognosticates an abundant vintage, and the Konz people have a right to levy a tun of white wine from the adjacent vineyards. Whilst the wheel is rushing past the women and the girls, they break out into cries of joy, answered by the men on the hill; and inhabitants of neighboring villages who have flocked to the river side, mingle their voices in the universal rejoicing." (Ibid. vol. 2, page 619.)

BELTANE OR BAAL FIRES.

The Beltane or Baal fires and the ancient sacrifices to the sun-god still continue in modified form in Scotland. Grimm speaks of them as follows:

The present custom is thus described by Armstrong subv. bealtainn: "In some parts of the Highlands the young folks of a hamlet meet in the moors, on the first of May. They cut a table in the green sod, of a round figure, by cutting a trench in the ground, of such circumference as to hold the whole company. They then kindle a fire and dress a repast of eggs and milk, in the consistence of a custard. They knead a cake of oatmeal, which is toasted at the embers, against a stone. After the custard is eaten up, they divide the cake in so many portions, as similar as possible to one another in size and shape, as there are persons in the company. They daub one of these portions with charcoal, until it is perfectly black. They then put all the bits of the cake into a bonnet, and every one, blindfold, draws out a portion. The bonnet-holder is entitled to the last bit. Whoever draws the black bit is the devoted person who is to be sacrificed to Baal, whose favor they mean to implore in rendering the year productive. The devoted person is compelled to leap three times over the flames. Here the reference to the worship of a deity is too plain to be mistaken; we see by the leaping over the flame, that the main point was to select a human being to propitiate the god, and make him merciful; that afterwards an animal sacrifice was substituted for him; and finally nothing remained of the bodily immolation but a leap through the fire, for man and beast. The holy rite of friction is not mentioned here, but as it was necessary for the 'needfire' that purged pestilence, it must originally have been much more in requisition at the great yearly festival."—The Sabbath Outlook for August.

WHY HE LEFT THE LODGE.

My convictions are that I should write my experience in Masonry. I joined the lodge about nineteen years ago, a little before I was converted. A short time after I was converted I came in contact with Bro. James Sullivan of South Lock. He asked if I was a Mason. I said, I was. He then asked me if I could live a Christian and walk with the lodge. I told him I saw nothing as yet to hinder me; when I did I should leave it.

Soon after this a brother Mason came along one lodge night, it being on prayer meeting night, and asked me if I was going to the lodge. I replied: "I can't leave the prayer meeting for the lodge;" and then the Scripture came to me, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." I was then a member of the M. E. church. The next thought was, how can I take the communion cup from the hand of a Mason who had taken such awful oaths? Conviction came more and more as the light shone. I called for my demit in the lodge, and said: "I will pay my dues and leave honorably." They said, no we want you with us. For five years I lived in this way, they all this time urging me to return to the lodge. I then said: "No, sir; give me a demit and I will give you five dollars." They did so. I took my demit home and burned it. I never attended the lodge after I was converted. Since I have left the lodge I have talked against it, and God has wonderfully blessed me in so doing. I suffered persecution from the church of which I was a member nine years, doing the best I could for God and humanity all this time. I then left the church and for nine years have had no church fellowship, but serving the best I could and where I could, sometimes going to the Wesleyans, sometimes to the Free Methodists; but neither one was very convenient.

Last winter I was privileged, in an adjoining neighborhood, to attend a revival meeting held by Rev. V. M. Thompson. I found in him and his people a spirit that dare oppose wrong, and God wonderfully blessed them. I have found a church home with them. I intend to stand wherever God calls me and renounce Masonry as he may dictate. Since I have thus decided I have never been able to see how a man can be a Christian and a Mason at the same time. May God have mercy on all who dare claim this! My convictions are, also, I can no longer raise barley to sell to brewers. If I do I am a partaker with them in this sin. Full and free salvation from sin is my privilege to live.—John P. VanSycle, of Wilkamsston, Mich., in Wesleyan Methodist.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The death of Whittier.—How our papers pander to a depraved taste.—A victim of the first cholera episode.—The saloon and the pestilence.

If the question, "In what time of the year would you choose to die?" could be submitted to a general symposium, I think, without doubt, most of the answers would favor autumn. The thought of a burial in the depth of winter strikes a chill to one's heart; and perhaps the spring-time is the saddest of all, for when do the mementoes of death seem so thoroughly funereal, so mournfully anomalous, as when they cast their shadows over earth's grand resurrection season? But there is a poetic appropriateness in going with the flowers and birds of summer; with the falling leaf and the harvested grain, which appeals with equal force to the fancy, whether it be of a child, a mature adult, or a man of fourscore; and in the passing away of New England's poet-laureate, Whittier, one recognizes the same felicitous circumstances attending his death which have followed him through life. To-day the country sorrows for the man who dared to take the unpopular side and give the best that was in him to aid the cause of the slave, though while he was penning these burning lyrics which were to become a national heritage, neither fame nor fortune waited on the obscure shoemaker, farmer and poet. To use his own words, "with the exception of a few dollars from the Democratic Review and Buckingham's Magazine, I received nothing for my poems and literary articles. Indeed, my pronounced views on slavery made my name too unpopular for a publisher's uses." We have hundreds of clever writers whose highest aim is to amuse the public and win money and celebrity, but few and far between are the men and women who are willing to lay all their talents on the altar of God and humanity. Yet these are they whose names will be held in honor by coming generations. Beautiful as are Whittier's poems, they owe much of their abiding charm to the life behind them, which, like a lamp burning at the back of an alabaster shrine, interpenetrates every verse with the holy radiance of perfect sincerity and truth. He penned no line which did not come from the heart. He occupied a place without parallel in the pride and affection of every true American; yet he was pre-eminently the poet of New England. The scent of her pine woods, the stainless purity of her lakes, the strength of her hills,—all these are in his verses; but it is the way in which he has voiced the spirit of his native section,—her sympathy for the oppressed, her stern wrath against the oppressor, which gives him his best and most enduring claim to the title; as, for instance, in that finest of his early poems, "Massachusetts to Virginia." Only genius of the highest order could have penned this one line:

"And sandy Barnstable rose up wet with the salt sea spray."

"Norfolk's Ancient Villages" is another felicitous touch. In his poem on the death of Rantoul, there is one stanza in particular which always seemed to me perfect in its majestic, Spenserian rhythm:—

"His steps were slow, yet forward still
He pressed where others paused or failed;
The pale star clomb with constant will,
The restless meteor flashed and paled."

I shall never forget hearing the Rev. Reuben Thomas read, as the climax of his address at the Commencement exercises of a young ladies' school near Boston, "The Yankee Girl." Lucy Larcom well says that New England womanhood crowned Whittier as her laureate from the day that he gave to the world this picture of the New England working-girl rising, and indignantly spurning the offer of marriage with the wealthy Southern slaveholder. Well may the bells toll and the flags droop at half-mast. New England may have other poets, other good and great men to dare all for the cause of human rights, but she can never have another John G. Whittier.

"With a scorn in her eye which the gazer could feel,

His simple burial, without ostentation or parade, and according to the Quaker custom, with the funeral sermon omitted, was consistent with the grand simplicity of his life. And it was also in accordance with the sweet catholicity shown in his writings that he should take advance ground on Christian unity. One of the last letters he wrote has this sentence: "For years I have been desirous of a movement for uniting all Christians, with no other creed or pledge than a simple recognition of Christ as our leader."

Taking up one of our oldest New England newspapers—one which prides itself, and not unreasonably, on its pure moral tone and high literary qualities—I saw pictured on the same page the venerable head and face of Whittier, and the brutal physiognomies of Sullivan and Corbett. I felt a shock at the incongruity of the thing, which I trust was shared by many of its readers. Nor was this all. Side by side with a really able and appreciative review of Whittier's life-work, was more than a column filled with details of the recent slugging match at New Orleans, given with disgusting minuteness, thus illustrating what a hodge-podge our public press places daily before its readers under the pretence that it "must cater for all classes." Is it not about time that the rights of the decent class, the men and women who hate all such brutal displays, and have not the least interest in knowing how a champion slugger looks, should be respected?

Who does not remember the beautiful and touching hymn beginning

"There is an hour of peaceful rest
To mourning wanderers given?"

The talk about the cholera brings to mind the fact that the author of this hymn, Rev. Wm. B. Tappan, was among its earliest victims when it first made its appearance in the United States. He was, at the time of his death, residing in the little country village destined afterwards to become famous under the name of Wellesley. Gentle-faced and retiring in manner, he doubtless preached many and excellent sermons and did good work in his Master's vineyard; but his name is only held in remembrance through this one brief but classic contribution to our church hymnal, which very likely he wrote off at a sitting.

Will the cholera come to Boston next summer? The doctors differ in regard to the danger, but on the importance of cleaning up and getting ready for it if it should come they are all a unit. Speaking of differing doctors, it is generally supposed that cold weather will kill all the germs, or at least render them dormant till another season; but now for our comfort an eminent medical authority starts up and tells us that so far from this being the case it has been known to rage with the greatest virulence during the Arctic cold of a Russian winter. On the whole, as a white-ribbon friend suggests, would it not be well to have more faith in God and less in the doctors; and while not relaxing a whit in enforcing measures of cleanness, to pray more?

The Traveller calls attention, and most pertinently, to the importance of closing up the saloons in view of the fact that cholera makes its greatest ravages among the intemperate class; from which it certainly follows that if nobody drank or could get the means to drink, we need not have much fear of the dreaded pestilence.

Prof. J.J. McCook, of Hartford, Connecticut, in his recent article in the Forum on "Venial and Intemperate Voters," shows up another side of the drink problem. It is bad enough that the saloon should furnish soil for the seeds of a physical plague, "the pestilence that walketh in darkness," but it is far worse to think of the moral plagues which it brings in its train. We boast of our representative government, but if in one town the votes of 700 out of 1,000 intemperate Americans can be purchased, and 800 out of 1,000, where the voters are both intemperate and hard-drinking; while out of 1,000 temperate voters only 17 can be purchased—a proportion which it is probable holds good in other towns, and other States besides Connecticut—does not the saloon really govern us? and what shall be the end of a saloon-governed people?

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

"It is a common delusion," says the London Hospital, "that beer, being brewed from malt, contains all the nourishing properties of the barley which yields the malt. As a matter of fact, these properties are converted in the process of malting into sugar, which only maintains the warmth of the body and supports respiration, and into alcohol, the tendency of which is to make the body colder and destroy healthy structures."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14, 1892.

More than two thousand ministers who served in the army as chaplains during the late war have signified their intention to attend the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held here next week. They will open sessions with brief religious services, followed by music, recitations, personal reminiscences, etc.

The Treasury Department officials propose utilizing the half-million visitors expected to attend the encampment to get a lot of crisp new money in circulation in place of the old and ragged bills so common in remote sections of the country. With that end in view, it has notified the merchants in Washington that they can have all the one, two and five-dollar notes they want, and requested them to give out nothing but new money in change to the visitors. A circular has also been issued to the visitors, telling them that they can exchange their old money for new, in any amounts, by calling at the cash-room of the Treasury.

About every temperance organization in Washington has adopted plain-spoken resolutions condemning the action of the attorney for the District in compelling prosecuting Attorney Dumont to resign and to dismiss actions he had begun against saloon-keepers for violating the law; and several influential protesting delegations have personally called upon the commissioners of the District of Columbia, who deny that they had anything to do with Mr. Dumont's resignation and say that they do not believe it was brought about by the influence of the liquor-dealers. That sort of talk satisfies no one. The rum-sellers boasted of their power in getting rid of Mr. Dumont several days before the general public had any idea that his resignation would be demanded, and what is worse they actually named his successor, who was not appointed until several weeks afterwards. It is certainly curious how they should know these things so far in advance of the rest of the community, if they did not bring them about. They could hardly have guessed them. This whole matter will be brought to President Harrison's attention as soon as the rush of encampment visitors has passed and he has a little time to devote to looking into it; and if he takes the same view of it that a majority of those not interested in the liquor-traffic do, it is among the probabilities that the attorney for the District may experience how it feels to be compelled to resign, and that his position may be tendered to Mr. Dumont. That would be poetic as well as real justice. The law-abiding people should always stand by and reward, whenever possible, the officials who defy and fight the rum-power—it would increase their number. Those who favor them are always looked out for by the liquor-dealers in the most substantial manner.

Miss Clara Cleghorn Hoffman, President of the Missouri W. C. T. U., delivered an address, Sunday afternoon, on the power of the rum-sellers in our large cities, that attracted much attention and is still being talked about. She argued that it was their influence in controlling votes that gave the saloons a greater power in moulding public policy and public opinion than the churches; and that the policy of allowing the ignorant and vicious of other countries to come here and after a comparatively short residence acquire the privileges of native-born citizens, was to some extent responsible for this condition of affairs. The only effective remedy, in Miss Hoffman's opinion, is to place the ballot in the hands of the good women of the land, which, she thinks, would enable the churches to outvote the saloons and bring about needed reforms.

Yesterday was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the secret order of "Sons of Jonadab" in this city. The event was celebrated by a public meeting, attended by the members of the Sovereign Council of the organization, which held its twentieth annual meeting yesterday. The total membership in this jurisdiction is about 800.

The news that Mrs. Harrison's illness had assumed an alarming turn was sorrowfully received here, where she is dearly loved for her many good traits and Christian virtues.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

ROCKFORD, Ill., Sept. 17, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Marengo, Belvidere and Rockford have been visited. In these places very few of the pastors are indifferent to the lodge, though they may be dumb. Some of them have subscribed for the Cynosure and will begin hereafter to instruct their young people more faithfully. At Marengo I attended the Freeport Presbytery, and one of the pastors presented the N. C. A. request for a delegate to next annual meeting. The paper was promptly tabled, but the brethren were not altogether of one mind, as I learned by conversation afterward. At Belvidere I found Bro. Porter had been before me in some places. A good meeting can at some time be held here when time can be taken to secure co-operation of the men who see truly in spite of lodge fog. Here, at Rockford, outside of the Swedish and German churches, the friends of our cause seem to be few. If the issue could be strongly made, the rally to our banner might be beyond present expectation. I spoke to the large and earnest conference of the Swedish Mission church, of which I will write later more fully.

FROM THE EASTERN AGENT.

ON TRAIN, Sept. 15th, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am returning from a week's work in the city of "brotherly love." Like all large cities, this has its share of the baser element, but I find also many who love the Saviour, whose hearts, made tender by his love, respond to the truth.

The cheerful home of Edwin and Virginia Sellew was open, as usual, for your agent, no grips or passwords being necessary to secure a welcome. I feel it indeed a privilege to visit such friends. Edwin is a minister in the "Society of Friends." As a token of their regard, they have recently elected him editor of their paper, The Friend. A friend who subscribed with me, three years ago, for our paper spoke of reading it with much interest and paid for copies to be sent to Y. M. C. A. reading rooms. When a young man he was induced to become a member of the Masonic lodge. He noticed, in a year's report of the lodge with which he was identified, that $1,500 was expended for lodge suppers, and about $15 for so-called "charity." His dislike for this and kindred organizations has grown with years.

Bro. W. S. Hausman feels specially called upon to bear testimony against the "unfruitful works of darkness," and meets with no little opposition in the church with which he is connected [the Scott M. E.]. But recently Richard Baxter, his class-leader, became much offended when, in giving his testimony, he spoke of the way the Lord had led him out of the Knights of Pythias and I. O. O. F., and asked him not to testify again. Bro. Hausman suggested that it was as proper to tell how the Lord had delivered him from the lodge snare as for others to tell how they had been delivered from a drunkard's grave. A general discussion resulted, it is thought, in much good, Bro. H. feeling especially helped of the Lord in setting forth the truth. As he expects to continue this work, he may write to the Cynosure of his conquests.

On First-day I worshiped with the Orange street meeting of Friends. Their customs and habits seem especially adapted to longevity. There are many aged among them.

Last evening I addressed a goodly number who gathered in the "Heavenly Recruits" church. The members of this church are engaged in mission work among the lowly. They were organized by Frank Haas (a Cynosure subscriber) ten years ago, and have greatly prospered under his administration. He has organized several mission stations where the Gospel of separation is preached. A church paper has recently been started. Several questions were asked at the conclusion of the lecture, and one Mason, attempting a denial, helped to confirm what I had said. A friend accompanying me remarked that I was "making hay while the sun shone," as I took a subscription to the Cynosure on the street-car when returning home.

I received promises of co-operation for future addresses from United Presbyterian ministers on whom I called.

Going down Market street, to-day, I met John Quincy Adams, a classmate when in Wheaton College. Though we had not met for years, our recognition was mutual. Prof. Adams, having completed his course of study in Europe, is now professor in the Philadelphia University. He has maintained his Christian profession, and is opposed to secret societies, as would be only natural considering that he studied at Wheaton College.

Washington is soon to be given over to the G. A. R.'s for their annual gathering. I am returning home to welcome friends who are to visit us from the West. My next trip will (D. V.) be to the Empire State, where I hope to help in working up the State Convention to be held in Walton, Delaware county, next month.

W. B. STODDARD.

REFORM WORK IN KANSAS.

OAKLAND, Kan., Sept. 2, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have opened the campaign, commencing in Jackson county, Kansas. I lectured, in the evening, August 31, in the R. P. church in Denison, before a small audience, on "Some Objections," and on Thursday evening on "The Relation of Freemasonry to Christianity and to Christian Duty." There were more present on the second evening; but neither audience was large. Our R. P. brethren and some others were convicted and confirmed on this question long since.

We should have been glad to reach the ear of many others in this community, but they were not present. At the conclusion, when some questions were asked and remarks made, one said that he had been informed by a Mason that Masons sometimes reject as members persons who are received into the churches. It was given to me for reply. I consider the reply rather easy. Persons are received into the church of Jesus Christ along different lines, and according to different standards, from those employed in receiving members into the lodge. The lodge makes nothing of repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. One who has lived a wicked life may, upon a credible profession of faith in Jesus Christ, be properly received into the church, yet be rejected by the Pharisaical standards of the lodge. He may be rejected by the lodge because he is not twenty-one years of age. Never thus by the church. He may be rejected by the lodge because he is a woman. Never so by the church. He may be rejected by the lodge because he is a poor man. Never so by the church. He may be rejected by the lodge because he has but one leg, one arm, or one eye. Never so by the church. Yes, some persons are received by the church that are rejected by the lodge. It is not because of the higher morality of the lodge, or higher standards of the lodge. It is because of something else.

It is also true that the church rejects some whom the lodge receives and retains. The church does not receive infidels into her communion. Masonry puts no obstacle in her confession of faith in the way of an infidel. Hence she has thousands and tens of thousands of infidels in her communion in good and regular standing, and never were in any other standing because of their infidelity.

We desire the friends of anti-secrecy to bear in mind that I am now in the field for Kansas, Missouri and Iowa. I trust the friends of the cause will be free to write to me about anything of interest to the cause, and especially that they desire a lecture or lectures in their communities. Always address me at Oakland, Kansas. Yours for Christ's cause.

September 12.—I this week enter upon a two or three weeks' tour in Northern Kansas. Let all friends of the cause of anti-secrecy in Iowa, Kansas or Missouri, address me at Oakland. If any one has anything to suggest for the advancement of the cause, let us hear it.

We desire a place for holding a State Anti-secrecy Convention in Kansas. We also desire a place for holding a State Anti-secrecy Convention in Missouri. Let us decide as soon as we can on the places for these conventions, and then fix the time. We can then have a rallying-point and can consult together hopefully for the advancement of the work during the remainder of the year. What do the Missouri friends say about having a State Anti-secrecy Convention at Albany, Mo? When—last of October?

It is definitely decided that the Iowa Anti-secrecy Convention will be held at Marengo, Iowa Co., Iowa, Nov. 15th, 16th. Let the friends of the cause keep time and place in mind, and arrange their work according. Let us have a rousing convention.

In early October Bro. Gault and I will be working together in Southwestern Iowa and Northwestern Missouri.

I hope to be at Conference of our Wesleyan brethren at Willis, Brown Co., Kansas, at the last of September. W. C. PADEN.

FROM THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

AURORA, Neb., Sept. 12, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have read somewhere that the Knights of Reciprocity was the 215th secret order in the United States. Think of 853 secret lodges in Boston, catalogued, against 252 churches, and 2,000 lodges in New York City against less than half as many churches! It has been estimated that at least 5,000,000 of the people of the United States are members of secret orders. And it is safe to say that the expense of running these lodges is double the expense of all the churches. But their tremendous financial drain upon the church and the nation is not the most alarming feature of these secret orders. Still more alarming is the time and interest they subtract from the church, and their influence in side-tracking the church and leading thousands into the fatal delusion that the lodge is "good enough religion" for them.

The multiplication of secret societies is diverting means, thought, attendance and effort from the church of Christ to such an extent as to compel pastors and working Christians to take up the fight against the lodge for dear life.

Yesterday I preached twice in the M. E. church at Loup City, a beautiful county-seat in Central Nebraska, on the Loup river. It has two weak, struggling churches, subsisting on the crumbs that fall from the tables of some half a dozen lodges. Their pastors are devoted, hard-working men, and one, the Baptist, can afford servi-

CORRESPONDENCE.

IS BEING FILLED WITH THE SPIRIT A MATTER OF DISTINCT CHRISTIAN CONSCIOUSNESS?

WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 27, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was Sabbath morning in the heart of the Adirondacks. Late Saturday evening I had been reading the masterly report in the Tribune of the remarkable Northfield discourse by Rev. E. B. Meyer, of London, on "The filling of the soul with the Spirit by faith." (Gal. 3: 14.) I was meditating upon the blessedness of such an experience, and longing for its personal realization, when tired nature fell asleep; and when I awoke after midnight and looked out through the open windows and that pure mountain air, upon the starry heavens and these cloudcapped mountains on either hand, both alike revealers to reason of the eternal power and glory of God, I was still yearning for that spiritual knowledge of Him, implied in the filling of the Spirit of which I had been reading and burning with warm desire. Sleep came again while repeating to myself, as a lullaby, the hymn of Charles Wesley:

"Thou hidden love of God, whose height,
Whose depth unfathomed, no man knows;
I see from far Thy beauteous light;
Inly I sigh for Thy repose;
My heart is pained; nor can it be
At rest till it find rest in Thee!"

Rising early, in the impressive stillness of the Sabbath morning, there came at once to mind the sweet monody of Harriet Beecher Stowe, beginning:

"Alone with Thee—amid the mystic shadows,
The solemn hush of nature newly born;
Alone with Thee in breathless adoration,
In the calm dew and freshness of the morn."

The eternal power and Godhead were clearly seen by the things that are made, and I wondered, loved, adored.

But there was no conscious filling with "the Spirit of truth," after the promise of the Master, "taking of Christ and shewing unto me." The enthusiastic preacher had said: "If you are filled with the Holy Spirit, you will be very sweetly conscious of the all-pervading presence of the Saviour; and the man who is most Spirit-filled is most Christ-filled, for the Holy Ghost reveals the Christ." I was waiting, I was longing for that conscious spiritual revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The dew-fall had been heavy in the night, and every leaf, twig, stem, blade was loaded, so that when the sun, from over the steep ridge of the shaggy mountain, struck the foliage at such an angle as to be reflected upward to my eye, millions of diamond dew-drops flashed before me, some of them very kobinoors of brilliancy, reflective and radiant with the glory of the unseen Creator. Such, I thought at once in adoring admiration, are the elect of God, whose eyes anointed by the Spirit have seen the King in his beauty; whose souls have been irradiated and filled with the Holy Spirit, so as to receive and transmit the spiritual image and lustre of the Lord. And I said to myself, If you may only be a diamond dew-drop, with the heaven-endowed capacity of receiving and reflecting the likeness of God through the indwelling of the Spirit, be not restless to know or to feel it, but be content, all unconsciously, to shine on in the light of God, that others may see and glorify our Father in heaven.

Then I called to mind one of the Scripture sonnets of the beloved and holy professor of Upham, which years ago I had committed to memory, and had made a part of my mental furniture, headed by the words of the apostle:

WE ARE CHANGED INTO THE SAME IMAGE FROM GLORY TO GLORY, EVEN AS BY THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD.

"Upon the morning flower the dew's small drop,
So small as scarcely to arrest the eye,
Receives the rays from all of heaven's wide cope,
And images the bright and boundless sky.
And thus the heart, when 'tis renewed by grace,
Recalled from error, purified, erect,
Receives the image of Jehovah's face,
And, though a drop, the Godhead doth reflect!
It hath new light, new truth, new purity;
A rectitude unknown in former time;
A love, that in its arms of charity
Encircles every land and every clime;
Submission and in God a humble trust,
With quick'ned life to all that's pure and kind and just."

The man of God who penned this sonnet, now passed into the heavens, was the spiritual teacher of many, among them the writer, who owes him, under God, a debt of gratitude that can never be paid. His thoughts and principles have become the property of Christendom, and they have essentially modified the thinking and theology of the age in which we live. To be a tender to such a mind is a privilege and honor of no small account. What would he say to the question, Is being filled with the Spirit a matter of distinct Christian consciousness?

Perhaps it would be what Madam Guyon said to Bossuet, in reply to a similar question from him to her: "I regret that you have to speak of a defect in your personal experience. The theology of the head is often obscure and uncertain without the interpretation of the higher theology of the heart. Those who live by faith, who see God equally in the storm and the sunshine, and who rejoice alike in both, know what I mean; while those who do not thus live can hardly fail to be perplexed." HENRY T. CHEEVER.

A dollar and a half in hand now, for a subscription to the Cynosure, is better than two dollars a year hence.

MRS. ANNA E. STODDARD AT BEREÄ.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After spending five weeks in Vermont, my native State, I returned to Boston on the 2d of September, Mr. Stoddard having returned from his Canada trip a few days previous. My stay in Vermont was made doubly pleasant by the company of our oldest son, W. B. Stoddard, and the evidence of returning health and vigor I could see coming back to him, and which he so much needed to fit him for the fall and winter campaign for the Master. The cause was much strengthened by the work done by him there, and more open doors made for our work in the future. I believe the Lord helped me to do some work for him which will tell for his honor and glory; and, should I return there, I was assured of co-operation and more opportunities to speak for truth and righteousness.

Finding, on my return to Boston, that Mr. Stoddard had decided to go to Berea, Ky., I concluded to accompany him, never having had the pleasure of visiting that place, although I have for a number of years felt a deep interest in the college there, and the grand work being done by John G. Fee and his faithful and courageous wife, with others who stood so nobly by them in those days when peril was on every hand, and life held so lightly by the enemies of the cause of right and truth, in the section round about the now quiet and peaceful Blue Grass region of country.

Although our arrival was at the quiet midnight hour, as we stepped from the train out into the clear moonlight we found some at the depot awaiting us; and a hearty welcome made us feel that we were among friends and at home, while we sojourned among them.

Having been assigned to the home of Bro. J. G. Fee, we wended our way up the hillside and along the street to find "a light in the window for us," and an open door where Mrs. Embree (Bro. Fee's daughter) awaited us. We were tired enough to at once retire to rest, and as the clock chimed one, we laid our heads upon our pillows, only to awaken at a rather late hour to find the sunlight streaming into the window. The two days spent there were not only profitable but exceedingly pleasant, made so by the cordiality of the friends, each one doing all in their power to entertain us. As I listened to Mrs. Fee when she told of the trying scenes through which she passed, in the early period of the school, of the journeys by carriage, with only a child by her side, often taken for a spy, sometimes within the lines of the Confederate forces, then again in the Union lines, sometimes kindly treated, at others refused a place to stay for the night, frequently separated from her husband for months, not knowing his whereabouts, knowing not his fate, he having been carried off by a mob; and all this, and much more, all done for Christ's sake, made me feel how little we who lived in the North, only reading of the results of the battles and a few of the trials, really knew what the late war meant to those who lived South, yet were loyal to the stars and stripes.

To-day, as we look over the college campus, so extensive and so beautiful in its location, with its numerous trees, so grand, making almost a forest, yet not too many to be pleasant, we see the chapel in front, a very pretty wooden structure; a little to the right, and back a ways, the fine recitation building called Lincoln's Hall, built substantially of brick, yet very pretty; then, still farther back, Howard Hall, the dormitory for young men; and circling around the rear of the grounds, the primary, intermediate and grammar school buildings.

To find the dormitory for the young ladies we cross the street and enter a large and pleasant lawn, with shade trees and seats here and there; this is a brick building, large and very nicely arranged; a basement kitchen, and the cellar, divided into compartments for different vegetables, etc.; then a laundry and ironing room. Upstairs is a nice, airy kitchen, with a large dining-room, seating two hundred when necessary; in the front, at either end, are large parlors, and at either side of the front entrance is a sitting-room and the lady principal's office. The dormitory occupies the two upper floors, the lady principal having a sitting-room and sleeping-room, and the teachers their sleeping apartments on the second floor. The building accommodates ninety-six students.

An industrial department is very much needed, both for the white and colored students, so that they may be fitted to enter homes of their own; for by thus fitting them, when they come to settle in a home they will wield a great influence among their own people, which is very much needed, as any one may know if they visit the homes from which the larger proportion of the young women come who attend this college. A regular cooking department should be among the first; then can be added dress-making, plain sewing, and such other industrial branches as shall fit these young women for all the varieties of work which come to all women sooner or later. Some would excel in one branch, others in another, but each would retain enough of all the departments as to be more useful to themselves and a blessing to others.

I was much pleased to meet Prof. Frost, of Oberlin, who has accepted the presidency of Berea, and under his guiding hand I predict for Berea a grander, broader, and more efficient work than she has ever had in the past, great as that has been. I have somewhat I would like to say to the women of the anti-secret cause, but will leave that for the future, or until my return to Boston. Yours for the Master, ANNA E. STODDARD.

LITERATURE.

From the Arnold Publishing Association, Boston, Mass., we have received the following tracts: "Church and State: Their True Relations, by Rev. I. J. Lansing, M. A., author of 'Romanism and the Republic,'" pp. 24. "Rome's Avowed Purpose to Control the State, and Her Success in Great Cities," by Rev. I. J. Lansing, M. A., author of the foregoing, pp. 36. "The Pope as Spiritual and Moral Head of the World," by Chas. J. Little, LL.D., pp. 5. "The Public Schools," by Father McGlynn; including, also, "Illiteracy—Roman Catholic and Protestant Countries Contrasted," by William Wheeler; and "Why the Parochial School Should Have No Abiding-place in the United States," by Dr. Sydney Strong. The work of this publishing house, recently, has been the maintenance of communication with thousands of clergymen, editors and other leaders of public opinion, furnishing them reliable and non-sensational literature upon issues forced upon the country by the Roman Catholic authorities—notably the school question. Its object is to continue to help, in every way possible, the busy men now in the field in their efforts to awaken and unify public sentiment. In addition, it seems needful, to the publishers, to reach out helping hands in every direction to the persons most likely for a long time to be unfavorably affected by the present trend of events—Catholic fellow-citizens and their children. There are Catholics in every locality who deprecate the effort to force their children out of the public schools and to dictate their course in politics and other matters affecting their personal rights. These persons are Americans, in so far, at least, that they submit to interference only under protest. They are for the most part but little known beyond their own localities, but their number is rapidly increasing, and they are on the way to be free men, and will help others to freedom. The publishers greatly desire to reach them, but can only do so through the co-operation of those who are on the ground and are personally concerned for the general good. To this end they desire correspondence with interested parties in relation to prices of publications and proposed plans of operation. The titles of the above tracts, with this explanation, very well indicate their character.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

Our Day for September is replete with interest. Among its more prominent papers are the following: The Workingman as His Own Capitalist—Governmental Supervision of Corporations, by W. O. McDowell, founder of the "American Institute of Christian Philosophy," organizer of the "National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution," and the "Daughters" also; a prominent projector of the "Pan-Republic Congress" and the "Human Freedom League," besides being an arbitrator with T. V. Powderly in the great Southwestern strike. This article is but an expansion of the ideas presented on that occasion to the investigating Congressional committee as to the importance of governmental supervision of all corporations. The American Newspaper Press, from the Nineteenth Century, is an amusing review of certain newspapers in New York City. Joseph Cook contributes a poem, "Flitting Wings," which we have already copied, and in his Boston Monday Lecture deals with Rumselling at the World's Fair, and The Nation as a Partner in the Saloon Business—both capital "hits." The usual departments of Book Notices, Vital Points of Expert Opinion, Questions to Specialists (including Joseph Cook on the value of total abstinence to literary men), and Editorial Notes, are varied, able and attractive. Published at 28 Beacon St., Boston.

The principal articles in Home and Country Magazine for September are: A Sketch of Caroline Scott Harrison, with a Portrait; Instruction of the Blind; An American Garden of Eden, illustrated; Popula Education in Louisiana, illustrated; Economy and Harmony in the Home; The Bloodless Battle of Edinburgh; More Cameos from the Rocky Mountains, illustrated; The Draft Riots of 1863; with stories, statistics, camp-fire notes and news, etc., etc. A genial companion for the fireside. Published at 96-98 Maiden Lane, New York.

Vick's Monthly for September has a magnificent, full-page collection of flowering bulb plants for winter culture for a frontispiece, with numerous other floral illustrations, and a great variety of useful information relating to the culture and care of flowers and plants. Vick's is a most acceptable visitor, and very trustworthy in its instructions for obtaining successful results. Published at Rochester, N. Y.

OBITUARY.

MRS. DELILAH M. HUBBARD, widow of the late Rev. Alfred B. Hubbard, an indefatigable advocate of true religion and Anti-masonic principles, and mother of Hubbard Bros., book publishers, of Philadelphia, Penn., died about the first of September inst., at the home of her niece (Mrs. M. C. Hutchings), near Philadelphia, in the 85th year of her age.

Mrs. Hubbard was a woman of more than ordinary brightness and intelligence, and had retained all her faculties to a wonderful degree until her health failed, some time since, when her mind became affected in consequence.

Her remains were taken to Philadelphia on Wednesday, where funeral services were conducted at her late home, the residence of her son, A. T. Hubbard, Esq. A quartette furnished very impressive music, the opening piece being, "Saviour, more than life to me."

The address of the officiating minister was upon "The Christian's Death," suggested by the text, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

The preacher paid a most beautiful tribute to the memory of the deceased, dwelling upon the devoted and self-sacrificing life which she had led—living for the good of others, forgetful of self; after which the choir sang, "Asleep in Jesus," closing with "When shall we meet again?"

The floral offerings were costly and beautiful, and among them were a lovely cross of tube-roses and other choice flowers, a sickle and sheaf of wheat, and a mantelpiece of most elegant design, in which were the words, "We shall all meet again," she having uttered that sentence to her niece, when she realized that her end was near.

She was laid to rest in the beautiful West Laurel Hill Cemetery. We shall love to think of her as being free from all sorrow and turmoil of earth.

Rest, sainted mother, rest;
Thy long life-work is done;
With folded hands upon thy breast,
And crown of glory won.

Sleep, aged pilgrim, sleep;
No fears disturb thee more;
While loving hearts thy mem'ry keep,
And cherish o'er and o'er.

MRS. S. E. RICHARDS.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla does what no other blood medicine in existence can do. It searches out all the impurities in the system and expels them harmlessly through the proper channels. This is why Ayer's Sarsaparilla is so pre-eminently effective as a remedy for rheumatism.

Do You Want One?

This will be answered by every lady who reads the advertisement of The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. in the affirmative, and thousands will have one, thus making home more beautiful and cheerful. The Chautauqua Ladies' Desk is not only beautiful but convenient, affording a safe place for keeping correspondence, pen, ink and writing material out of baby's reach, but room also for not a few choice books which are in constant demand in the home.

It was designed to fill just this place and will be found just as useful in its place as has become Sweet Home Soap to the thousands of consumers thereof in the land.

The manufacturers of Sweet Home Soap are continually giving their patrons surprises, offering bargains not excelled, seldom equaled.

The Chautauqua Piano Lamp won much fame for this liberal company, but we are mistaken in our calculations if the Chautauqua Ladies' Desk does not eclipse the Lamp's fame and surpass it in number ordered.

By using Hall's Hair Renewer, gray, faded or discolored hair assumes the natural color of youth, and grows luxuriant and strong, pleasing everybody.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1892.

O love the Lord, all ye his saints: for the Lord preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.—PSALM 31:23.

THE "AFRO-AMERICAN LEAGUE"

is a society formed among the colored people in the United States and designed for their mutual protection. In unity is strength; but no cause founded in evil, and darkening its career with deliberate outrage and murder, can ever hope to prosper and win final success. Hence the honest American citizen will look with abhorrence upon this proposition from G. H. Refro (a bachelor of laws), in the African Methodist Episcopal Review: "To make the idea of a protective league effective, we should bind the conscience of every member with an ironclad oath and make the organization as secret as death. Thousands of our brethren live in that section of our land which suggests the return of the dark ages and the revival of the Inquisition. These are the ones that must be reached. They would hesitate in open action where exposure means death, and where nothing beneficial is to be gained. Let a protective league pursue its course silently and cautiously and covertly in their midst until it penetrates into every village and hamlet in the land, bearing as its watchword, 'Protection and Defence.' Thus can be gathered thousands into the fold, until the whole territory of tyrannic sway is embraced. A gigantic organization of this sort would be prepared to demand and maintain equal rights." This is all wrong. If the Southern slaves, before the Rebellion, had formed such a diabolical scheme, it is probable that they would still be slaves, or else exterminated. They patiently waited then for the glory of God to be manifested in their deliverance, and were signally emancipated. Cannot they again wait for the interference of the Almighty to set them free from their oppressors? There is no freedom in an oath-bound secret society. Mark that.

ANTI-SECRECY AT OCEAN GROVE.

Ocean Grove, N. J., besides being a popular seaside summer resort for idlers and invalids—the former devotees of fashion and the latter seekers for health—is also a religious camping-ground for the M. E. church of the United States. During the recent "season" thousands and thousands of visitors sought its salubrious atmosphere and natural attractions for recreation and worship with (it is claimed) the best effect in bringing sinners into the fold and largely increasing the membership of the Methodist church.

After the manner of Lake Bluff, Chautauqua and other educational and religious centers, Ocean Grove had a five days' session of the National Temperance Society, in which several distinguished speakers participated, including Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler and a number of pronounced prohibitionists. The speakers were consistent in blaming the newspapers for willfully misrepresenting the temperance people, and in urging the workers to be careful about opposing Christian churches, which were ordained to be lights to the world and the leaders in all true reforms.

An intelligent correspondent of the United Presbyterian calls attention to an immense Bible-class which formed an important element in the religious work at the Grove, and was conducted by Dr. Hanlon. "From 1,500 to 2,000 men and women meet every Sabbath afternoon," she writes, "to study the Sabbath-school lesson and answer questions put in the question-box. One seldom sees a more intelligent class. It is composed of ministers of all denominations, professors in colleges, teachers in select and public schools, home and foreign missionaries, editors, authors, and men in all the trades. Once in awhile a question is asked that provokes discussion, and it is amusing to see how well the doctor manages to harmonize their views, without settling the question. One Sabbath the class was trying to find the reason why so few men attend church. Two questions were put in the box that Dr. H. would have gladly passed over. One was, 'Have secret societies anything to do in keeping men from church?' The doctor was excited, and said,

'I would not for a moment compare the society with the church. Years ago I joined the Masons, but I have not met with them for a long time.' A brother who had tried to speak during the discussion made another effort, and succeeded in making himself understood. In a full, strong voice he asked Dr. H. how long it was since he joined the Masons. Dr. H. replied, 'Thirty-two years,' and immediately asked, 'How long since you joined the Masons, Bro. Osborn?' The reply was, 'Thirty-six years ago; but after I was converted I had no use for such societies, and I left them. We are commanded to come out from them and be separate.' These searching words caused a ripple. After adjournment, men and women stood around in little groups discussing the matter. Some of the men were excited, but the women evidently enjoyed it. The light is breaking. Men who love the Lord are to be no longer lodge-ridden. Perhaps this great class of thinkers is brought together to help solve the knotty social problems of the age."

Well, if judgment against the lodge is to begin in the house of God, there is no more promising starting point than in the Methodist Episcopal church, which is probably more thoroughly honeycombed with Freemasons than any other denomination on earth. It is certain, also, that if American Methodism shall decide to separate itself from the evil lodge influences that have well-nigh destroyed its spirituality and usefulness, it will not be long before all other Christian churches can be led out of the miserable murkiness which secret societies have cast about them. And then, as our Corresponding Secretary aptly says, "The mission of the N. C. A. will be happily ended."

A WEEK WITH THE KNIGHTS AT DENVER.

Reports of the latest conclave of Knight Templar Masons have been slow to tell us of any feature of the Denver meeting in August, but its glitter, parade and pomp. Whatever could advertise the order with men of worldly spirit has been said; but other facts, which are always found in company with lavish expenditure of money in sensual indulgence, are quietly suppressed. Say nothing, is the world's rule, that shall humble men's pride, tarnish their gay banners, or put them in mind that they are vile sinners who must give account to God of their folly.

The wholesale desecration of the Sabbath is one of these unwelcome facts, and probably the most obvious one. These Masons of high degree, who call themselves "chivalrous" and "Christian," are leading all the other secret orders in this fearful crime against the social peace and order of the nation. Our Sabbath reform movement cannot overlook this matter.

Another fact is briefly mentioned in the Denver Times in summing up the hotel profits of conclave week. The reporter of that paper found some figures that the Times declares are "astounding." They are that seven hotels in from four to five days cared for 25,000 people and took in $100,000. In several instances the bar receipts are given; in others it is only said the bar did a "great business," or "a lively business." Where the figures are given we find that the bar receipts average 16 per cent of the whole hotel business, or $16,000 for the 25,000 people accommodated; and when we remember that a considerable portion of the excursion parties were women, the amount of drinking was no light thing. If the increase of saloon profits for that week could be thrown into the account, the American public would find that this "chivalric and Christian" order of Masons is still playing the part of deceiver, as when they visited Chicago in 1880, and strewed the lake shore with evidence of their licentious revelry.

BOOMING PAGANISM.

Dr. David Swing, we are informed, is not a Freemason. Yet, not long ago, he announced (says the Christian Instructor) "that Epictetus and other pagans were exemplars of the Christian graces; that Jesus Christ simply preached natural religion; that the Shorter Catechism, in the answers to the questions, 'What is Sanctification?' and 'What is adoption?' indorsed the natural religion of paganism." We are very glad that Dr. Swing is not a Freemason; but we should like him better if he did not preach so much like one.

It is very evident that all the Freemasons are not members of that fraternity. Hundreds, like Dr. Swing, are "duly and truly prepared in their hearts" to join the Masons and advocate the principles of the order. It requires a complete surrender of all vital Christianity, and the man who is more of a Mason than he is of a Christian will be more at home in the lodge than in an assembly of the saints.

TRUE TO ITS MISSION.

The Salvation Army originated in a desire to raise the humblest, vilest and totally neglected sinners from their lost and hopeless condition to purity and heirship in the kingdom of heaven. It has done a wonderful work in this direction among the depraved in numerous countries, and it is still capable of performing work equally good and of a similar kind in other lands, as well as in those where it has firmly established its camps. The soldiers in this army deserve the kindest consideration for the willingness and the energy with which they pursue their work among the lowly, being fully consecrated to it, and winning favor among nearly all classes of religious people by the fervor of their devotion. Most of the opposition with which it has had to contend, aside from that with which all true Christian work is confronted, has arisen from the uncouthness or singularity of its methods; but even this prejudice is rapidly wearing away, and the Salvation Army is now but seldom reproached for its peculiarities.

Older and wiser Christians can tell us, with words of warning, that there is danger that certain religious sects, starting out in the panoply of Christianity, like the Salvation Army, to teach its simple doctrines in the spirit of humility and earnestness, and having its pious works graciously acknowledged and accepted by the Lord, no sooner become popular than they are apt, likewise, to become corrupted by various innovations and complications, which, like parasites in vegetation, tend to destroy their usefulness. Thus the love of pleasure and lodge influence has led to a great deterioration in the ranks of some very (numerically) strong and (financially) powerful denominations, which have therefore lost favor with God, having the form but retaining little of the spirit of Christian organizations. The reader will readily recognize the denominations to which this reference applies.

We are thankful that this charge cannot yet be made against the Salvation Army, and hopeful that it never will be. If it is, and sustained, the Army will lose its spirituality, and become, like Samson, shorn of its strength. As one may expect from such an organization, it is opposed to the folly and wickedness of secret societies.

"ROYAL ARCANUM."

One of the prominent insurance orders of the country bears this pretentious title—meaning a kingly, regal, princely, noble, magnificent secret and mystery, from arca, a box or chest.

The order has one or more typographical organs, one at Wooster, Ohio, which rejoices in the name of The Royal Arcanum Journal. It is true to its name, zealous for the order, and jealous of everything that opposes it. Its August number devotes a leading editorial to "Lodge Charity," which is merely a very uncharitable attack upon the Cynosure, and a glorification of the secret fraternal orders in general, and of the Royal Arcanum in particular.

The Cynosure's offense was in giving publicity to the following: "Benevolent" orders have recently been in session in various parts of the country, and some statistics relating to their membership and finances have been given to the public. As usual, the amounts of money expended for lodge charity bear but a light proportion to the sums in their treasuries and lodge expenses. In other words, the rank and file members pay a heavy tax to 'run the machine.'"

Take the reports of any grand lodge or other supreme secret organization in the United States, and they will verify our statement.

The Cynosure is not the only one that has discovered this disproportion in lodge statistics. Rev. B. Carradine has noticed the same thing: "From the United States statistics of 1883," he said in his admirable sermon on secret societies, "I get this: A fraternity of 550,000 members received $5,000,000; $2,000,000 of that were given to the poor and the sick, the afflicted and the troubled, and it took over $3,000,000 to meet their (the lodges') expenses, so that it cost that fraternity $3 to give away $2."

Our office library shelves contain much of such evidence, which is not very valuable testimony in favor of "lodge charity"—testimony printed at the expense of the lodges themselves, and therefore legitimate and ostensibly trustworthy.

We do not class the Royal Arcanum (at present) with the "Iron Hall" and kindred endowment societies, whose coffers have overflowed into the pockets of their officers and robbed the unsuspecting novices that "put their trust in 'princes'" and other high-titled nabobs of these secret business associations. But every time one of these endowment companies with a lodge attachment discloses its true character, the Royal Arcanum and similar "charitable" institutions must suffer a marked depreciation in the minds of the public who are not permitted to know how these things are worked, unless they pay the price of admission to the kingly mysteries.

The Royal Arcanum Journal complains that the Cynosure, a few years ago, attacked that order for its secret operations. Well, the secrecy of the Royal Arcanum is no more credit to it than that of the Iron Hall. It is the secrecy of these and other "benevolent" institutions that casts a doubt upon their benevolence. Why don't they come out openly and declare that if the public will unite with them in their insurance scheme, everybody who joins them will be benefited? No, that would never do. The select few only are admitted into its mysterious realms, taught to prattle Arcanum stuff and nonsense, curve fingers in a peculiar manner, and call themselves "brothers." Therein lies the secrecy and kingly mystery. The public may starve; but the initiated is welcome to all the "lodge charity" for which he regularly pays,—if he can get it.

It is not long since that in this same Royal Arcanum Journal there was printed a shockingly blasphemous paraphrase of one of David's most devout Psalms. The original is full of grandeur, laud and honor to Jehovah; the paraphrase was a glorification of the Royal Arcanum.

"By their fruits ye shall know them"—these "charitable," "benevolent" mysteries. They come into the sunlight with their pretentious claims to the glory of men, clad in their gay regalia and flying banners; but their kingly mysteries in the "closed chest"—the less said about them the better. No Christian, whatever church members may do, can fellowship with their works of darkness.

MASONIC KNOWLEDGE.

"The want of Masonic knowledge and information among a large majority of the membership" (writes Richard Vaux, Committee on Masonic Correspondence for the Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Pennsylvania), "is a serious condition. Of course it follows that the brethren do not have a proper appreciation of what Masonry is, and of what its objects and aims are. That want of 'correct and efficient work' produces 'a lack of interest in the members, and they only attend the lodges on special and festive occasions,' goes without saying. It is the necessary result of so unfortunate a cause."

The lodge with all its symbols is only the form of the Masonic thought. The affectation of possessing a secret (which is no longer a secret) is a childish and mischievous weakness. The objects Masons profess to pursue are brotherly love, relief and truth; surely the pursuit of these objects cannot need any secret instructions, rites, or traditions. In spite of the great parade made in Masonic publications about the science and learning peculiar to the craft, who knows that the discovery of any new scientific facts or principles can be claimed for the fraternity? Are even well-known and long-established truths familiar to them, and made the objects of study in the lodges? Nothing of the kind. The truth is, we obtain neither science nor learning from a Mason, as a Mason. The order forbids religious and political discussion in its meetings, and yet pretends that mankind is indebted to it for human progress, and that, were it abolished, mental darkness would overshadow the world. Nonsense! If the highest knowledge now possessed by men were taught in the lodge, it would not be Masonic knowledge, but diffused among all studious men. Under its present conditions it is useless to expect or believe that modern Masonry will ever reach that standard of knowledge needed to make it really the instructor of mankind.

"Oh, but (says the Mason) the knowledge we need in the lodge is not to be imparted to those outside of it. It relates to the work of the fraternity." The work of the lodge, as is well known, is both "written and unwritten," but is printed in books and distributed in every part of the world, to be read of all men. It is in these publications that the public learns the deceptiveness of the rites themselves, designed to excite curiosity without ever satisfying it; the puerility of the symbolism; the paltriness of the secrets imparted to the novice in all the degrees, and his ill-concealed disgust when he has learned it all. This is the work which Mr. Vaux deems it essential that every Mason should know, and for which knowledge he makes so strong a plea.

A NEW ARMY.

The "church militant" comes now to the front with a new side corps, known as "The Army of Heaven at Hand," and having for its motto the words, "Prayer and Politics." It is described as a religio-political combination, and had its origin in California.

"Its aim"—so runs the press description—"is to enlist church people more in the active work of the politician, thus arraying them against the 'bummer' element in politics and the methods of the present day practical politician, and also to purify politics by the injection into the campaigns of more faith and prayer. Large delegations of people representing certain principles are to meet and pray for the success of their party. Incidentally, by the pursuance of this method all that is rancorous, bitter and personal will be swept away and all campaigns will be carried on in a spirit of brotherly kindness. The big political prayer meetings will always end with the sincere expression, 'Thy will, not mine, be done, O Lord,' and each of the candidates will be fighting, not for personal aggrandizement and gain and for the emoluments of office, but for principle. In fact, if it can be demonstrated to the defeated candidate that he has represented wrong principles, he will rejoice more than anyone else over his defeat."

Notwithstanding that its object has plausibility, Christians will hesitate to indorse this "army" when they learn that it begins its work of reform by dethroning the Holy Trinity and creating another that is socialistic and blasphemous. Like Freemasonry, it is religious, but not Christian; and it would not be surprising to learn that it is a Masonic institution in toto.

—The rumsellers appear to have captured the Knights of Pythias at the recent session of the Supreme Lodge in Kansas City, Mo. A warm discussion of the question of admitting liquor-sellers and bar-tenders to the order, was compromised by a decision to refer the matter to the different State lodges. If a liquor-seller is barred out of the lodges in one State, he may unite, by letter, with a lodge in some other State where the exclusion rule has not been adopted. The rum power has won in this case.

—Prevalence of cholera in several European countries has brought not only hundreds of victims to the grave, but it has also brought to light the unhallowed rapacity of one or two ocean steamship companies, who for money have filled their steerages and cabins with infected passengers and attempted to land them in this country. Fortunately the United States government, with the State and municipal rulers at the principal seaports, have promptly resented this horrible attempt to bring the pestilence into this country. There has been turmoil and trouble, at times, on this account, and in spite of all precautions, some infection has found its way into New York City. This promptitude of the authorities, however, has prevented any important spread of the plague; and the wise suggestion to lay an embargo on all foreign immigration until the danger is past will probably be adopted. The demand for such action is imperative.

ces only every other Sabbath. The main influence of the town is on the side of lodge idolatry and infidelity. The only hope for Loup City is a revival that will unite the churches, weed out the lodge members, and draw the line between the lodge and the church so that fellowship between them will be impossible.

I was kindly entertained at the houses of Elder John Hogue, Judge Geo. Bent and Bro. L. W. Chandler, pastor of the M. E. church. Judge Bent is the youngest brother of the late Mrs. Jonathan Blanchard, and was for many years pastor of the Congregational church at Burr Oak, Iowa, and Seneca, Kan. He is now administering the law as judge of the county court. Father Hogue is a Wesleyan Methodist and a veteran in the anti-secrecy reform. Many years ago he arranged meetings for Edmond Ronayne and Bro. J. P. Stoddard, in Indiana, near La Otto. He and his wife are in feeble health. They have a lawsuit, involving many thousands of dollars, soon to be decided in the Supreme Court of the State. It appears that a bank in Loup City, on the point of failure, and officered by lodgemen, elected Father Hogue Vice President, and voted him a share of the stock while he was East on a visit. Then the bank broke, and the scheme was to draw on Father Hogue's hard-earned accumulations to meet the losses. He proposes, in case he loses or gains, to write up the case as an illustration of the unscrupulous tactics of lodge members in their dealings with those outside.

At the United Presbyterian Synod, last week, at Kearney, I was kindly welcomed and given the opportunity of presenting the anti-secret cause. Several of their pastors subscribed for the Cynosure, and others are old subscribers. Many of them invited me to visit their congregations in the interests of the cause, which I have arranged to do before our Wahoo convention. Rev. J. M. French, of Omaha, has promised to address our convention.

There certainly never was a time when the churches were as ripe for this agitation as now. The law of self-preservation is driving many pastors to openly denounce the lodge. Rev. C. A. Mastin, a presiding elder of the M. E. church, and residing at Holdridge, Nebraska, preached a strong sermon against secret orders recently in the M. E. church at Minden. The pastor of this church, Rev. D. F. Rodabaugh, has also preached on the same subject, and traced the lodges in their origin to the secret Baal worship of Samaria. Rev. G. W. Wilson, of Jacksonville, Ill., an evangelist of the M. E. church, held meetings at Wahoo, Neb., for several weeks last winter. In almost every meeting he denounced the lodges unsparingly as the great enemy of religion. The M. E. church in which his meetings were held was full of lodge members, yet the interest increased at each meeting, and at the close he was urged to return.

Rev. H. L. Powers, pastor of the M. E. church, Papillion, Neb., who years ago helped us in National Reform conventions, in Iowa and Missouri, said recently that the lodges were a great hindrance to the growth and spirituality of the church. The time is certainly near when the tide of Christian sentiment will set in against the lodges, and there will be no neutral ground on this question.

As the Baptist pastor at Loup City told me yesterday, the lodge power must be broken or the life of the church will be imperiled.

THE IOWA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION TO BE POSTPONED.

FAIRFIELD, Iowa, Sept. 13, 1892.

Rev. W. I. Phillips—

DEAR BRO:—The probability is that the time of our State meeting will be changed from the 8th and 9th of November to the 15th and 16th (a week later). Perhaps you have received such notice from Bro. Robb (Secretary of the Iowa State Association, opposed to secret societies) by this time.

We expect Bro. Paden to co-operate with us. I am in close correspondence with him.

Bro. Robb will no doubt furnish you with items concerning our work. We desire to make the State meeting a success, and will gladly accept your assistance. Yours, L. MENDENHALL, President Iowa State Association.

THE HOME.

HYMNS THAT MOTHER SUNG.

Through the changing scenes of life,
The shadowed vale of smiles and tears,
Where all is lost within the mist
That hides the bygone years,
Some strains there are that linger still,
And many hearts no longer young
Are thrilled with joy again to hear
The hymns that mother sung.

We used to gather at the hearth
When darkness overcame the day
And, dreamily, as children will,
We'd watch the shadows play;
And sitting by the glowing fire,
As to and fro the kettle swung,
We learned the songs we've always loved,
The hymns that mother sung.

We seem to hear again her voice,
So long remembered, clear and sweet
As when, in days of long ago,
We sat at mother's feet;
And gazing upward on the wall,
Where dearest father's picture hung,
We thought he smiled, for he, too, loved
The hymns that mother sung.

On many snowy wintry nights,
When all without was cold and drear,
We've clustered close around her chair
In happiness and cheer.
No more for us the glowing fire,
No more the cricket's chirping tongue,
And never more on earth we'll hear
The hymns that mother sung.

To them we owe our happy home.
Praise be to God who reigns above,
For keeping ever bright and clear
The lessons learned in love.
Outliving sorrows, bearing hope;
The dear old songs have ever clung
And never can the heart forget
The hymns that mother sung.

THREE LITTLE WORDS AND A SHRUG.

"Don't ask me." Mrs. Patterson smiled significantly into her friend's blue eyes, then she gave her shoulders a little shrug.

"But if you know anything against Mrs. Bryce you ought to tell me, Mabel."

Hannah stood still by the door swinging her garden hat with an impatient hand.

"I shall not say another word," said the little woman in the sewing-chair.

"O, tell your mother I expect her over to supper to-night. Mr. Patterson will go to meeting with us."

The tall girl by the door, seeing that this was all she was likely to receive in the way of information, went slowly off; by the time she had reached home her mind being quite made up.

"I would not rent the cottage to Mrs. Bryce, father," she said, going in by the side door to his small writing-room.

"Mrs. Patterson has told you enough to prove her an undesirable tenant, eh?"

Mr. Prescott dropped his pen and glanced keenly at his daughter.

"I am afraid so," she said, reluctantly, and twirling the string of her hat absently around her fingers. Suddenly she started, threw the hat on the table and sat down by her father's side.

"Father, would it be a very serious thing if this rent were not paid promptly?" her eyes pleading that the answer may be "No."

"It would make such a difference in our income that I should not be warranted in assuming a risk," said her father, gravely. "Pine Cottage must help us pay our next year's bills, Hannah."

"Then the letter refusing to rent it to her ought to be sent at once," said his daughter, with decision. She did not even voice her regret that the gentle widow who had come to Maybury, bringing her little daughter Dorothy to win all their hearts, had proved in some mysterious way unworthy of trust. She had only been there a day, yet Hannah had begun to love her and to hope for future friendship. It was now all over—the delightful prospect of having them for permanent neighbors—and at once her father and she must be on the lookout for another prospective tenant.

Mr. Prescott did not give himself the trouble to inquire into the nature of Mrs. Patterson's verdict. As she had been at the same boarding-school with the applicant for his house and at one time had visited in her family, she surely ought to know something as to the reliability of the woman. That Mrs. Patterson could not know about the little widow's hope of becoming a resident at Maybury, since, for private reasons, Mr. Prescott preferred not to let it be generally known that Pine Cottage was on the market, he did not now stop to consider.

He pushed away his writing and drew up a fresh sheet of paper, and Hannah went off to her household duties.

"I feel," said Mrs. Patterson, on the way to church meeting that evening, "that we cannot do enough, Mrs. Prescott, to hold up our pastor's hands in the parish work."

Mrs. Prescott gave a sigh. She was one of those weak Christians who lament in sackcloth and ashes their inability; meanwhile, the work goes steadily on without a finger's help from them.

"I shall throw myself into this new work he is opening up for us in the Mission chapel," continued Mrs. Patterson, in her most energetic way, "and shall begin to-morrow to canvass a district."

"You do so much," said Mrs. Prescott, helplessly.

"O, no," protested Mrs. Patterson, yet immensely gratified; and she passed into the lecture-room with a serene expression of duty well done and took her seat, settling back to well-earned enjoyment of the service.

"The tongue is a little member; behold how great a fire it kindleth." For hearts made tender by communings with the Divine Giver of all grace, their pastor's words were full of earnest, solemn inspiration as he opened up the text to them. Hannah, in her seat back of the piano, weary and depressed, bent her head upon her hand to lose herself in the words that seemed meant for her. They burned themselves into her soul, attacking, like tongues of fire, all idle or unkind speech that thronged her memory.

"Help me, O my Father," she prayed, "so to watch the door of my lips that nothing evil can issue from them."

"What a beautiful exhortation!" breathed Mrs. Patterson, as they came out, "so spiritual and inspiring."

At this moment a woman was sitting in her widowhood, her head bent over a letter in her clasped hands and sobbing as if her heart would break.

"God forgive me; I thought I could bear anything, but I was so sure of this. O, my Dorothy!"

The letter read:

"MY DEAR MADAM: It will be impossible for me to rent you the cottage under consideration, and I hasten to inform you without delay. Trusting that you will be able to secure a house that will please you, I am, Yours respectfully,
"ROBERT PRESCOTT."

"Maybury."

The child in the bed in the corner stirred fretfully and murmured in her sleep. The mother shivered at the sound. "She would have been so happy and strong there," she sobbed. "She was so delighted that we were going, and I could have opened my little school and had a chance of life for us two. But now—O God, help me, for I know not where to turn."

"Hannah," said Mrs. Patterson one morning, a month or so after, as the two were busy over the intricacies of a new knitting stitch, "what has changed you so lately? Confess, what have I done?"

"Mabel," the girl dropped the skein of wool she was winding and impulsively seized the strip of fancy work hanging from her friend's fingers, "I cannot rid myself of Mrs. Bryce. I am haunted by her constantly."

"Mrs. Bryce?" cried Mabel, with a laugh. "Silly child, you are too impressible; the idea of taking such a violent fancy to a woman you have met but once."

"It is not a mere fancy," cried Hannah earnestly. "Her gentle face keeps appearing to me; and always reproachfully. Mabel, why isn't she a trustworthy person? She ought to be with such a face."

"She is trustworthy enough," said Mrs. Patterson, carelessly. "Don't ask me anything more, Hannah. You are positively disagreeable now."

"Is trustworthy?" began Hannah, springing to her feet, her blue eyes flashing. "Why did you insinuate to the contrary, then, when I asked you about her?"

"I didn't say anything," cried Mrs. Patterson, in an injured way. "Do stop, Hannah, you put me out. One, two, three, four!"

"And you can go on counting those miserable stitches," cried Hannah, a storm of remorse making havoc with her naturally sweet temper, "just as if a woman who needed our help as we need hers had not been turned away. You don't know what you have done, Mabel, by that shrug."

Mrs. Patterson dropped her work. "I'm sure I didn't say anything," she repeated, frightened at the storm she had raised.

"Say!" repeated Hannah in scorn, "if you only had put your dislike into words, it would have been weak beside the doubt you raised in me." And then she related the result of her question.

Mrs. Patterson sank back in her chair and covered her face with her hands. Like a flash it was revealed to her that in no more cruel way could a woman work ill to her neighbor than by the insinuatingly gentle manner and significant shrug that refuses to put into words aught to that neighbor's hurt.

"I only thought that you were taking an immense fancy to Lucy Bryce," she confessed, "and I love you so I suppose it hurt me, Hannah. I don't like her pinching ways and her queer ideas about training Dorothy, but I never thought of anything like this. What have I done, O Hannah! And I call myself a Christian," she moaned.

"We will repair this evil," said Hannah, quickly, and bending to drop a kiss on her friend's bowed head, "for father hasn't rented the cottage—and it will teach us both a lesson."

But it was too late to give a helping hand to the widow and her child. The letter dispatched in the next mail from Maybury was, after long delays, answered from a Western city.

"My Dorothy is in the green fields that the Father has prepared for his little ones," wrote the crushed mother. She longed for the sweet air and a life with the birds and flowers and he has given it to her. She died one week ago here, where I came to be with relatives, as I could find no other place. God has my treasure, and will comfort me in his own time."

Only three little words and a shrug, but they made two Christian women jealously watchful for all future time lest any wrong impression should be given by them that they would not be willing to express in words. And they became so habitually careful of the reputations of others that the Maybury church to which they belonged, following their Christ-like example, worked together in the spirit of unity that held up most effectively their pastor's hands in the parish work.—Congregationalist.

TRAINING FOR BACHELORS OR HUSBANDS.

"In the future there are two or three women who are going to rise up and call me blessed," remarked the mother of three boys.

"Two or three special ones, do you mean?"

"Yes, indeed, I mean just that. I have no ambition to be a benefactor to the general public. And I don't know, by the way, that I have any special kindly feeling to the two or three women I spoke of. It isn't for the sake of my affection toward them I'm earning their blessing now."

"Well, will you kindly tell me, how are you earning it?"

"Why, I'm training my three sons to sew on their own buttons. They are beginning to do it of their own accord. They don't follow me about the house now, with a coat in one hand and a button in the other. They go and get a needle and thread and sew the button on. They've found out it saves time and strength and words."

"It seems cruel to make boys sew on their own buttons."

"Cruel? It's kind! Those boys won't always have me to sew on buttons for them. They would be badly off indeed if they had to do it some time, and didn't know how. It's right they should learn to do such things for themselves. A boy should be taught to make his own bed, put away his own clothing, and sweep and dust his room occasionally, and not always expect an overworked mother or younger sister to do such work for him. I think a boy ought not to be entirely ignorant even of cooking. It might be a great advantage to him some time to be able to make a good cup of coffee, broil a chop, or cook potatoes. Some people profess to think that such knowledge comes by nature; but I believe it's oftener the case that if not learned early, it has to be bought of bitter experience, and we all know experience is a high-priced teacher to employ."

"Then it's for the boys' own sake, after all, and not for the sake of their future wives, that you let them sew on their own buttons?"

"Why, of course! But sometimes I do think how deliciously some girl will be surprised. When one of those boys finds a button off his shirt, he won't stand and declare there hasn't been one on in that place for at least six months. He will know better. He will only say meekly: 'How careless I am! My dear, will you kindly hand me my little button-box out of the front right hand corner of the second drawer? I must sew this button before I can put on the garment.'"—Harper's Bazar.

UP TO THE HILLS.

O hills that lie so restful, blue and calm
Within the circle of God's sheltering arm,
I fain would leave the busy world below,
And scale thy heights aflame with sunset glow;
For like a pictured gleam of Paradise
The purpling amethyst and ruby dyes
Half veil and shade the rich deep green which lies
On wooded knolls that fair and stately rise.

O hills of life, thy paths are rugged, sore,
Rising to cloud-tipped summits evermore;
We leave the valleys lying cool and sweet
And strain to reach the heights with eager feet.
Below the vale is pleasant, dreamy, soft,
Tempting the tired soul to linger oft,
Beckoning the weary head to pause and rest
Each throbbing temple on her scented breast.

So oft I turn, O stately hills, to thee;
With longing eyes thy summits faint I see.
Up thy green views, outlined by swelling crest,
I trace the glorious harbinger of rest.
Methinks the clouds which lie full soft and fair
Above thy brow, like palms outstretched in prayer,
May be a benediction from the skies
To bid our hearts in silent praise arise.

TEMPERANCE.

"THE NEW DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE."

[From the Fourth of July Address by Jno. C. Woolley, at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, New York, 1892.]

[Concluded.]

And the mother's cry goes on, up to the powers and high places of state and nation, and refuses to be silent because of the slaughter of her children, and the crowd says, "Aha!" Women organize and ask for champions or suffrage to defend against the saloon, and religious newspapers, which claim to represent the better sentiment of the community, say, "Aha!" Great churches sit in convention, consider the saloon, and say, "It cannot be legalized without sin," but the Christian voter goes on his way, treating the matter as a ghastly joke, and says, "Aha!" and the saloon-keeper answers him back, "Aha!" and the two deposit in the ballot-box duplicate expressions of opinion on public affairs, and the devil says, "Aha!" The people petition the legislature for a hearing on the subject of the saloon, and the legislators, servants of theirs, say, "Aha!" An office of great trust and power is to be filled; the people say, "Let us have no man who is friendly to our enemy," and the caucus says, "Aha!" and names a man who offers wine to every guest, and scorns the God who says, "Look not upon the wine." Christian people ask their leaders to stand for the outlawry of the liquor traffic, and the man from California says, "We make better wine than Jesus made at Cana;" his party catches the jest, and says, "Aha!" A town adopts prohibition; the saloon across the way says, "Aha!" for while the imaginary line that bounds the town will stop the officer, it does not stop the boy who is baited by the drink. The city makes a patrol limit; the saloon within the line says, "Aha!" and puts a placard on the bar,

"Remember the patrol limit; take home a bottle." And the bottle goes home, and from some cranny in the wretched place peers out upon the sorrowful wife and children and says, "Aha!" The state declares for prohibition, and the federal government says, "Aha!"

I am not here to teach you history; but I wish to recall the fact that in the confederation of the States they gave the government control of commerce with foreign countries and between States, and that was wise; but the States would not have given up that power if they could have foreseen that in the future it would be used to hurt their people and make local self-government a lie; but strange to say, that time has come and that event has happened, happens now.

There is a tradition in this country that the people rule, and that public officers are public servants. A citizen of Kansas who believed this, applied to the collector of internal revenue for the names of men in that State who had paid to the federal government the retail liquor dealer's special tax for that year. The collector answered him, "I cannot give you the names." "Then," said the fanatic, "let me see the books. I have a right to." "So you have," said the collector, "but it would do you no good. I am instructed by the department to keep the books so that they will not convey to you any information. It would not be right for the government to issue licenses to those men and then furnish evidence to detect them in the crime of using them. Do you see? Aha!"

Again, Iowa has a prohibitory law, and under it has made good progress against the saloons in that State. Marshalltown, one of her finest cities, was free from the drink. Barnum's circus came there to exhibit, and a great crowd attended; many men were drunk. Investigation showed that the Chicago dealer had shipped to Marshalltown a carload of whisky and a carload of beer. The beer was in bottles packed in straw in a car, and the whisky was in bottles nailed up in little wooden boxes. The whisky seller denied the authority of Iowa to prevent shipping whisky into the State in that way, and on a trial in the Supreme Court of the United States it was held that these were original packages within the meaning of the revenue law; that it was legal to ship them into Iowa, and by a necessary inference to sell them there, and Iowa stood dismayed at her helplessness, until Congress said to the States, in substance, "I am the liquor dealer's friend, and shall give him safe conduct within your boundaries with his wares, so that as between you two there shall be a fair field and no favor. Catch him if you can; Aha!"

Again, in the capital of Iowa to-day, there sat, or may have sat, an officer of yours and mine, the collector of internal revenue for that district, when a man entered or may have entered and asked for the collector, who, greeting him, said: "What is your name?" "My name is Aaronsdorf." "Where do you live?" "I live in Sioux City." "What is your business?" "I have no business, now. I have been for the last few years engaged in defending myself from the charge of killing a preacher, without license, for meddling with my business; I have been acquitted by a jury of my beers. Now, I desire to return to Sioux City and retail whisky there, and I would like authority from the United States government to do so." And what does this officer of ours do? Kicks the insulter of the government out of the office? Oh, no, he doesn't; he says, "Certainly, have a seat while I make out the paper; it will cost you $25." And John Aaronsdorf goes back to Sioux City to be a criminal by the laws of his State, but he will carry with him the certificate, the letter of credit, the diploma of the federal government; and as he steps across the bloody place where Haddock fell, with a chuckle to himself, says, "Aha!"

Again, Maine has a prohibitory law. A shipload of gin anchored, or might have anchored to-day, in the harbor of Portland, and is ordered off by the State. The master applies to the federal government for instructions. What instructions does he get? "Land your merchandise in Maine and ship it in original packages into every hamlet in the State, and I will stand by you!" and the government, which threatened to hang her own citizens in South Carolina for the nullification of federal law, in Jackson's time, deliberately protects a foreign insulter, nullifier, of the law of Maine.

The flag of the sovereign Commonwealth of Maine floats over the harbor of Portland; this Dutch gin-seller sees it; he cannot land his cargo in the face of that emblem of sovereignty, and so he lays hands upon the halyards to lower it. Let us imagine the governor of Maine telegraphs to Washington, "A Dutch gin-seller from Holland proposes to land a cargo of gin at this port despite the sovereignty of this State, and is now lowering the flag of Maine, and a Dutch fleet is in the offing. What shall we do?" and the telegraph clicks back the answer: "Aha!" A little later another message comes to the authorities at Washington, "He has our flag on the ground, stamps it, is tearing it to shreds." And the answer comes back, "Aha!"

And this is the government that was formed by the States to insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the public safety, and secure the blessings of liberty; and to-day the saloon stands with its foot upon the neck of American citizenship and says to the government: "Wait. Don't disturb me; he has twelve hundred millions of dollars in his pocket; wait till I get it and I will give you ten per cent of the swag."

"The men of the East" were the lawless men; they are coming, the criminals of every nation, and their gin palaces have the right of way against our boys, and do they not eat our fruit? There is many a sick woman in this country to-night with lips parched with fever to whom the taste of fruit would be delicious, healing medicine, but she can't have it because the money that should be hers has gone to the saloon; but no saloon-keeper's wife or child needs to go without fruit.

There is many a pitiful little voice in this country to-night, crying for milk that it cannot have because its father is a drunkard, and a pauper in consequence; but no saloon-keeper's child need be without milk.

Down on your knees, you men who love your country, you Christian men, and pray God to avert the prophecy and save us from ourselves.

No, rather up, up from your knees; catch step with the Son of God; plait a scourge of Christian ballots and lash from the temple of our liberty the last money-changer; and let us stand or fall for righteousness, and let the priests lead or leave.

Celebrate that!

NUGGETS.

The Christian Endeavor Society is sending out temperance literature to all of its local auxiliaries.

The City Liquor Agency in Portland, Me., established under the provisions of the Prohibitory law, sold last year over $57,000 worth of whisky for medical purposes.

Dr. Cranfill was formally notified of his nomination as Vice President on the Prohibition ticket at Waco, Texas, on Thursday week, in the presence of nearly 1,000 people.

"I know a man," said Eli Perkins, who was meaner than a dog. This man and dog went into a saloon together, but the man got beastly drunk while the dog kept sober and went home like a gentleman."

Austin Madigan, a Niagara Falls hack-driver and a gold-cure patient, went into a highly nervous state, in which he tore a closet door off, and when his wife tried to quiet him he tore her dress. He died suddenly that same night.

The Prohibitionists of Rhode Island met in convention Wednesday, and Presidential electors were chosen. The National Prohibitory platform was adopted as the platform of the convention. A resolution was passed sanctioning the election of women delegates to the future conventions.

Germany is not giving up the beer-drinking habit. The president of the German Brewers' Exhibition in Hamburg announced that last year Germany drank 52,304,000 hectolitres of beer, an increase of 7,662,450 hectolitres over the consumption of the previous year—that is, fifteen per cent increase.

A non-union Carnegie workman, on receiving a month's wages, ventured into a Homestead saloon to "get a drink." He got it and also got lured to the woods by the strikers, who robbed him and left him half dead to stagger back and report to the militia. He was probably too drunk to identify his assailants.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The persecutor arrested.—vs. 1, 2. The "yet" here is emphatic, and shows that at the very instant when Saul was arrested by divine grace, he was filled with as much malignant rage and hate as at any previous period in his career. The death of Stephen, though it must have deeply impressed him, only added fuel to the fire of his bigot's zeal, for now we find him going to Damascus, 130 miles from Jerusalem, bearing letters from the chief priests empowering him to arrest all he could find of the hated faith, and bring them bound to the bar of the Sanhedrim, to suffer whatever punishment that body might have the will or power to inflict. The authority to punish with death had been taken from them by the Romans; yet we find them, in defiance of all law, exercising it in the case of Stephen; and in Paul's own words, in chapter 22:14, when they (the Christians) were put to death, he gave his voice (or vote) against them, which would make it seem that other victims followed in the wake of the proto-martyr. "Men and women." Two or three times the fact is mentioned that he made no distinction, in his blind rage, between the sexes, but persecuted both with the same furious malevolence. Men may say they do not believe in miracles, but what can they do with such a miracle as the conversion of this blood-thirsty persecutor into the Apostle to the Gentiles?—"tender as a nurse among her children" with his little flock, yet bold as a lion in braving bonds and death for the sake of the Name which once he sought to destroy!

2. The heavenly vision.—vs. 3-9. Suddenly, as he journeyed, a great light shone about him, above the brightness of the noonday sun, and he heard a voice speak his name in tender expostulation, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Perhaps Saul had never thought that it was Jesus he was persecuting, just as many who bear the name of Christ forget that the cup of cold water given to one of the least of his little ones is given to him. "And he, trembling and astonished, said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The lion was changed into the lamb. The surrender was complete. He was willing to go anywhere and do anything he was directed to do, with the simple obedience of a little child. It was a very simple command. He was to arise and go into the city and there await a further revelation of his Lord's will. So our way is not always made clear to us at once. We must often obey without knowing the reason why. The men who were journeying with him saw the light and heard the voice, but they did not understand the words spoken. They were for Saul alone. A general entrusting an important command to one of his men would not be likely to give it in such a way that others could hear, and so perhaps betray or thwart it. So we may hear a divine call that no one around us hears. It is not needful they should hear it. The message is for us; not for others. It is for us to hear and obey without conferring with flesh and blood; that is, with those about us who might, if the command went against their prejudices, seek to persuade us that we heard no voice at all. Blind, and led by the hand, the fiery young Pharisee entered Damascus. He must be humbled before he could be exalted; he must be taught thoroughly the lesson of trustful faith before he could say to Jew and Gentile, Greek and barbarian, "the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me."

3. The blind made to see.—vs. 10-20. We have here a double vision: one to Saul, who sees a man, named Ananias, laying his hand on him that he might recover his sight, and one to Ananias himself. "Behold he prayeth." Paul as a zealous Pharisee had doubtless prayed before, the formal prayers of his sect, but never as now, the publican's prayer, "God, be merciful to me a sinner." The perplexity of Ananias we can well understand. Perhaps, at first, he almost doubted the genuineness of the vision. To be sent to Saul, the church's bitterest persecutor, who had come to Damascus to carry on his work of death, and who, perhaps, had his own name first on the doomed list; could it be of the Lord to send his faithful servant into such a snare? With what wonder must he have listened to the answer: "He is a chosen vessel unto me;" not that he would if left to himself have ever chosen God, but God had chosen him. "To bear my name before Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel;"—the hated name of Jesus of Nazareth. And even more:—"I will show him how great things he must endure for my sake." Saul was made willing in the day of his power,—willing to be reviled, stoned, beaten, beheaded, for Christ's sake. "And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales:"—a type, no doubt, of the spiritual illumination which accompanied the gift of the Holy Ghost. "And straightway he preached Christ." Everything is "straightway." He had the same earnest, positive nature as of old. Action with him had to follow on belief. Grace by its divine alchemy changes our individuality by making our wills one with God, but does not destroy either our individuality or our will.

Do you take the Cynosure? Why not? Do you pay for it? Why don't you?

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The Galveston (Tex.) Baptist Star reports that Rev. J. W. Wilson closed an important meeting at Woodlawn, which resulted in the baptism of 22 happy souls. Bro. Wilson boasts of having baptized 22 people in ten minutes, and at Wascom he baptized 72 in 26 minutes—averaging 23 seconds to each dip.

—The Rev. Dr. S. S. McBride, of the Baptist church, who resigned a prominent pastorate some months ago, to enter upon an effort for the evangelization of Ireland, has recently received a check of $5,500 from a merchant in New York City, who is a native of the North of Ireland, to aid in carrying forward the good work.

—We regret to note the seeming growing dissatisfaction in the ranks of the 100,200 Baptists in Texas. Texas has too good a reputation abroad for unity and progress to stop here.—Afro-American Banner.

—The following advertisement of a Baptist pastor is copied from the Wiltshire Times, of England: "Notice—Baptizing by Rev. A. E. Johnson, Stormore water, next Sunday, at 10:30 A. M. Photographers invited."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Cincinnati conference has three General conference secretaries, five college presidents, three editors, four missionaries, and one superintendent of missions in South America.

—The various branches of Methodism in Australia will probably unite. The name suggested for the new church is "The Methodist Church of Australasia."

—A Methodist university settlement is to be established in one of the tenement districts of Boston.

—The first Sunday-school in America was taught by Francis Asbury in the house of Thomas Crenshaw in Hanover county, Va. The place is now owned and occupied by a colored man.

—The first international Epworth league convention will be held in Cleveland, Ohio, in July, 1893. This will be a representative body, and undoubtedly the largest and most important meeting ever held in the interest of the young people of the world's Methodism. The sessions will be held in the new Epworth Memorial church, in course of erection by the Central society, in whose church the league was organized.

—Soon after it was decided that the Columbian exposition should be held in Chicago, the board of trustees and the executive committee of the Chicago District Camp-ground association resolved that an international Methodist camp-meeting should be held on the Des Plaines camp-grounds in the summer of 1893. From present appearances there will be a large gathering of Methodists from all parts of the world. The trustees have decided to make many improvements on the grounds, including sewers and waterworks, necessitating an outlay of several thousand dollars. This will be a meeting of all branches of Methodism throughout the world, and is expected to be not only the largest but the most interesting and profitable of its kind ever held. It will begin July 15 or Aug. 1, and will probably continue for one month.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—In point of number the Methodists stood first in 1850, and still retain the lead. Nearly one-third of all the church edifices belong to the Methodist church, while the Baptists can lay claim to more than one-quarter. Relatively speaking, the Episcopal church retains about the same position to the other denominations as it did in 1850. On the other hand, the Roman Catholic church has advanced considerably, from a trifle over 3 per cent of the total number to over 6 per cent. In point of value, however, the Catholic church has made still greater strides, from an ownership of 10½ per cent of all the church property to an ownership of 18¼ per cent. In this respect the Catholic church now ranks second in importance, being exceeded only by the Methodist church, which returns a trifle over 20½ per cent of the total value. In 1850 the value of church property of four denominations—Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Episcopal—outranked the Catholic church in this respect.

—The eleventh census shows that there are in the United States nearly one hundred and fifty separate and distinct religious denominations. After the seven great denominations—Congregational, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, Baptist, and Episcopal—have been accounted for, the other one hundred and thirty-four religious associations represent less than fifteen per cent of the church edifices and less than eleven per cent of the aggregate value of church property.

MORMONS.

—There is said to be considerable anxiety among religious people in London because of the recruiting done by Mormon missionaries in England. Their alarm is not needless, as large numbers of people are every year drawn into this terrible maelstrom of corruption from English towns and cities and brought to the United States. Religious people in America ought to have considerable anxiety about the matter.

OLD CATHOLICS.

—Not a great deal is heard of the Old Catholics. There is still enough vitality and strength in the movement, however, to arrange for an international conference. It is to be held at Luzerne, Switzerland, about the middle of next month. At least two of the bishops of the Church of England will be in attendance, and the Archbishop of Canterbury will be represented by a delegate.

—"So long as the Pope was allowed to retain his temporal sovereignty, his government was notoriously the most corrupt the world ever saw, and his subjects the most degraded."—Primitive Catholic.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Irish Presbyterians have unanimously accepted an invitation from Dublin University to establish a Presbyterian Faculty in Trinity College.

—From McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, thirteen go as missionaries. This is a remarkable showing.

—Dr. John G. Paton, the well-known missionary to the New Hebrides, is a delegate to the Pan Presbyterian Council that meets in Toronto, Canada, this month. He will spend a few weeks in the United States, and will seek to influence our government to act in accord with other great nations in preventing the traffic in slaves and rum at the New Hebrides.

—Contrary to recently published and unwarranted reports, the Rev. Dr. Stryker, of the Fourth Presbyterian church of this city, has accepted the presidency of Hamilton College.

THE "GALLIC CHURCH" is now represented in Chicago by Mme. Hyacinthe Loyson, wife of the famous recalcitrant Carmelite monk, of France. The church which she represents, and for the support and extension of which she has come here to raise money, claims to be neither a sect nor a reformation, but a restoration. Its declared purpose is the revival of the forms of worship and practices of the first Christians in the early days of Christianity; the removal of all sectarian lines. The changes demanded include the abolition of auricular confession, vernacular service, and forced celibacy of the clergy, the election of the clergy, and the resumption of the privilege of offering the Bible to the people and the cup to the laity at the communion. Madame Loyson will remain here, lecturing and canvassing for several weeks.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—General Synod brethren have just completed a new church building in Los Angeles, Cal., and in connection with a mention of the fact by the Los Angeles Express, Aug. 25, Rev. John Graham, of Philadelphia, has a column sketch, from which we quote the following remarkably newsy paragraph: "In 1833 a division occurred in the church, a party taking the ground that according to the Reformation principles her members must refuse allegiance to any participation in the affairs of the United States government—went out from it and organized a Synod under the same name and claimed to be the Covenanters."

—Omaha Presbytery has been divided by Nebraska Synod. The new presbytery will be located in the northwest part of this State and beyond. It will be called North Platte.

—The Sabbath-schools in the New York recent Synod were reported as having 14,077 scholars, and $17,333 contributions, four mission schools. Thanks were given to God for his blessing on that work. Presbyterian Sabbath-school conventions were commended as a means likely to promote the efficiency of the schools.

Cleaning House.

Hard work or easy work, just as you choose. If you find it hard work, it's because you won't use Pearline. You'd rather waste your time and your strength with that absurd rubbing and scrubbing. Of course it's hard—that's why Pearline was invented—that's why Pearline is a household word. You don't know how easy it can be, until you let Pearline do the work. Then house-cleaning slips right along. It is over before you know it.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 333 JAMES PYLE, New York.

"THE SUN" CHOLERA MIXTURE.

More than twenty years ago, when it was found that prevention of cholera was easier than cure, a prescription drawn up by eminent doctors was published in the Sun, and it took the name of the Sun cholera medicine. Our contemporary never lent its name to a better article. We have seen it in constant use for nearly two score years, and found it to be the best remedy for looseness of the bowels ever yet devised. No one who has this by him, and takes it in time, will ever have the cholera. We commend it to all our friends. Even when no cholera is anticipated it is an excellent remedy for ordinary summer complaints, colic, diarrhoea, dysentery, etc. Take equal parts of tincture of cayenne pepper, tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint, and spirits of camphor. Mix well. Dose, 15 to 30 drops in a little cold water, according to age and violence of symptoms, repeated every fifteen or twenty minutes until relief is obtained.

WHAT NOT TO DO IN THE SICK ROOM.

Don't tiptoe. A tiptoe will sometimes cause more disturbance than a carefully, squarely placed footfall. Don't tiptoe.

Don't whisper. A whisper will often wake a light sleeper, when an ordinary voice would not. Don't whisper.

Don't sniff or sigh. Sniffs and sighs may better be indulged in in the open air, where a gust of wind can blow them away. Don't sniff or sigh.

Don't handle rattling papers. The folding and unfolding of papers that rattle is well calculated to "rattle" invalids, to say nothing of those who are strong and well. Don't "rattle."

Don't shout or allow the voice to be keyed on a high note. Shouting may be a necessity in connection with the treatment of "beasts of burden," but should be counted a luxury for indulgence only indoors when conversing with those who are "deaf as a post." Don't shout.—Good Housekeeping.

ONIONS FOR A COUGH.

To eat a raw onion late in the evening will, it is said, prevent the coughing often most troublesome at night in the event of a cold. A favorite remedy for a cough is a sirup made by alternating slices of raw onion with white sugar. Cut a large onion horizontally into thin slices; put one into a dish, sprinkle sugar over it, then another slice of onion, building it up thus by layers until all are used. Cover the dish. About once in three hours a teaspoonful of sirup will have formed, which should be taken at intervals of about this length throughout the day.

A ROOSTER IN A NEW ROLE.

A farmer living near Pulaskville, O., has a rooster that has thrown itself into a domestic breach in a manner to make it advisable for the incubator to look to its laurels. Jeremiah, as the bird is called, is a white Bramah of gigantic size. He is very tame, likes to have his head scratched and eats off the table or from the hired girl's apron pocket.

He often takes a stroll through the house, and, if not stopped, will go up into the attic and have a peck at the "stores." Until recently he has been in the habit of coming every morning to the kitchen window and crowing for his breakfast, and when it was placed for him, eating it off the sill. Meanwhile he does not neglect his duties at the barnyard.

This spring a mother hen was accidentally killed and Jerry immediately adopted her brood of eleven brand new chicks. Of these he has reared nine, having unintentionally trodden on two. He has devoted his entire time to his family, clucking and calling to them and scratching for them like a hen. The youngsters evidently recognize no difference. They follow him all about, and though at first it was feared he would tire them to death, it was soon found out that he kept well within the small barnyard and garden limits. From the outset Jerry scratched so conscientiously for his brood that, although plenty of food was thrown them, he was nearly starved himself. One evening it was noticed that he looked faint and tottered in his gait, and upon examination, his craw was found to be empty. After that he was fed each night. On no account, however, would he ever eat a mouthful until, squatted on the ground, he had gathered his family under his wings. Having, with much fuss and feathers and "goo-gooing," settled them for the night, he would then eat greedily.

Within the last fortnight he has been teaching his children to roost. His method is to call and talk to them in regular hen dialect, while he mounts the perch at bedtime, and looking down at them encourages them to follow. This they do with much scrambling and squawking and pushing each other off the perch. Finally, when the huge wings have covered all the chicks that can crowd under them, Jeremiah, with the rest of his orphans on his back, dozes off into such fitful slumber as comes to the eyes of bipeds who have assumed domestic responsibilities for which they are by accident of sex unfitted.—Exchange.

FARM NOTES.

From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

HORTICULTURAL.

Purchase your stock of reliable nurserymen and you will be saved many a disappointment in fruit-growing.

Choose hardy, acclimated and productive varieties. Fancy large fruit is uncertain and does not pay for the trouble.

There are reports from many sections of Texas that the bull worm is doing very great injury to the cotton crop. Many plantations have been completely ruined.

Wood ashes make a splendid fertilizer for strawberries, raspberries, currants and grapes. Arrange to save all you produce this winter, and keep them covered from the rain until ready to use.

The Maine forests have been so well taken care of during late years that they are said to contain more timber now than ten years ago. No small trees are cut, and there are fewer fires than formerly.

Double Persian ranunculus, besides its use for early summer blooming, is a good plant for winter use. It is treated for the purpose as hyacinths are, being potted and kept in the dark for a while before being brought to the light of the windows.

Alfalfa is a valuable crop wherever it grows well, but it will be nearly useless to try it, except on a very deep, mellow soil, and where there is plenty of moisture, either artificial or natural. Under proper conditions, its roots often penetrate as deep as twelve feet below the surface.

DAIRY.

Now that the time of hot days and cold nights has come around, remember that "every time the good cow shivers, she shakes good money out of the owner's pockets."

I find a stout cord with a loop at one end and a hook at the other, being in all twenty-two inches long, put around the cow's tail, then around the hind leg and hooked, will prevent the tail from hitting the milker. The cord should be nearly level with the lower part of the udder. It can be very easily adjusted, or removed.—Exchange.

Gov. Hoard well says it is more profitable to keep ten 300-pound cows than twenty of the 150-pound ones. Weed out the poor ones, reduce the herds and spend the money in buying a few first-class animals. They will pay better in the long run. This is what many of our dairy herds need to-day—a less number of animals, but better ones.

The three words, creamer, creamery and butter factory are so often confused, that the following definitions are not amiss. A creamer is a device for setting milk to raise cream. A butter factory is a place where cream is brought to be made into butter. A creamery is a place where milk is collected to be set to raise cream, or to have the cream taken out by a separator.

An experienced Iowa dairyman writes in regard to the best floor for a creamery: "My experience teaches me that there is no other arrangement which better meets this requirement than what is commonly called the half-cellar. I would have the walls of brick or stone and the floor cement. There is a growing dislike for cement. Plank is becoming more popular. But do not be deceived. A cement floor when properly made is still the only perfect creamery floor."

POULTRY.

Dispose of any old hens you do not wish to winter.

Young hens and the early pullets will make the best winter layers.

Those young cockerels will bring more money now than as "old roosters" next spring.

Bear in mind that the sooner the hens pass the moulting season the sooner they begin laying.

A leading poultry breeder of England admitted to our Mr. Lloyd that he had found the best winter layers with him to be the Plymouth Rock fowls. Pretty good admission for an Englishman to make.

If the fowls get too fat give them some grain not rich in carbo-hydrates. Oats as a single food will tend to lessen the fat.

See that the poultry exhibited at the fairs have airy coops. If they are neat and uniform in size the display will show off better.

If you have late hatched turkeys it will be well to see that they do not get out into the grass until the dew is off, even though the sun is bright.

If the yards and pens are not naturally drained, let them be drained artificially. Stagnant water is often the beginning of serious and fatal diseases among poultry.

Do not wait until winter before cleaning out the hen house. You may have been neglecting that "chore" during the "busy season" of harvesting. Neglect it no longer.

In shipping poultry do not crowd the coops too full. Besides the suffering caused the fowls, the death of two or three will take off the expected profits and cause disappointment.

Found—not lately, but 25 years ago—something that perfectly and permanently cures Catarrh in the Head. It's Doctor Sage's Catarrh Remedy—and where everything else fails, that cures. The worst chronic cases yield to its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties. See if yours won't. The makers of this Remedy say it will. And they make you this offer: if they can't cure your Catarrh, no matter how bad your case, they'll pay you $500 in cash—and they mean it.

Here are some of the symptoms of Catarrh: Headache; obstruction of nose; discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid; at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, bloody, putrid, and offensive; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. You won't have all at once; probably only a few of them. But you won't have any of them, if you'll take Dr. Sage's Remedy.

The monster celebration of the Landing of Columbus, Oct. 19-21, it is expected, will attract a proportionate assemblage. The number in attendance on that occasion is estimated at 350,000.

We publish elsewhere in this issue the official call for the Iowa State Anti-secrecy Convention. The completed program of exercises is not yet received, but we learn that it will include addresses from Pres. Blanchard, Rev. M. A. Gault, Rev. W. C. Paden, and others. The Convention will assemble in the Wesleyan Methodist church at Marengo, Iowa county, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 15, 16, beginning at 1:30 in the afternoon of the first-named day.

The Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows, the highest authority in that order, has recently been in session at Portland, Ore. This is the governing body that forbade the use of the name of Christ in Odd-fellows' lodge prayers. At the current session a resolution was introduced to refuse the admission of saloon-keepers to membership, but the prohibitory measure was coolly voted down. It is proper that a Christless secret society should find fit associates in whisky-sellers.

The German Catholic Society of Dubuque, Iowa, last week, adopted a special address to Archbishop Katzer of that diocese, asking him to invite the approaching council of archbishops in Brooklyn to define, beyond question, the term "secret society," and to warn Roman Catholics to shun those institutions under pain of excommunication. Does this apply to membership in such Catholic secret societies as the murderous Clan-na-Gael, United Hibernians, the Society of Jesus and similar organizations? Not at all. They are the children of the church, and obedient to its behests. The church has no quarrel with them.

The opposition to the temporal authority of the Pope has hitherto promised little hope of its ever being restored; but a recent change in the sentiment of the people of Italy, it is said, has taken place, and, under the sanction of the Vatican, republicanism is advocated with increasing interest. The alleged admiration felt for republican institutions by the Pope was made public several months ago. Its first fruits threaten to be a revolution in Italy, and the restoration, if possible, of the Pope to the rule of the people. It is very difficult to believe that he really admires the self-rule of a people by the people, for the benefit of the people. That is not a Vatican idea.

The Knights of Pythias in one of the Southern lodges, some time ago, expelled a white member, merely on suspicion that he had some Negro blood in his veins. This characteristic movement was brought to the notice of the recent session of the Supreme Lodge of the order, and investigated. It having been proved that the suspicion had no foundation in fact, the man was restored to his former standing in the subordinate lodge. The Knights of Pythias is one of the most-professedly "benevolent" institutions in the country, but it has no benevolence for any except its white members, and for them only as long as they continue to be a source of income to the lodge. This is not the benevolence commended by the Lord Jesus Christ: "Do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great."—Luke 6: 35.

The common practice of the great Reading anthracite combine is to raise the price of coal every month or two, without any reasonable cause, or any explanation. But the anti-trust statute of Illinois expressly forbids this system of oppressing the people, and provides a severe penalty for infractions of the law. It also provides that persons who purchase goods of such combines at exorbitant prices cannot be compelled to pay for them if bought on time. A gentleman who is intimate with the design of the Reading combine to advance the price of coal fifty cents on the first days of October and November next, states that the provisions of the Illinois statute will prevent the proposed rise and check the avarice of the monopolists. This combination also violates the federal laws, and there seems to be a healthful opposition to it in public sentiment.

A private letter from Munich (Bavaria), September 8, speaking of the cholera plague in Hamburg, says: "It is as bad as can be there. I wonder they let any ships from there enter New York harbor at all. Everybody who could has left Hamburg, and two or three persons from there came to Munich and died of it; but there have been no other cases since; and the sanitary condition of the city is said to be unusually good. A 'sick room' has been opened at the railroad depot, where two doctors are required to be at every train, and all passengers from Bremen or Hamburg are examined and disinfected before they are allowed to go on. The same happens to every one who is ill. It cannot be very good times for travelers here. On the limits of Austria, all travelers from Germany are also disinfected. I believe they smoke them for a day or two with sulphur; at least some of Miss ———'s friends said their dresses were ruined."

The "higher" criticism of the age has pervaded the Sunday-school lessons prepared for the use of children in England, and complaint is made by teachers in the Sunday-schools that the effect of much that they read in the line of Biblical criticism is to unsettle their previous beliefs. One of the senior teachers writes to a Sunday-school journal at Birmingham that he has "followed the reports of the Mansfield Summer School of Theology," and confesses that he has been "fairly dazed by some of the strange things said. Here are a few: The Old Testament miracles are (many of them) spoken of as not actual. Ruth, Jonah, Esther, and other books are boldly declared to be purely Hebrew fiction. Canon Cheyne says the story of David and Goliath was not an actual incident, and he asserts that few of the Psalms attributed to David were written by him, and most of them were written after or during the Babylonish captivity." It were better to abolish all religious instruction than to teach such wholesale denunciation of inspired Scripture. It is rank infidelity to God and his Word.

Those of the Cynosure's readers who contributed means for the establishment and support of the Training School and St. John's Maternity Hospital, located at Sitka, Alaska, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, will be interested in the first annual report of the hospital, recently published by Dr. Clarence Thwing, the acting treasurer. It recalls the reasons for creating this excellent charitable institution, and records, clearly and briefly, its growth and labors during the past year. It appears to have done much good in the semi-savage regions where it is situated. It always needs contributions of money, bedding, clothing and gifts intended for the comfort or improvement of the female patients. Goods, packed in barrels, may be sent by freight, addressed: "St. John's Hospital, Sitka, care of Wm. Wadhams, Portland, Ore." Cash may be forwarded to "Treasurer St. John's Maternity Hospital, Sitka, Alaska." Dr. Clarence Thwing has removed to Fort Wrangel, Alaska, at which place he is employed as minister of the Gospel, doctor, and superintendent of a small home for native children. All will wish him success.

THE TRUE HERO.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The 111th and 112th Psalms are alphabetical. The first eight verses of each have two clauses, and the last two verses three clauses each, making twenty-two clauses, and each clause begins with one of the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet. The same theme runs through the two Psalms, the second taking it up where the first left off. The first closes saying: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; a good understanding have all they that do his commandments." The second begins: "Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord; that delighteth greatly in his commandments." Then the Psalmist proceeds to enumerate the elements of this blessedness; and among other things he specifies this: "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord."

The true hero has three characteristics: (1) He fears the Lord. The wicked fear God's wrath. Theirs is a base and servile fear. This is the fear that perfect love casts out. But there is a holy and reverential fear which perfect love brings into the believing heart. True love fears to offend the object of the affections. Athanasius said: "I fear nothing but sin." The true believer has a reverential fear of God, a watchful fear against temptation, and a vigilant fear of himself. He is not a good soldier who has no sense of fear. The best soldier has a sense of fear that keeps him from rushing into danger and exposing himself unnecessarily; that keeps him alert and watchful against surprises, and enables him to avail himself of every advantage of the foe. The soldier of the cross has this fear. He fears the Lord, and so needs to fear no one else. "Rejoice with trembling." The needle of the compass trembles as it turns toward the attractive force. The heart of the believer trembles with holy fear as it responds to the love of God which constraineth us. When Alexander was laying siege to Tyre, he sent a message to the officers of the city: "Whom do you fear most?" expecting they would reply, "The conqueror of the world." But they replied: "We fear nothing but lest the heavens should fall upon us;" and they did not fear that. The believer fears the God of heaven and in him he trusts. "Behold on those that do him fear, the Lord doth set his eye; even those who on his mercy do, with confidence rely." David joins fear and trust together. In the 40th Psalm he says: "The Lord took me from the fearful pit and the miry clay and set my feet upon the rock, and put a new song in my mouth;" "many shall see it and shall fear, and on the Lord rely." In the 147th Psalm, David says: "But in all those that do him fear, the Lord doth pleasure take; in those that to his mercy do, by hope themselves betake."

2. He delights in God's law. He is not under the law but under grace. He is not under the law as a covenant of works. The Lord Jesus Christ has borne the penalty of the law in his room and stead. When exaction was made of us, he submitted himself. Our sins were placed to his account and punished in his person. The penalty of our sins was executed upon him in all its stupendous severity, and full satisfaction was made to justice, in her highest and most inexorable claims. The obedience of the Son of God magnified the law more than the perfect obedience of every son and daughter of Adam could have done had man never sinned. The sufferings and death of the Son of God honored the broken law more than the eternal punishment of the whole sinful human race could have done. "There is therefore, now, no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." "It is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, and who also maketh intercession for us." This is the believer's confidence. There is no penalty for him to endure. The evils, the afflictions, the trials of this life are, to the believer, not penalties for sin, but chastisements from the hand of a gracious and loving Father. David sinned in numbering the people. God sent the pestilence. While the hand of God was upon them, David said in the 49th Psalm:

"Amidst those days that evil be
Why should I fearing doubt?
When of my heels the iniquity
Doth compass me about."

What was the source of his confidence while under the hand of God? He tells us in the same Psalm, the Redeemer gave him confidence. "But from hell's hand God will me free, for he shall me receive." In the 130th Psalm David tells us of his troubles resulting from his sins. He was sinking in the deep sea. The waves were passing over him. But from the depths he cries to God. He confesses that if God should mark one of a thousand of his sins there would be no hope. But there is forgiveness and plenteous redemption, because he was made sin for us who knew no sin. "Let Israel hope in the Lord, for with him mercies be." The believer delights in God's law, which has no power to condemn him, which is his rule of life in the hands of the Mediator, and which the Spirit has written upon his heart.

3. He trusts in the Lord. He that believeth sets to his seal that God is true. You cannot offer your friend a greater affront than to be always questioning his regard for you and always bringing up evidences that he cares not for you. "If you will not believe, surely ye shall not be established." Let him that walketh in darkness and hath no light trust in the name of the Lord and stay on his God. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee because he trusteth in thee." He believes that God reigns; that his plan extends from the beginning to the end; that it embraces every possible event; that nothing comes by chance, that all things occur according to his design; that the wrath of man he makes to praise him, and the remainder of wrath he restrains; "that all things work together for good to them that love God." He knows that God loves him; that he is reconciled to God; that he has found out God's plan and is working in harmony with it, and no evil can befall him. "He is not afraid of evil tidings; his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord." When the Sabeans fell upon Job's oxen and asses and took them, the lightning burned his sheep and servants; the Chaldeans fell upon the camels and took them away, slaying the servants; and the desert storm smote the four corners of the house in which his sons and daughters were eating and drinking, and buried them in the ruins, that humble believer said: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." And when he was smitten with a loathsome disease, he said: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." He was not afraid. His heart was fixed. David said: "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses, but we will remember the name of our God." Solomon said: "The rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as a high wall in his own conceit." But it is only such in his estimation. Riches take wings and fly away. At best the possessors must soon fly away from them. But "the name of the Lord is a strong tower; the righteous runneth into it and is safe." When Nero tried to bribe a Christian with honor and wealth to deny his Saviour, he said: "Offer these things to children; I regard them not." Then the Emperor tried to intimidate him with the lions, the fire and the scaffold. "Threaten your effeminate courtiers; I fear none of these things." When Luther stood before the Diet at Worms, he said: "I cannot submit my faith either to the Pope or the council. I stand here and can say no more. God help me. Amen." John Knox stood before Queen Mary and the Privy Council of Scotland and said: "I am in a place where I am demanded of conscience to speak the truth, and therefore the truth I speak; impugn it whoso list."

What is the secret of the courage of those who are making war on the "secret empire," that in the face of seeming defeat they go on with daily increasing zeal and hope? Their hearts are fixed, trusting in the Lord. They know that he is planning the battle and it is going just as he intends it, and victory will soon perch upon their banners. Why is it that National Reformers continue assailing secularism in this government and calling on the nation to bow to King Jesus, although the enemy seems to be gaining stronger footing every day? Their hearts are fixed, trusting in the Lord. Though hills be cast into the sea, and the waves roar, he is confident in his God. A thousand may fall at his side, and ten thousand lie dead at his right hand; the evil shall not come nigh unto him.

The ship at anchor may be rocked by the waves. The inexperienced passenger may be affrighted and think all is lost. But the old sailor laughs at his fears. The believer laughs at fear when the storm rages and the wind and waves toss his boat to and fro. He has a sure and safe anchor which entereth into that which is within the veil. The Lord sits on the floods. He sat on the flood when Noah's ark floated upon its bosom, and the life within the ark was preserved. He sat on the flood when Israel passed through the Red Sea, while the Egyptians were drowned. He sat on the flood when the waters of human society were so agitated in the revolution which resulted in the overthrow of paganism and the establishment of Christianity on the throne of the Cæsars. He sat on the flood when the waters ran red with blood in the late war which resulted in the freedom of the slaves; and he will yet sit on the flood as King when the great revolution comes which will overthrow the "secret empire," destroy anti-Christ, bring down secularism, and exalt Christ to the throne of universal dominion over nations.

Boston, Mass.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The death of Whittier, at an advanced age, and so soon after he had paid a most beautiful tribute to another octogenarian poet, marks an era in our national history, and calls up a flood of recollections of the most eventful period in our national progress.

Whittier has been justly called our most distinctively American poet. No other one, however eminent, had so large an influence in American affairs, and none has left a more lasting and beneficent influence on our national literature.

Born of Quaker parentage, he faithfully adhered to the distinctive features of that class of Christians; not, however, with a spirit of slavish conformity, but with a mind always receptive of truth, and a largeness of charity that included in its fellowship all who love God and abhor that which is evil.

The marked characteristics of Mr. Whittier were his gentleness and sweetness of spirit—a self-abnegation, together with a moral courage that was most truly heroic. He threw himself into the anti-slavery conflict when it meant not simply social ostracism and the obscuration of talent, but bitter persecution and mob-violence. There was no opprobrium heaped on the Abolitionists, and no violence done to its defenders, but what he cheerfully accepted. One of his earliest poems was a tribute to William Lloyd Garrison, and one of his latest was a commendation of that great moral gladiator.

Whittier was, first of all, a Christian. It is true that even the Society of Friends did not always esteem him strictly orthodox; but his vindication is his spotless life and untiring devotion to the good of humanity.

He was by no means lacking in reverence or in affectionate consecration; but he had small respect for merely human creeds. To the questionings of his friend he replies:

"I have no answer for myself or thee,
Save that I learned, beside my mother's knee,
All is of God that is and is to be;
And God is good. Let this suffice us still,
Resting in child-like trust upon his will,
Who moves to his great ends unthwarted by the ill."

Again, in his "Fast-day Thoughts:"

"Walking as one to pleasant service led,
Doing God's will as if it were my own,
Yet trusting in mine, but in his strength alone."

Again, in his "Eternal Goodness:"

"Oh, friends, with whom my feet have trod
The quiet aisles of prayer,
Glad witness of your zeal for God
And love for man I bear....

But still my human hands are weak
To hold your iron creeds;
Against the words ye bid me speak
My heart within me pleads....

I walk with fear-hushed feet the ground
Ye tread with boldness shod;
I dare not fix the mete and bounds
The power and love of God,....

No offering of my own I have,
Nor works my faith to prove;
I can but give the gift he gave
And plead his love for love."

But in all this there was the farthest remove from mere sentimentalism. The sternness of the old prophets is seen in his scathing denunciations of all that was iniquitous. I quote a few brief specimens from his Reform poems. A Christian slave was advertised, and her market value commended because she was a Christian:

"A Christian going, gone!
Who bids for God's own image, for his grace?
Which that poor victim of the market-place
Hath in her suffering won....

My God, can such things be!
Hast Thou not said that whatsoever is done
Unto Thy weakest and Thy humblest ones
Is even done to Thee?....

Shall priestly robbers of thine altar stand,
Lifting in prayer to Thee the bloody hand
And haughty brow of wrong?....

Hoarse, horrible and strong
Rises to heaven the agonizing cry,
Filling the arches of the hollow sky;
How long, O God, how long?"

It is probable that in all our literature there is nowhere such a terrible rebuke as in his "Ichabod." Webster was the idol of New England; in statesman-like ability, the foremost man of all our nation. "Ichabod" was written on the occasion of the delivery of Mr. Webster's speech of March 7, 1850, in which he sold himself to the slave-power:

"So fallen! So lost! The light withdrawn which once he wore!

The glory from his gray hairs gone forevermore....
All else is gone; from those great eyes the soul has fled.
When faith is lost, when honor dies, the man is dead.
Then pay the reverence of old days to his dead fame;
Walk backward with averted gaze and hide his shame."

Though living in the midst of a conflict which grew into one of the most terrible of modern wars, Whittier always maintained his integrity as a follower of the Prince of Peace. Recognizing, as he did, the providence of God in the great conflict and its results, he consistently held that no end, however desirable, was a sufficient warrant for a resort to war, and that both persons and nations ought to suffer wrong than seek their redress in armed violence. One of the most pathetic pictures of the horrors of war is seen in his "Angels of Buena Vista;" but it is among the poems addressed to his own people that he spoke out with the most distinctness. In the Anniversary Poem read at the Friends' Yearly Meeting at Newport, R. I., June 15, 1863, he says:

"Our path is plain, the war-net draws
Round us in vain.

While faithful to the Higher Cause
We keep our fealty to the laws
Through patient pain.

The leveled gun, the battle brand
We may not take.
But calmly loyal we can stand
For conscience' sake."

I close with a brief extract from "My Psalm," which in a large measure I have felt that I could appropriate:

"I mourn no more my vanished years;
Beneath a tender rain,—
An April rain of smiles and tears
My heart grows young again.

The west winds blow, and singing low
I hear the glad streams run;
The windows of my soul I throw
Wide open to the sun.

All as God wills who wisely heeds,
To give or to withhold;
And knoweth more of all my needs
Than all my prayers have told.

And so the shadows fall apart,
And so the west winds play,
And all the windows of my heart
I open to the day."

Oberlin, O.

"THE PURROW SOCIETY."

The Purrow Society is a secret organization on the West Coast of Africa, called "Am-Purrow," and a member is called "O-ko-Purrow." It is for men only, and is chiefly for political purposes. All the chiefs in the country are members of it. They assume a great deal of power and are very violent, especially when offended by one not initiated into their society, upon whom they look as unclean, calling him "O-gorka," which signifies "one not initiated into the great institutions of the country." Offenders and non-members are frequently boycotted; this is done by fixing a Purrow greegree at their farm or yard, consisting of a stick, at the top of which they tie some grass. When such a greegree is placed at a person's place, no one will dare work for him or have any dealing with him. The officers are Pa-Yam-ba, who is king; Gbanna-Gboom or vice-president; Raka, who is messenger; Pa-Kasse, priest; and the Kriffi, or devil.

Pa-Yam-ba decides all important matters; his word is law, and his decision final. Gbanna-Gboom stands next to Pa-Yam-ba in authority. He has the power to kill, or to appoint some one else to kill, anyone condemned to death. The third officer is Raka. He carries a sword wrapped in black and white, and has six followers. They make all public announcements, and precede any parade of the society. On entering a town, this Raka and his followers have a right to catch all the fowl they can find; and if the people want them again, they must redeem them. Pa-Kasse, the priest, travels all about and over-sees or visits many purrows. He has for sale all the various medicines and poisons used by the society. He wears a kind of a huge cap when dancing, which is adorned with a half-dozen or more human skulls, from those who were killed by his poisons.

The Kriffi, or devil, is reported to be a spirit, and to keep up the delusion, no woman or non-members are allowed to see him. He has always an interpreter with him, who speaks to the people. To disguise his voice, he speaks through a kind of a hollow tube, called "Ka-Mendie," which makes his voice sound unearthly. Not long ago a Purrow man died here, and the devil came into the tartar, and kept up the most unearthly sounds for two nights, cheating some of us missionaries out of much needed sleep. When a person is initiated, he is tattooed on his back and chest.

This is done by lifting the skin up with a sharp hook, and then cutting off a small bit of skin, which leaves the person marked for life. It is said to be a very painful operation. The candidate is also required to give an oath, in connection with which he must drink water out of a human skull. They are often kept in the Purrow bush for a long time. But sometimes children of a Purrow man are taken in at one or two years of age, when they are only kept one day. They are not marked nor tattooed, but are called "Gba," and ever afterward have all the rights and privileges of full members. There are three degrees, or ranks. The first, "Purrow bush boys," the second, Gbangkallo, and the third, Sim-oree; and from the last-named rank the officers are elected, and serve for life, or as long as they please the majority.

The Purrow sign is a low bow, with the hands placed together near the ground as if begging. I forgot to say that the Kriffi Ka Purrow, the Purrow devil, is believed to be always near their persons and able to turn any matter in their favor. When a person is taken into the society they say "the devil ate him;" and when they are pulled or brought out again they say "the devil born 'em." As soon as the candidate is taken into the bush, he is given a new name, and when he is through, he receives another name, which is his name for life. Anyone calling him by his old name gets into trouble. If you want to find out his new name you must approach him as a stranger, give him a present, and ask him his name. When a person objects to being initiated and tries to run away, he is told that his head will burst if he does not yield. They make their poisons by taking the dead body of one who has succumbed to their treachery, and placing it in a slanting position, head downward, then build fire under it, and catch all the fluid that is stewed out of the body into a bowl, which is then mixed with various vegetable poisons. This poison is administered to the person who dares to make himself obnoxious to any one of the society. The ashes of human bones are frequently worn about the body in deer horns as a charm against various evils. The dead are called Ma-ma-So-ko; i. e., "mother of the Purrow."

A person who has committed some great crime is executed by being tied by the feet to the tops of two saplings that have previously been drawn together with ropes, then loosing the ropes, allowing the trees to spring apart. My informant tells me that the person who is thus suspended, sometimes lives as long as two days before death comes to his relief. This form of punishment is not very often administered. But death by poisoning is very frequently practiced. They do not honor nor mention God's name, but worship their dead and their Kriffi, or devil. Their dances and festivities are of the most debased kind. By their secret tyranny they can sway the whole country; and while the English government has taken some of their power away, we are by no means rid of them. And it is one of the greatest enemies against the cause of Christ on the West Coast. We all thank God for the "Brussels Treaty." That promises to stay the flood of rum from this land; and now may we not pray that God will speedily break down this gigantic evil in Africa,—that he may strike the shackles of Purrowism from off the thousands who are now held captive in its wild haunts, so that they may learn to know him whom to know aright is life eternal. —Rev. Jacob Miller, in the Woman's Evangel.

WHY HE LEFT THE LODGE.

Rev. J. W. Snively, of Ingleside, Pa., once a Mason, but convicted of the sin of belonging to the Christless order, thus testifies in the Wesleyan Methodist:

We found out that a neighbor belonged to a church that did not fellowship members of secret societies. He was asked for reading on the subject, and lent us "Valance's Confession of the Murder of William Morgan." We found in the book a new revelation; light was breaking on our eyes now; as we had a little light we determined to get more if possible. The cover of the pamphlet named above had an advertisement of the Christian Cynosure and of the "National Christian Association, Opposed to Secret Societies." Here we were directed to headquarters for light. A copy of the Christian Cynosure was at once sent for and obtained. Since that time it has been a regular weekly visitor. Now my eyes were opened to see secret societies as presenting a system of false religion; in other words, pretending to save their members without reference to faith in Jesus Christ. They thus plainly contradict the teachings of God's Word, "There is none other name given under heaven, or among men, whereby we can be saved, but in and through the name of Jesus Christ." We had been driven from the church of our early choice, and for a time were wanderers, without a fold. He who was, under God, the means of introducing us to the Wesleyan people, himself turned his back upon the light and entered the great secret society army. I have been informed that he now is, or lately was, "Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge F. and A. M. of Illinois."

CHURCH AND LODGE.

A telegram to the dailies of Fort Dodge, Iowa, says: "Whether to forsake allegiance to the Roman Catholic church or to the order of Knights of Pythias, is a question that is troubling about one-third of the active members of the Knights of Pythias lodge here. The same question will have to be decided by Catholic Knights all over the State. In response to a personal letter from L. F. Gemmett, the two Iowa Catholic prelates, Bishops Cosgrove and Hennessy, have written letters declaring that the Knights of Pythias order is condemned by the church in common with all secret societies. They say that no Catholic should be allowed to join the order. The penalty for doing so or maintaining membership is excommunication." Poor fellows! They are not Americans enough to declare their independence of priestly tyranny, but will continue to be led about tied to their masters' apron-strings.—British American.

Upon this matter, says the Wesleyan Methodist, we offer two comments. The Roman Catholic church is the enemy of those orders and societies only which it cannot use to its own advancement. It has given official endorsement to the labor unions, but Mr. Powderly, their leader, is a good Roman Catholic. It silently tolerates the Grand Army, but that organization may become at any day a strong aid to Romanism, for, doubtless a majority of its membership in many places is Roman Catholic. The Masonic lodge is a rival to the Romish church in the fact that it is a rival religion. In every other particular there are striking resemblances. And even here the only real question is, which shall rule? The clipping above given speaks of the Romanists not being "American enough to declare their independence of priestly tyranny," and the inference is that it would be an American, act to leave the priest-ridden church and join the Knights of Pythias. We affirm that to remain under the "priestly tyranny" is un-American and to join the Knights is equally so. The tyranny is no less in one than in the other, and they are both contrary to the spirit of American citizenship.

JEWS IN THE UNITED STATES.

The first company of Jews in this country came from Brazil in 1654. The first synagogue was established in New York City. The first synagogues in Pennsylvania were those of Lancaster (1776) and Philadelphia (1780). The Orthodox Jews, who consider the Talmud Ritual as binding as the law of Moses itself, have 316 organizations, 122 synagogues with a seating capacity of 47,000, 193 halls with 25,000 seats, both valued at $2,302,000, and a membership of 57,597, which, however, only represents the house fathers. The Reformed Jews, who worship with the hat off, mingle the sexes in the synagogue, and use the organ and a female choir, have 179 synagogues and 38 halls valued at $6,952,000, and a membership of 72,899. There are 30,000 Orthodox Jewish families in New York, and 2,447 in Pennsylvania. Of the Reformed Jews, there are 16,743 in New York, and 5,582 in Pennsylvania. There are only 40 Orthodox in Washington, D. C.

Prominent ministers in the Christian church are loud in condemning Mormonism, and heathenism of all kinds, but they lock arms with them in the Masonic lodge and worship with them at the same altar, and are brethren!—Mennonite Gospel Banner.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Letter-writing a lost art.—The higher education of women.—The American Savage.—Dining on singing-birds.—Boston Knights of Labor on the side of Sunday opening of the Mechanics' Fair.

How many of us, when reading the entertaining letters of Madame de Sevigne, Lady Montagu, and other celebrities of a past age, have wondered why letter-writing, in the real sense of the word, has become a lost art? Of course, one, and perhaps the chief reason, is because we are living in a fast age. Those delightful delineations of men and manners, those delicious bits of gossip, those keen criticisms, and frankly written details of personal history which reflect, as in a mirror, life as it went on one hundred, two hundred, three hundred years ago, belong to the times "when summer afternoons were spacious and the clock ticked slowly in the long winter evenings." To-day Madame de Sevigne, unless circumstances had forced her to bury her talent in a napkin of housewifely duties, would have been a newspaper correspondent, and her friends would receive only the briefest and most unsatisfactory missives. In our rushing American life we have accepted too literally the saying that "brevity is the soul of wit," and bid fair to run it into the ground. See how our noble mother English is cut up and abbreviated by the letter-writers of to-day in every possible manner because the writer is too "rushed" or "drove"—these expressive Americanisms belong only to the present times; people a hundred years ago would have hardly understood them—to attend to the small epistolary courtesies which went out along with quill pens, and that exquisitely fine handwriting which we have all admired on old deeds and records. Never were there so few letters written, using the word in its true sense, as to-day, though it may seem a paradox to say so when Uncle Sam's mail-matter has reached such enormous proportions. It is true, nevertheless.

Looking over a pile of old letters, written when the century was in its infancy, has started me off on this train of musings. What is there more touching, more pathetic?—the yellow paper, the faded ink, the fine, close writing. Poor mute mementoes of the love, and the hope, the joy, and the sorrow of a generation who for the most part are slumbering

"Where they neither sigh nor sing,

Though the robins be awing,

Though the leaves of autumn march a million strong."

It affects me something as did the sight of one of the mummies in the Metropolitan Museum at Central Park, last summer;—a fair young daughter of the Pharaohs, who long ages ago "fell on sleep" and was gathered to her fathers. Life and love were the same to her that life and love are to us. She saw the same sun, she looked up to the heavens. And now, after she has slumbered undisturbed through the rise and fall of empires, to be torn from all that solemn past and brought here to be merely an object of cold curiosity for the careless multitude! I am glad she could not foresee it, nor the loving, breaking hearts that saw her placed in her rocky sepulchre. Isn't this rather too sentimental, some utilitarian will say, wasting pity on a mummy? No; for I am sure that no single throb of human sympathy was ever wasted, whether bestowed on the living or the dead.

What would she say, this daughter of the Nile to whom the Sphinx was only a thing of yesterday, to Wellesley College, with its young women discussing such themes as Qualifications for Voting, Ballot Reform, Divorce Laws, etc., etc.? But perhaps it would not surprise her so much as to know that American women have, in many of our States, fewer legal rights than Egyptian women had under the reign of the Pharaohs.

Brown University, which has so lately thrown open its doors to the female sex, took in, at the opening of its fall term, about forty young women-students. President Andrews speaks very highly of the proficiency of the entering class, which he said averaged decidedly higher than that of the young men in college when examined in the same branches. He believes in co-education to its fullest extent; that is, he believes in admitting women to our colleges through the front door instead of that side entrance called an annex, thus giving them the full university status, degrees and all; which, as is well-known, the annex never confers, either in our own country or in England. If Harvard only had a president equally progressive and broad-minded!

"What is education doing for us anyhow?" queried a friend of mine the other day, herself a cultured and educated person. A very fitting subject for somebody to write a paper upon for the North American Review would be, "What is the American Savage Doing for Us?" It is needless to say that I am not referring to our copper-colored, blanketed brothers who roam the plains of the wild West, but to men with white faces and civilized garb, such as packed Music Hall, a few nights ago, to hear the result of the prize-fight at New Orleans, and the crowds which welcomed Corbett as a conquering hero. Decent people are glad of Sullivan's defeat; but, after all, his vile character was only on a level with his calling. The day after his contest with Corbett, a teacher of a public school in—not Mississippi, but Massachusetts, wishing to call the attention of her pupils to the death of Whittier, inquired, when the school opened, how many had seen the morning papers; and then asked, when every hand went up, "Well, of what sad event did you read?" Like a dash of cold water came the unexpected reply, "John L. has got licked." As soon as she could recover her breath she inquired, gravely, "How many of you think that is a good way to get a living to do as he has done?" when one of the pupils instantly responded, "Father says there isn't a minister in Springfield who earns as much money as John L. does." What can education do for a boy whose training, both at home and on the street, gives him a drinking, wife-beating, prize-fighter for his highest ideal of manhood and teaches him to hold the minister of the Gospel in less esteem than the pugilist because he cannot earn as much money? When the Boston dailies, with one or two honorable exceptions, will give ten times the space to this worse than brutal exhibition which they do to an event of such national importance as the death of Whittier; when $100,000, so it is reported, is to be raised as a fund for Sullivan, and $5,000 for a monument to the dead poet, what teacher will not find it difficult to make the pupils think the latter is not the greater man of the two? The American savage is increasing fast. He fills the city slums; he startles, every now and then, with some dreadful tale of vice and crime, the peaceful dwellers in our secluded country districts; he is in our army and navy; he is in our police force; he helps makes our laws for us. The American savage is ubiquitous; he is everywhere; he is made up of the blood of all nationalities, in some few cases the bluest blood of New England; for, great families, like great rivers, have a tendency to run into the mud; but in the great majority of cases he is a foreigner, whom even the accident of having been born here cannot make anything else. He is a threatening—nay, an appalling factor in our civilization. What shall be done with him? or rather what will he do with us?

It may be slightly apropos to the above to refer to the fact brought out in the late Congress of American Ornithologists, which shows that the decrease of American song-birds is not to be laid entirely at the door of the English sparrow, who has sins enough to answer for without accusing him of more than he commits. Robins, thrushes, meadow-larks, and other sweet songsters, are killed in large numbers for the markets of our American cities, and sold at high prices to rich epicures. People who will eat singing-birds must be as dead to all refined feelings as they are to any appreciation of our Maker's goodness in creating these songful denizens of our fields and woods. In the interests of the higher civilization this thing ought to be stopped. To be sure, the people who can enjoy a dinner for which scores of melodious bird-lives have to be sacrificed are in a minority, like the women who will order thousands of rare, tropical birds with which to trim an evening dress; but so the Roman emperors and nobles who feasted on nightingales' tongues were a minority that showed the rottenness within.

Boston, last Saturday, completed the 262d anniversary of her settlement, and Woburn will soon celebrate her 250th. The editor of the Pilot, James Jeffrey Roche, an Irish Romanist, is to write the poem for the occasion! Where are our women-poets that they are never called upon at such times? Where is Lucy Larcom, for instance, since Whittier has gone, the most truly representative New England poet we have left?

The Mechanics' Fair, if the Knights of Labor Alliance have their way, will be opened on Sunday. This is the first time that the idea of having it open all the seven days has ever been agitated. This is of a piece with the action of the Chicago Trades Assembly in stigmatizing those who want the Columbian Exposition closed on Sunday as "narrow-minded, Puritanical bigots," "hypocrites," and "prohibition cranks." The Knights of Labor in Boston are apparently of the same way of thinking. It is only another proof how entirely the labor lodges throw their influence on the side of Sabbath desecration.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21, 1892.

Washington has never been quite so full of people as it is now. It is estimated that more than 350,000 strangers are in the city to witness and take part in the entertainment provided for the twenty-sixth annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, now being held. The city is most beautifully decorated, and at night its principal streets are illuminated as the streets of no other city ever were. The visitors are being most hospitably entertained, and as a rule they are enjoying themselves in a rational manner, and yet there is one foul blot upon the good name of the national capital in connection with the occasion. It is the same that has broken up so many happy families, made tramps and criminals of so many men who began life with honorable names, aye, and dragged woman, noble woman, into the lowest depths of shame. Need I say that it is the slimy trail of the liquor serpent that is referred to?

It was bad enough, heaven knows, for the thousand bar-rooms of Washington to be legally open at all hours of the day and night of weekdays, but infinitely worse and more disgraceful when they, in open defiance of the law, threw open their doors on the Sabbath, as they did last Sunday. The manner in which this infamy was put upon our fair and beautiful city bears out what has before been said in this correspondence—that the associated liquors-dealers are always against law and order, notwithstanding their protests to the contrary. Sunday morning our visitors began to arrive in large numbers and all of the bar-rooms were at least supposed to be closed; but seeing an opportunity to make money a hurried meeting of the liquor-dealers, association was called, and a resolution adopted to stand together and defy the law by opening their places of business; and during the early afternoon hours of Sunday every bar-room in the lower section of the city, if not all over the city, was thrown wide open, and have remained so, night and day, up to this time; the result being only too soon apparent upon the streets, where staggering men and maudlin language were seen and heard by every one who happened to be out of doors. You naturally ask, where were the authorities of the city? Candor compels the statement that they were right here, fully cognizant of the open violation of the law by these dispensers of ruin, and that not a single arrest has been made, or at least none have been made public if they have been made.

For the second time in its history—the first being when the United States officials formally received the distinguished representatives of France, who came to this country to participate in the centennial of the battle of Yorktown, in 1881—the rotunda of the Capitol building was on Monday evening, under the authority of a special act of Congress, used for a public reception, the receiving party consisting of Mrs. John A. Logan, the ladies of the Cabinet, Miss Clara Barton and a number of ladies who, like Miss Barton, had been army nurses. So great was the desire of the old soldiers to pay their respects to these ladies that they by their large number made it a physical impossibility for all of them to do so, and the reception was brought to an end by the exhaustion of the receiving party before one-half of those present could get into the building. A number of pathetic incidents occurred when those who had been nursed through sickness or dangerous wounds were presented to the good women who nursed them, but none more so than that which followed a hearty shake of Miss Clara Barton's hand by an old man who limped badly in one leg. A moment afterwards

Miss Barton's attention was attracted by some one else, and the old fellow bent his head over her hand and one of the big tears that were in his eyes fell on the sleeve of her pink silk dress, leaving a spot. He turned apologetically to a bystander and said, pointing to his lame leg: "She nursed me through this." That spot will make that dress one of the most valuable of Miss Barton's possessions.

Notwithstanding the many interesting counter-attractions, the daily camp fires of the ex-army chaplains, which have been held in a number of our churches this week, have been fairly well attended, and those who visited them found themselves amply repaid.

President and Mrs. Harrison returned to the White House this morning. Mrs. Harrison is a little better than she was a few days ago, but it was a very sad home-coming for both of them. There is little earthly reason to base any hopes of her ultimate recovery upon, and she is fully aware of her situation; but all things are possible to an Allwise Providence, and the many devout prayers that are being offered for her restoration to health and the life of usefulness which she has always led, may do what skillful physicians have not been able to do.

If newspapers are not promptly paid for, they become accusing angels.

REFORM NEWS.

ATTENTION, IOWA!—OFFICIAL.

The Iowa Christian Association is called to meet in Marengo, Iowa, November 15 and 16, instead of November 8 and 9, as before announced.

This change is made in order to avoid an unforeseen and very serious conflict in time.

By order of Executive Committee,

T. P. ROBB, Sec'y.

Linton, Iowa, Sept. 20, 1892.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 20, 1892.

We have encountered a variety of incidents in our brief journey of seventeen days since leaving Boston.

Leaving Knoxville, Tenn., on the 13th, we reached Columbus, Ohio, on the day following. There we were warmly welcomed at the home of our son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Orvis. Our stay of four days in the capital city of Ohio was made doubly pleasant by the opportunity afforded to attend the State Fair, which made a fine exhibit of the agricultural and other industries of the Buckeye State. The swine, sheep, and agricultural implements impressed me as equal, and perhaps superior, to any I had ever seen; while the horticultural, vegetable, fine-art, and carriage departments were a credit to the State.

I called on a number of the pastors, but, aside from Bros. Beck, Harley, and Rohe, I found little sympathy or interest in our anti-lodge reform. Rev. A. E. Davis, pastor of the Liberal U. B. church, said the church had lost heavily by mixing up with the anti-secret discussion and he didn't take much interest in the question. I suggested that "if the Chinese should start a joss-house in your city, and you should find that your young men were going there to worship, would you take any interest in that?" He replied: "I am on the other side, and I don't care to discuss the question." Of course, as I felt confident that we are on the Lord's side, I felt sad to find a minister who declared that he was "on the other side," but was not surprised that he declined to discuss the question.

Bro. K. A. Orvis has for many years been employed among the earnest Christian workers who visit and labor among the convicts in the penitentiary, and Mrs. Stoddard and myself gladly accepted an invitation to accompany him on his mission of good will to the unfortunate and fallen. We were cordially received; and as the lady in charge of religious services in the "woman's ward" was absent, Mrs. Stoddard accepted an invitation to take charge of that department. I was given a class of some thirty men, and found them very attentive to the truth. The Sabbath-school was followed by a prayer meeting, conducted by Chaplain Dudley. The time was well occupied by the convicts in brief testimonies and earnest prayers. At the earlier services, the women, the Romanists and the Protestants, met in separate apartments, but all assembled in the chapel at 10 o'clock for preaching. The organist and choir were from the men in "uniform," and this part of the service seemed to be in the Spirit as well as with the understanding. Two solos, by Miss Chestnut, a specialist, were applauded and added much to the interest of the meeting. The chaplain's discourse, from John 9: 25, was a plain, practical application of the truth to men who need both the reproofs and consolations of the Gospel, and there was a marked attention to his words from nearly every one of the seventeen or eighteen hundred "uniformed" men present. By request, I spoke a few words at the close, and then the congregation filed out in squads, under guards, passing to the dining hall, and from thence, after dinner, to their cells, where they were locked in until Monday morning. Those upturned faces, most of them on the youthful side of life's meridian, and many of them intelligent and eager, were a deeply interesting study. How many blighted lives, were there, and how many sad homes and hearts had been left outside when they entered those walls, to mourn and wait the return of one dearer than life itself, could only be conjectured. What a comfort to know that there is a tribunal where the "Judge of all the earth," presiding, will "do right." The tempter, who seduced the inexperienced youth, or proffered the "maddening bowl," and the victim, whose integrity, or resolve, was unequal to the temptation, will each receive their "portion in due season."

At 4:30 P. M. I gave a "parlor talk" to about a score who assembled on invitation of Bro. Orvis, to learn something about the secret empire; in the evening I preached at the church of loyal United Brethren; and at 12:30 A. M., on Monday, we took a B. & O. train for this city.

Without intending it, we found ourselves in the midst of a restless but good-natured tide of humanity flowing in to this center from all parts of our country, to attend the annual reunion of the old soldiers at the capital city of the nation. Even standing-room was at a premium, and vexatious delays were numerous. By the special courtesy of the conductor, Mrs. Stoddard and myself were stowed away in a corner on a sleeper, where we sat through the night, under special injunction to "keep quiet," as those who were the rightful occupants of the births beside us wished to sleep. When I thanked our benefactor for his kindness in the morning, he replied: "I always try to help those who treat me fairly when I have a specially hard task to perform." It might be well for any disposed to be censorious, when traveling, to make a note of this incident.

We reached this city about 4 o'clock on Tuesday morning, twelve hours late, and were soon ensconced in the "prophet's chamber," 215 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ street, N. W., sleeping off the fatigue of two nights' and one day's consecutive travel in the press and jam of the most thoroughly packed coach I was ever in.

An accident near Grafton, W. Va., in which fortunately no one was seriously injured, added variety as well as delay to our trip. The depots, Pennsylvania avenue and adjacent streets, and, in fact, the central part of the city, were almost as densely packed as the crowded coaches that brought the eager throngs by tens and hundreds of thousands, and from every State in the Union. The parade and the weather were very fine. Mighty thousand veterans, accompanied by three hundred bands of music, occupied nine hours in the grand march, and it is estimated that besides the soldiers there were two hundred thousand strangers in the city. Old inhabitants tell me the jam was greater than anything they had ever witnessed. The fireworks, last evening, surpassed anything I had previously seen in extent and variety, but as the whole program is so generally and fully reported in the press of the country, I will not attempt a detailed account of what is admitted to be the grandest and most elaborate and successful affair of the kind ever attempted in this country. Last night and to-day the crowd has been departing as rapidly as coaches could be filled and trains sent out with safety, until there is a very perceptible diminution of pedestrians and sight-seers on the streets this evening. I have not ventured to enter the throng to-day, but design to leave for Boston on the 10 o'clock A. M. train to-morrow, when the railroad men say they hope to have their regular trains on schedule time. JAMES P. STODDARD.

THE WORK IN NEBRASKA.

BURCHARD, Neb., Sept. 21, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I addressed a good meeting Tuesday evening, the 13th, in the Beulah Covenant church, near Bostwick. I had often spoken here before, and the pastor, Bro. W. S. Fulton, and his wife, always give me the kindest reception. They are thoroughly devoted to the anti-secret reform. Years ago, when pastor in Ohio, they had worked in anti-secret conventions; and while now surrounded by a Covenant community where there are no lodges of any kind, they are still strong in all surrounding towns, and more than ever they feel the need of the agitation. Bro. Fulton says that the circulation of the Cynosure is the best means to awaken a permanent interest in the cause. He spent a day taking me around in his carriage among his people, talking up the Cynosure, and obtained eight annual subscribers. Would that every pastor was as ready and willing to help in this work. No more important work can be done for the cause than to introduce such a paper into homes where it will be read by old and young.

I spent a day at Superior, where Bro. Fenton (last spring) lectured in the U. P. church. It was the first lecture they had heard on the anti-secret question, and awakened much feeling. I proposed to give another lecture, but some of the leading members were afraid of the opposition. The town is strongly under lodge influence. Rev. S. E. Martin is building up a large U. P. congregation at Superior, and most of the Covenant congregation have united with them. He subscribed for the Cynosure, and will, we trust, give the Gospel trumpet no uncertain sound on this question. But here I could do nothing beyond taking a few Cynosure subscriptions.

Friday evening I lectured in the M. E. church at Humboldt. Father Bissell, a graduate of Yale College, has long been a leader of the cause here. I was glad to find him and Mother Bissell in such good health. The meeting was not large, but the pastor, Bro. G. W. Hawley, presided, and is strongly identified with the anti-secret movement. The pastor of another church was also present, and was in sympathy with the cause. Some half-dozen Cynosures are taken here, and the sentiment of the people has greatly changed since Elder Rufus Smith and Secretary J. P. Stoddard were egged on the street when returning from a meeting. Father Bissell drove me out the next day, four miles, to the S. D. Baptist church, where he had arranged for me to speak at 11 A. M.; but an evangelist from Virginia was holding meetings and did not wish to give up the hour.

The next day I preached to large congregations, morning and evening, in the Second U. P. church in Pawnee City, Rev. W. I. Brooks pastor. This congregation has grown and has obtained an elegant new building since my last visit to Pawnee, and they are in hearty sympathy with

CORRESPONDENCE.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT BEREA COLLEGE.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., September, 1892.

We reached this enterprising city of battle memories on a morning train. The tediousness of night-journeying was relieved by the companionship of Bro. A. P. Foster, of Boston, and Bro. A. A. Myers, of Cumberland Gap, Tenn., as far as that stronghold and mountain fortress, so conspicuous in the annals of the late civil strife. Bro. Myers, backed by the A. M. A., is "holding the fort" in this region "for God and home and native land" against the assaults of the "prince of darkness."

Leaving Boston at 9 A. M., the 5th inst., we reached Cincinnati on the evening of the 6th, where we were joined by Dr. Stewart, of Toronto, former president, and Prof. W. G. Frost, president-elect of Berea College; Pres. L. J. Aldrich, Prof. E. A. Devore, of Merom College, Ind., Dr. Geo. R. Leavitt, of Cleveland, Dr. A. P. Foster, of Boston, and Bro. E. P. Fairchild, and Prof. L. V. Dodge, arriving at Berea at 12:08 A. M., on the 7th. Anticipating our coming, each had been assigned to quarters, and the lot of Mrs. Stoddard and myself fell to the hospitable home of Bro. John G. Fee, where we were received with cordial greetings.

The significance of our mission and the deep solicitude of the Trustees was evinced by the presence of every qualified member when the Board was called to order at 9 o'clock A. M. by its veteran president, Bro. John G. Fee. Several earnest petitions for divine guidance and the "unity of the Spirit" were supplemented by attention to routine matters, and the unfinished business of the June session was taken up. Bro. John Jackson was chosen to fill a vacancy in the Board occasioned by the expiration of his term of office as provided in the by-laws; and Bro. A. A. Myers, announcing his unwillingness to be a candidate for re-election, Bro. J. A. R. Rogers was subsequently elected to complete the number. By request of Prof. Frost, a joint meeting of the Trustees and the Faculty was held in the afternoon, for mutual conference and to facilitate acquaintance and better understanding between those whose future life's work might be closely interwoven.

The Professor gave his position on the vital issues and living reforms involved in the founding, maintenance and future administration of Berea College, in a concise and clear summary of the situation. This paper was discussed with the spirit of frankness and candor in which it was presented, and then informally accepted with marked approbation, in which no one more heartily concurred than Bro. Fee, whose fears, lest the "old landmarks" should be removed and a "new departure" inaugurated, had occasioned great anxiety and watchfulness on his part and on the part of some of his personal friends.

At the morning session, on the 8th, Prof. Frost announced his acceptance of the office tendered him by a unanimous vote last June, and at once entered upon his duties as president of Berea College, and ex-officio president of the Board of Trustees. A long and anxious suspense was thus ended in a most happy, harmonious and satisfactory union, in which the Board, Pres. William Goodell Frost, and every member of the Faculty most heartily concurred. It was a consummation evidently "ordered of the Lord, and sure." It has greatly rejoiced the hearts of Bros. Fee and Rogers, whose joint efforts under God laid the foundations in "perilous times." It gives a new and vigorous impetus to local influence and added courage to those who stand face to face with the onerous burdens and multiplied perplexities of the class-room and administration of college-work and discipline. It should be a guarantee of good faith to former donors and patrons, and a prophecy of an enlarged and successful future. With assurance comes the unwritten appeal for a generous support and the prayers and hearty co-operation of all who seek an intelligent, practicable solution of the "race problem," in the Christianization, education and social elevation of all classes, without distinction of "sex, race, color or former condition." JAMES P. STODDARD.

A LABORING MAN'S PLEA.

OAKLAND, Kan., Sept. 12, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Within is a copy of an article which I handed in to one of our Topeka city papers, shortly after Labor-day. It has not yet appeared, and probably will not appear. I send it to you, as bearing upon our work. We must do a good deal of testifying along this line.

Yours in Christ's cause, W. C. PADEN.

OAKLAND, Kan., Sept. 6, 1892.

EDITOR CAPITAL:—I am a laboring man; followed the plow-tail until eighteen years of age; then taught school; went through college, and am now a minister of the Gospel of Christ—not one whit less a laboring man. If your columns are open to the laboring man, you should give me a little space at least. I was at the fair grounds on Labor-day and heard some speaking, though the advantages for speaking and hearing were not good. We had a mixed program.

I heard part of Editor Kansas-Morgan's speech. Mr. Morgan said some good things, and said them well; but there were some things that were not so well. What does Mr. Morgan mean by this remark, either his own or an approved quotation: "College education helps to study the Bible, but does not help to the study of humanity?" This is substantially as it fell from Mr. Morgan's lips, as I took it down at that moment. Is the implication of that question true? Is our Labor-day appointed to give speakers an opportunity to prejudice minds against colleges and college education? Who are the best students of humanity and of methods of uplifting humanity?

Mr. Morgan had some counsel, also, to give to ministers and churches. He remarked: "The labor organizations recognize the God of the church." Is Mr. Morgan prepared to say that these secret labor organizations, in any important sense, recognize Jesus Christ as their law-giver and Saviour? They may refer to him as a carpenter, as Mr. Morgan did. But do they recognize Jesus Christ as the Son of God—God over all, blessed forever? He is the God of the church. I maintain that they do not thus recognize Jesus Christ, and hence do not have the God of the church.

There is a fearful ignoring of Jesus Christ in these days.

Mr. Morgan gave us the information that he belongs to two labor organizations, and that they who gained entrance to these took an obligation to uphold the laws of the country. He told us, too, that before entering he was given the assurance that he should find nothing that should interfere with his duty to his country and to his God. Is it right and sensible for you and me to go into an institution, leaving the decision as to whether it be right or wrong to the assurance of somebody else? We do not so in other matters.

Mr. Morgan also remarks that an objection is made to labor organizations,—that they foster strikes, and great evil is done. His reply to this objection is the imperfection of humanity and also the advantage taken by wicked man. But we should insist upon Mr. Morgan's giving us a better answer than that. Now the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union lies before me. There is a special part of this ritual—"Rules Concerning Strikes," "Manner of Procedure," etc. Now Mr. Morgan's remark would lead us to think that strikes are things that come of themselves, and which the unions simply try to control. But is it not the simple fact that unions create and direct these strikes, and sometimes do lose control of them?

I am a laboring man, myself, and have a very grave sympathy with laboring men. I believe the vast majority of the ministry of this land are in sympathy with the laborers and are striving in many ways to help them. Can our labor organizations point with pride to the great help they have given to the laboring men, especially in the way of strikes, and turn about and give advice to ministers and churches in these matters?

Let our laboring men be assured that so long as they lend themselves to secret oath-bound unions they will be duped and deceived. Stay in God's clear sunshine. Let churches and ministers, and other laboring men, work together to this end and for the uplifting of labor and laborers. It seems to be the popular thing to counsel and criticize ministers and churches in these matters. I enter a protest from the other side. God grant that the principles of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ may be more fully recognized and followed by all parties! Let all rules be founded on Christ's golden rule.

Respectfully submitted, A LABORING MAN.

VICE ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

THE DALLES, Oregon, Sept. 8, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—God bless you! As an evangelist traveling in California and Oregon, I give your readers my observations on the liquor question and Sabbath-breaking.

I was in Amador and surrounding counties in California. This is one of the old 1849 mining regions, and millions in gold have been dug from its earth.

An old miner, who was asked where all his money had gone, put his head back, in imitation of taking a drink, and said: "Down here"—his throat.

Saloons abound around all the mining camps, with houses of prostitution near by. Liquors are sold in the stores, hotels, and restaurants. The Sabbath is not observed. The stores and saloons are open on that day; teaming and mining are carried on; and, worst of all, stages carrying the regular United States mail compel the postoffices to open, contrary to the Federal Constitution, which confers upon every man the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. How can a Christian keep a postoffice and be compelled to open it on the Sabbath against his conscience? Between Murphy's Camp and the Big Trees is a large hotel, with a bar, and over the door a sign—"Postoffice," where people get their mail and liquors. A short distance from the hotel is a school-house, and children coming to it from the surrounding country, and going to the postoffice for mail, are compelled to see and hear much that is not proper.

Most of the towns are rum-ruled. At Plymouth, while holding a meeting, the justice (?) stood inside the churchyard, to prevent his wife (a church member) from attending the services, and obliged her to go to a Saturday-night supper, ending with a Sunday-morning dance. I am told that this justice, with his nearest neighbor, was drunk several times during the meeting, and that both were out in the streets, keeping their neighbors awake with vulgar and blasphemous language. His companion's wife was compelled to flee to a friend's house for the night. I heard her husband use vile and profane words on the street, before a large number of women and children, in the presence of the town officials, unmolested.

The first week of the meeting a majority of the members were attending the Rebekah and other lodges in the town, destroying the influence of the meeting for good.

The Century announces the immediate publication of a series of important letters which passed between General W. T. Sherman and his brother, Senator John Sherman, giving an inside view of certain interesting periods and events in American history, and marked by a candor and vigor of expression characteristic of their distinguished authors. The letters are printed by arrangement with Senator Sherman and the heirs of General Sherman, and with notes by Mrs. Rachel Sherman Thorndike, the General's daughter.

John G. Whittier recently sent to St. Nicholas Magazine a long poem commemorating a visit made to the poet by a party of young girls. The verses will appear in the November St. Nicholas.

LODGE NOTES.

It looks as if the Iron Hall had become scrap iron.

The cry among Pythian publications is to legislate on the initiation fee, making it higher.

If you remain silent when our order is attacked, you condemn by your actions what your conscience approves.

The new K. of P. ritual as adopted by the Supreme Lodge, will be promulgated to the subordinate lodges by the first of January, 1893.

The American Legion of Honor and the Royal Arcanum both own and occupy handsome buildings in Boston, Mass. It will not be in good form hereafter for the organs of these orders to talk about the palatial structures of old line insurance companies.

No man should be placed at the head of an order who is willing to make affidavit that there is $20,000 in the general fund when there is not one penny in it. When it is found necessary to lie about the finances of an order, the rocks upon which it will go to pieces are not very far away.

One by one the endowment societies are being wound up. The latest one to get into trouble is the American Protective League, which has had an injunction against it granted by the Supreme Court of Suffolk county, Mass. The petition was brought in behalf of several Boston clients, and grave charges are made against the officers.

A Freemason who died a few days ago in Paris, left his Masonic sash to an old friend by will. When at the point of death, however, he sent for a priest in order to confess, and receive absolution for his sins. On the priest's arrival in the room he observed the sash occupying a place of honor, and addressing himself to the servant inquired "what that sacrilegious object was doing there?" and ordered her to throw it into the fire. The servant, convinced that unless the sash was burned here above, her master certainly would be destroyed by fire down below, complied with the ecclesiastic request. The disappointed heir has lodged a complaint with the police.—Times and Messenger.

President Porfirio Diaz, Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite of the Jurisdiction of the United States of Mexico, in a letter under date of May 2, 1892, to a Knight Templar, now a resident of the City of Mexico, said: "Dear Sir and Brother: I have your letter of the 2d inst., to which I have the honor to reply. I have received notice thereby that you and other companions of the Royal Arch have received a dispensation from the General Grand Chapter of the United States of Royal Arch Masons, to establish in this country a chapter of that degree and of the annex degrees. I have the satisfaction to hear this. With all consideration I remain, your friendly brother," etc.

The following decision, which has been rendered by the Court of Appeals in St. Louis, Mo., will prove of interest to societies engaged in furnishing assessment insurance: The heirs of John P. Glarden sued the Knights of Pythias on a benefit certificate, which the order claimed was forfeited, Glarden having been expelled. The plaintiff urged that the expulsion was illegal and introduced evidence to that effect in the lower courts, but that court held that as Glarden had not taken distinct action to disavow and set aside his expulsion, his heirs could not maintain an action on the grounds presented. The lower court, therefore, decided in favor of the order and the Court of Appeals affirmed the decision.

The most interesting relic of the prehistoric ages, and one peculiarly appropriate for the present occasion, is a perfect Maltese cross, the world-wide symbol of the Knights Templar organizations, which cross was recently brought to light by a party of scientific explorers sent out by the Rev. O. H. Green, secretary of the Society of Cliff Dwellers Archæology of America. While exploring among the cliff dwellings in the Grand Gulch of the San Juan county, Utah, which is tributary to the Grand Canon in Colorado, one of the party discovered a section of a broken earthen bowl about five inches square. It was buried under nearly three feet of debris, and on the concave side was found a perfect Maltese cross about three inches square. Different scientists estimate these ruins to be from 1,000 to 10,000 years old. If such is the case and the Maltese cross is peculiar to Masonry, it would seem that there existed a tribe who had some idea of Masonic principles long before this country was discovered, and, perhaps, before the Egyptian pyramid builders.—Colorado Sun.

THE NEBRASKA STATE CONVENTION.

The First Annual State Anti-secrecy Convention of Nebraska is to be held at WAHOO, SANDERS COUNTY, OCTOBER 18 AND 19. The friends at Wahoo are prepared to entertain all delegates; and the supporters of the cause in Nebraska are looking forward to the assembling of this, their first State convention, with increasing interest. The present indications are that it will be one of unusual interest and importance. While the official program is not yet received, we are enabled to announce that among those who are expected to attend are the following: Rev. E. B. Graham, Rev. J. W. Morton (North Loup), and Rev. W. C. Paden. Prof. S. M. Hill, principal of the Luther Academy, Wahoo, is to present the issue with Jesuitry. Rev. John M. French, pastor of the First United Presbyterian church in Omaha, will also address the convention. Rev. W. I. Brooks, of Pawnee, will give an address on the Church versus the Lodge. Rev. W. S. Fulton, of Bostwick, Neb., will also address the convention. Bro. Wm. C. Bissell, of Humboldt, will furnish a paper; and J. R. Dodds, an excellent singer, of Wahoo, will conduct the singing during the sessions. The Swedish Lutherans are strongly imbued with the importance of our work, and carry considerable influence in Nebraska. A full program is expected soon. Let our friends in the Western District rally on this occasion, in force.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

The gathering of the Grand Army of the Republic at Washington, to the number of many thousands, has brought out some fresh information relating to its growth, present membership and its probable rapid decline in the near future.

Formed at first of the surviving Union soldiers of the Rebellion, then in thousands of young and middle-aged men, it showed a strong array of military heroes. In a few years the boys (minors of various ages) who had served in subordinate stations in the various army corps, became men and united with the older veterans. Hence the growth of the order. Although the exigencies of war had undermined the health and shortened the lives of many, the membership has been well-maintained. To day it is at its highest point, the total number in good standing being 407,781. It is hinted that during the past year 3,000 members, not veterans, were received into the order, but by what authority, or on what claim, does not distinctly appear. In the last calendar year, reports show that there was a gain of 229 posts, making a total of 7,568, and in that year there was an increase in membership of 64,401, though the losses, through death, discharge, and other causes, were 66,109, the apparent loss of 1,708 being offset by the unauthorized new membership, making the actual gain about 1,200.

If there is any one thing that tends to throw discredit upon the organization, it is the admittance of members who are not veterans. Whatever has invested the Grand Army with the respect of the public accrued from the single fact that it was composed of men who had imperiled their lives, limbs and health in the defence of the country when it was threatened with disintegration, and aided in the great work of destroying Negro slavery. Beyond that it has no more claim to public interest than any other secret, oath-bound society in this lodge-cursed nation.

As the order reserves the right of decision when application is made for membership, it alone is responsible for the character of its members, and it has discovered ere this, that even a sturdy veteran of the war of the Rebellion may possess traits very undesirable in a member. Thus, it is not remarkable that the dishonorable discharges last year amounted to 467 and the "delinquencies" to 13,582.

The losses of the order by death during the same period were 6,440; the honorable discharges were 1,829; the suspensions, 34,367. The disproportion manifest in these figures is very great, and indicates one of two things: Either that the order was not sufficiently careful in its selections of members, or that the secret oath-bound lodge is not a success as a reformer or as a promoter of righteousness.

The Adjutant General expresses his belief that, for a few years to come, the membership will remain at about its present status; but that it will, after that, by death, rapidly decrease; his estimate is, at the fearful rate of 50,000 per annum. This is in accordance with the established tables of mortality. In a few decades, therefore, the veterans will have passed away.

Col. Aug. G. Weissart, who was elected Grand Commander of the G. A. R. last week, is a resident of Milwaukee, Wis. His military record may be without flaw; but he was notoriously implicated, some years ago, in the great western whisky frauds against the government.

EDUCATIONAL.

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Chicago, and the Roman Catholic bishops of Peoria, Alton, and Belleville, in this State, have just issued an encyclical letter to the clergy and members of that church, relating to the education of their children. They take the ground that the church which they represent should have supervision and control, both general and special, of the tuition of all infants and youth in that communion.

The arguments used in the address of these prelates are those with which the readers of the Cynosure are well-acquainted, advocating exclusive separation of Catholic children from all others, and aiming a deadly blow at the common school system of this and other States, by which all children are freely taught a variety of useful information, without regard to religious doctrines.

The common school they would eliminate because, they say, it is "godless," or "ungodly;" and yet when it is proposed to introduce the reading of the Bible, without study or comment, into these public institutions, the Catholics have opposed it, first and last, as a "sectarian" and inappropriate measure. If the Bible is "sectarian," let us thank God and rejoice.

Not only do the Catholics condemn the common school because it affords them so little opportunity to proselyte children in behalf of their religious faith and ceremonies—which is the real grievance in this case—but, say the prelates, in their encyclical, "It is not right that we Catholics should have to contribute to the support of both the public and parochial schools." This is where the shoe pinches; but as long as they claim the rights and immunities of American citizenship, why should they hesitate to pay the taxes required by the government to educate the poor children who are not in the Catholic church, and make them useful to themselves and those around them? Even bachelors, without children, and out of the churches, are assessed for this purpose, and pay their taxes cheerfully. There is no reason why Catholics, or Protestants, should not have parochial schools if they wish; but let these schools be classed as "select," or private institutions, supported exclusively by those for whose benefit they are maintained. But the common school is a part of the public economy, and, like other State institutions, should be supported by public revenue.

Nor do we believe in State or municipal supervision of parochial schools, so long as they break none of the laws of morality and do not teach criminal practices. Then, and then only, let them be inspected and curbed by the public authorities.

There is one very serious objection to the Roman Catholic parochial schools. In the system of education adopted by them, they falsify the records of history, and this because they dare not teach their children the truth. If they did, the numerical loss to their church would be significant, if not destructive. If in any Protestant sectarian school the scholars were taught such abominations as the following from Segur's

"Plain Talk About the Protestantism of To-day," published recently by T. B. Noonan & Co., we should vote for the summary closing of its doors forever:

"Luther died forlorn of God—blaspheming to the very end. His last word was an attestation of impenitence. His eldest son, who had doubts about the reformation and the reform, asked him for a last time whether he persevered in the doctrine he preached. 'Yes,' replied a gurgling sound from the old sinner's throat—and Luther was before his God."—p. 225.

"Calvin died of scarlet fever, devoured by vermin, and eaten up by an ulcerous abscess, the stench whereof drove away every person. In great misery he gave up his rascally ghost, despairing of salvation, evoking the devils from the abyss, and uttering oaths most horrible and blasphemies most frightful."—p. 225.

This may be "religious" instruction, but it is diabolical also, like the religion of Freemasonry, which professes to save its members from sin, while it drives them to perdition.

THE COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

The work on the Exposition buildings is being rapidly pushed, and preparations for the formal dedication are fast assuming a practical shape. The following is the program for the opening ceremonies on the 21st of October:

1. Columbian March, composed by Prof. John E. Paine, of Cambridge.
2. Prayer by Bishop Charles H. Fowler, D.D., LL.D., of the M. E. church.
3. Introductory address by the Director General.
4. Address of welcome and tender of the freedom of the city of Chicago by Hon. Hempstead Washburne, Mayor.
5. Selected recitation from Dedicatory Ode, written by Miss Harriet Monroe, of Chicago. Music by C. W. Chadwick, of Boston. This number is introduced as a tribute to woman's work.
6. Presentation of special commemorative medals to the master artists of the Exposition, by the President of the World's Columbian Exposition.
7. Chorus—"The Heavens are Telling," Haydn.
8. Presentation of the buildings on behalf of the World's Columbian Exposition, by the President thereof, to the World's Columbian Commission for dedication.
9. Presentation of the buildings, by the President of the World's Columbian Commission, to the President of the United States.
10. Dedication of the buildings by the President of the United States.
11. "Hallelujah Chorus," from the "Messiah," Handel.

Preparations for the proper decoration of the city during the exercises at the Fair grounds are also progressing. At least 250,000 strangers are expected to visit Chicago on this occasion. The opportunities for welcoming them and providing for their comfort during their stay will forcibly appeal to the hospitality of all citizens.

The attractions of the occasion, aside from those noted in the above program, will be numerous and very fine.

—We purpose, next week, to print, with a portrait, a life-sketch of our late fellow-worker, Capt. William Wilson, who died of old age and disease, in the early part of this month, having attained his eighty-fifth year. He died, as he had lived, a consistent Christian and reformer.

—Among recent welcome visitors at the Cynosure office, were Rev. Dr. James Kerr, of Glasgow, Scotland, a Covenanter of deserved eminence, then on his way to participate in the proceedings of the great Pan-Presbyterian Council at Toronto, Can.; and Rev. William Dillon, editor of the Christian Conservator, and our esteemed co-laborer in the work of religious reform.

—Friends interested in the American Sabbath Union, which has its headquarters in New York City, with its Central, Inter-State office at 185 Dearborn street, Chicago, was organized upon a permanent basis as a great American promoter of the observance and maintenance of the American Sabbath. Those who are willing to help the cause by their means and influence should visit the Chicago office, or address the District Secretary, Rev. James P. Mills, at that number.

—The National W. C. T. U. Convention in Denver, Oct. 28 to Nov. 3, promises to be one of rare interest, with its 400 delegates from 44 States, 5 Territories, and the District of Columbia. William T. Stead, of England, editor of the Review of Reviews, will probably be among the distinguished guests, and it is rumored that Lady Henry Somerset may return in time to participate in this great gathering.

—We are in receipt of the program of the Fall Meeting of the Blue Valley Association of Congregational Churches at DeWitt, Neb., September 27-29 inst. It is auspicious of a most enjoyable gathering, both as to number and variety of the papers to be read on this occasion. Among others we observe one on "The Advantages or Disadvantages to the Church of the Fraternal Orders," by our good friend and co-worker, Rev. D. W. Comstock. It will undoubtedly attract attention.

the cause of anti-secrecy. This is largely because Bro. Brooks and wife always stand in the front rank in reform work and are interested readers of the Cynosure. Few pastors are as devoid of that great weakness which cripples so many ministers, "the fear of man, which bringeth a snare," as Bro. Brooks. I devoted my evening sermon largely to the anti-secret issue, and many told me it was the first on that subject given at Pawnee. It is the strongest U. P. community in the State. The large majority of them have not bowed the knee to this modern Baal, but, like the seven thousand in Israel, their testimony is largely a silent testimony. Elijah had no knowledge of them. How it would have strengthened him if they had come out and taken their stand with him.

Like all Western towns, Pawnee is fearfully lodge-ridden. Their hall is in the upper room of the court-house building, where their sworn favoritism in manipulating the courts can be most easily exerted.

A leading physician of Pawnee said what I have heard so often testified, that the men who take the most interest in the lodges are those who take the least interest in the churches.

I heard many testimonials here to the faithful and uncompromising testimony for Christ given by the late Rev. Geo. R. Milton while he was pastor at Pawnee. Many who opposed him in his struggle for reform, now come forward and praise his memory.

ANTI-SECRECY WORK IN OREGON.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 17, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. P. B. Williams, of Portland, Ore., Secretary of the Oregon Association, lectured on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, the 13th and 14th instant, at Newberg in Yamhill county.

The lecture on Tuesday night was in the Baptist church, on the subject of Temperance. On Wednesday night the service was in the Free Methodist church, and the subject was Freemasonry and kindred secret societies. The attendance was fair, and the attention good.

M. H. N.

THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY AT SUMMERDALE.

SUMMERDALE (Chicago), Sept. 20, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was recently our fortune to have with us Rev. Henry L. Kellogg, who spoke both morning and evening to our usual audiences. The evening discourse was more particularly concerning the worship of God. In his kindly manner and clear style Mr. Kellogg showed that the worship we owe to God, and which He demands of all rational creatures, is turned aside from God by intervening objects—as lodge services. It was shown that the natural man is a worshipping creature, and that he finds no perfect satisfaction till he bows before the true God. The unregenerate man owes this worship to God, and much more do the children of God, born again by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Mr. Kellogg's address was intended for candid, truth-seeking Christians, and was admirably adapted to find entrance into the minds and hearts of his hearers. There was nothing of the slap-dash or defiant attitudes, but rather a confidence and tender bearing which begat confidence in those who heard it. There has been too much answering of fools according to their folly in the reform movements. "Carry the matter to the consciences of the true followers of God," said Bro. Kellogg, in a private conference; and it seems to me that the time has come to take the question into the churches in the way the Corresponding Secretary is doing.

May unhopd success crown the efforts of this new department of the National Christian Association. Very truly, EDGAR B. WYLIE.

SECRECY IN ST. PAUL CHURCHES.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 23, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—So far as I know, all the religious denominations in this city, except a few foreign churches, forbid an exposure of the spiritual scoundrelism practiced by themselves. They treat the truth as God's ancient church treated Christ; i. e., cast him out and crucified him.

On last Sabbath afternoon I spoke on Market Square to an interested audience upon this theme, detaining them until a quarter past 6 o'clock. At the close of the sermon, I gave away tracts, and they crowded around me, eager to receive them.

A timid young Christian brother feared that I might injure the influence of the churches. I do not know which to admire the least—this young Christian, or Peter at the trial of Christ.

There are many incidents transpiring that are convincing evidence that the spiritual leaders of the churches above alluded to are in league with that personal being whom the Bible calls the prince of liars. Yours truly, WM. FENTON.

THE OUTLOOK ENCOURAGING.

CANADA REJOICES.

One of her best citizens writes: "I think the morning has begun to dawn on Toronto. Ontario Province has been stirred, first, by the coming of Mr. Fenton, and then by Mr. Stoddard." As one result of the latter's work, the Lutheran church in Ottawa determined that those of her members in secret societies must choose between "leaving the lodge or the church." Its result was most happy, none leaving the church.

IOWA.

In about six weeks Iowa will hold her annual convention. Every friend in the State can aid the efforts of the Executive Committee to make this gathering one of great good to Iowa. Rev. W. C. Paden has been invited to spend some time previous to the convention in working up and waking up an interest.

W. L. Enlow, editor of the Free Press, will give much of his time to the same object. I hope the readers of the Cynosure will not only open the way for him to make addresses, but also take the Free Press. Every State anti-secrecy paper ought to be supported, as well as the national organ, the Cynosure.

OREGON.

Rev. M. H. Nichols, who has been laboring in Oregon since the Canby Convention, reports the delivery of three lectures in Yamhill Co., the last one in the county-seat, the home of friend Stratton, who was one of the first colporteurs sent out by the N. C. A., and will be remembered by many in Illinois, where he once labored.

I insert here the Constitution of the Pacific Coast Association, and request every friend of the cause in that district to join it. Send your name and postoffice address to Rev. S. Matthew, Canby, Oregon.

"This Association shall be auxiliary to the National Christian Association, at Chicago, Illinois. Art. 1. This organization declares itself opposed to all oath-bound secret societies, and more especially Freemasonry. Art. 2. We believe these secret associations to be very injurious to church and state; and antagonistic to the mutual and general welfare of all mankind. Art. 3. We will use the best possible means to enlighten, convince and save the people from these evil associations.

Art. 4. The officers shall consist of a president, a vice president, a secretary and treasurer; to be elected annually."

OUR VENERABLE COLLEGE AGENT,

Rev. Samuel F. Porter, is about to begin his winter campaign. His field will be Southeastern Ohio, West Virginia, and Old Virginia. His work is a labor of love and faith. He cannot hope to live to see whatever influence for good the anti-secrecy libraries which he is placing may have on the destiny of many a Sumner, or Lincoln, or Blanchard, of the future. Let us not forget to pray that his physical strength may be sufficient for the work.

REV. DR. GRAY.

I had the pleasure of meeting Rev. Dr. Gray, of Boston, last week, at the Moody Bible Institute, where he has been lecturing. He is a prominent Baptist pastor, who is true and faithful to his anti-secrecy convictions. He spoke very cordially of Bro. Stoddard as a Christian worker. Dr. Gray said he thought it important that the Bible doctrine on secretism be presented to the students at the Moody Institute. I trust that this will be done during the year. He led the Gospel Mission services here in the Cynosure building one night last week.

REV. J. P. STODDARD.

Few have traveled more miles, and labored in season and out of season during the summer and fall, than has the New England agent.

Bro. Stoddard was recently called to Kentucky on business, and then went to Knoxville to see friends and rest a day or two. He doubtless feels as did Wesley,—that "there will be time enough to rest in the grave." I learn, from private sources, that on Sabbath morning he preached in the Knoxville College chapel, at a "grove meeting" in the afternoon, a Presbyterian church in the evening, and attended a Baptist ministers' meeting the next morning! It is no wonder, I thought, that Dr. Gray appreciates him as a co-laborer in Boston.

THE CYNOSURE.

Are you pleased with the Cynosure? Do you realize that it is confessed to be the most efficient agent of the reform possible? Mr. Robert Burk's letter is just received and contains a new subscription. He writes: "I would like your excellent paper in every family in the land." How do you like the way he shows his faith? Perhaps he pays for it himself. Cannot you do the same? Mesdames Cheney and Hildreth have just paid for the paper to be sent to 500 pastors as the best method, in their judgment, of advancing this cause.

If you are tempted to send for some other paper because of the premium, I can doubtless furnish you the same premium with the Cynosure, just as cheaply. Try it.

TRACTS AND BOOKS.

What if every reader of this paper should undertake the thoughtful distribution, during the year, of 25 cents' worth of our tracts? It would not amount to much, do you say? It would amount to over 3,000,000 pages of seed-sowing! One gentleman wrote me that a torn two-page N. C. A. tract opened his eyes and saved him, and he had saved a number of others. Who will say that three million pages will not bring a glorious harvest? Will you try it?

During September I have sent out some forty thousand pages of these leaflets, which is an evidence that some are already enlisted in this army.

What a strong hold on the popular mind Dr. Carradine's sermon has had. At least two other houses besides the N. C. A. have published it. Our sales have averaged over twenty copies per day for every working day since we first printed it, some eighteen months ago. We have just printed the thirteenth thousand, and by adding two pages of testimonies of divines and statesmen have made it more valuable than ever.

This has been a good month for foreign book orders, especially to Canada, India, South Australia and New Zealand. Every country seems to be cursed with lodge worship. It only shows the largeness of the reform which confronts us. No subject in the index can be selected so vital to man as this one. We can not destroy evil. God alone can do that. He does not ask us to try to do it. He reserves that to himself. But we are to do two things—keep out of evil, and testify against it.

THE HOME.

THE TINKLING OF THE BELL.

The summer sun was setting,
And the hills were all aglow,
And a glory and a beauty
Rested in the vale below.
Suddenly, from out the stillness,
Over hills and through the dell,
Came the sweetest notes of music
In the tinkling of a bell.

And I stopped me there to listen,
'Mid that evening paradise,
For the sounds somehow had thrilled me,
Filled me with a glad surprise.
And I looked across the meadows
And the valleys rich and green,
With the lengthening evening shadows,
To my boyhood days again.

Just the tinkling of a cow-bell
O'er the hills and far away,
And a barefoot boy I wandered
In the golden summer days.
And the world looked like an Eden
With its round of mirth and joy,
For it seemed that God's own blessing
Rested on the farmer's boy.

Once again I saw them coming,
Through the timber—coming home,
Now "Indian file" across the "clearing"
Whitefoot, Cherry, Lineback, Roan,
So I make this glad confession,
Naught can stir my heart so well
As that plain old-time procession,
And the tinkling of the bell.

While the curfew's tones are falling
On the quiet evening air,
And L'Angelus is calling
Worshippers to bow in prayer,
Let me listen for the music
Which I heard at close of day—
Sacred be the blessed mem'ries
Of the good old times for aye.

FAITH AND SIGHT.

When Jesus put the clay on the eyes of the man born blind he left him with a command, but just as blind as he was before Jesus had finished his work; but the man was not benefited until he obeyed the command, "Go wash." He might have said, "I can't see my way to the pool," but he didn't. I have often thought that Jesus took pity on the man's ignorance and gave him something easy to do. He put clay on his face and said, "Go wash it off." Why shouldn't he! It was not likely that he would care to let it remain, and yet it was obedience. The man went blind; he came seeing. He received like so many others in Scripture, and as every one must to-day, his blessing in obedience. Sight often comes by faith, but faith by sight never. The witness of the Spirit is given to those who obey him, and feeling is but one of the results of faith in action. —Record of Christian Work.

PUTTING ON CHRIST.

No man's example will precisely fit his fellow-man; but there is this strange virtue about the character of Christ, that you may all imitate it, and yet be none of you mere imitators. He is perfectly natural who is perfectly like Christ. There need be no affectation, no painful restraint, no straining. So wonderfully is Jesus the second Adam of the new born race, that each member of that family may bear a likeness to him, and yet exhibit a clear individuality. A man advanced in years and wisdom may put him on, and so may the least instructed, and the freshest comer amongst us. Please remember this; we may not choose examples, but each one is bound to copy the Lord Jesus. You have a special personality; you are such a person that there is not another like you, and you are placed in circumstances so peculiar that no one else is tried exactly as you are;—to you, then, this exhortation is sent: "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." It is absolutely certain that, for you, with your personal singularity and peculiar circumstances, there can be nothing better than that you array yourself in this more than royal robe. You, too, who live in ordinary circumstances, and are only tried by common temptations, you are to "put on the Lord Jesus Christ," for he will be suitable for you, also. "Oh," cries one, "but the Lord Jesus never was exactly where I am!" You say this from want of knowing better, or from want of thought. He has been tempted in all points, like as you are. There are certain relationships which the Lord Jesus could not literally occupy; but then, he took their spiritual counterpart. For instance, Jesus could not be a husband after the flesh. Does any one demand how he could be an example for husbands? Harken! "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it." He is your model in a relationship which, naturally, he never sustained, but which in every deed, he has more than fulfilled. Wherever you may be, you find that the Lord Jesus has occupied the counterpart of your position, or else the position is sinful, and ought to be quitted. In any place, at any hour, in any circumstances, in any matter, you may put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and never fear that your array will be unsuitable.—Chas. H. Spurgeon.

A MAN OF PRAYER.

Men of might are men of prayer. He who is to prevail with men must first prevail with God. It is said "as a matter of habit and rule, John Wesley's ordinary private praying consumed two hours a day." At times he would gather his company and pray all night. Nothing was considered too great or too small to take to the Lord. Seized with a pain in the midst of his preaching, so that he could not speak, "I know my remedy," he says, and immediately kneeled down. In a moment the pain was gone. Being seized with a pain, fever and cough, so that he could hardly speak, "I called on Jesus aloud to increase my faith. While I was speaking my pain vanished away, my fever left me, and my bodily strength returned."

The elements as well as sickness were often in his way, and prayer removed the hindrances. "Just as I began to preach the sun broke out and shone exceedingly hot on my head. I found if it continued I should not be able to speak long, and I lifted up my heart to God. In a minute or two it was covered with clouds, which continued until the service was over." And he says, "Let any one who pleases call this chance; I call it a answer to prayer." It was raining, and Wesley and his congregation were crowded out of the church, and the rain ceased the moment they came out. He says in regard to this incident, "How many proofs must we have that there is no petition too little, any more than too great, for God to grant."

Wesley moved things mightily. He became the prince of evangelists, because he was the prince of prayers. He stirred the world with the fire of his zeal, because he had stirred heaven by the fire of his prayers. His pleas had access to men's consciences because they first had access to God. If more men prayed as John Wesley prayed, there would be more of John Wesley's thoroughly spiritual work done.—Selected.

A LITTLE DUTCH GIRL.

More than two hundred years ago a little girl was born at Amsterdam, in Holland, whose name was Joanna Koerten. She was a peculiar child, in that she cared nothing for play and sport, but found her greatest delight in making copies of things about her, imitating in wax every kind of fruit, and making on silk, with colored floss, exact copies of paintings, which were thought wonderful.

But after she had become very accomplished in music, spinning and embroidery, she abandoned all these for a still more extraordinary art—that of cutting.

One is seized with astonishment in looking at her work, for all that the engraver accomplishes with the graver, she effected with her scissors.

She executed landscapes, marine views, flowers, animals, and portraits of people of such striking resemblance, that she was for a time quite the wonder of Europe.

She used white paper for her cuttings, placing them over a black surface, so that the minute openings made by her scissors formed the "light and shade."

The Czar, Peter the Great, and others of high rank paid her honor. One man high in office vainly offered her a thousand florins for three small cuttings. The Empress of Germany paid her four thousand florins for a trophy she had cut, bearing the arms of Emperor Leopold, crowned with eagles and surrounded by a garland of flowers. She also cut the Emperor's portrait, which can now be seen in the Royal Art Gallery in Vienna. A great many people went to see her, and she kept a book in which princes and princesses wrote their names. After she died, which was when she had lived sixty-five years, her husband, Adrian Block, erected a monument to her memory, and had designed upon it the portraits of these titled visitors. Her cuttings were so correct in effect, and so tasteful, as to give both dignity and value to her work, and constitute her an artist whose exquisite skill with the scissors has never before nor since been equalled. So both her art and her monument were unique, and have kept her in "memory green" for nearly two hundred and fifty years.

A BOY WHO REMEMBERED.

A BIT OF HISTORY.

During the reign of Alexander II. of Russia, one of the banks of Moscow was swindled out of a large sum of money. Colonel Olonetz, then in command of a regiment of Cossacks, was suspected of being the adroit scoundrel, but there was not evidence enough to convict him, although he was under arrest in one of the towns of Novgorod.

The missing link in the evidence was the one necessary absolutely to prove the colonel had driven the vehicle which had stood outside the bank, and which had been traced from Moscow into the district of Novgorod, where it had been abandoned.

One morning a confederate of the swindler stopped at the door of a country smith's shop in the district, where the smith, Ivan Feodor by name, was hammering away on his anvil.

"Good morning," cried the visitor, his suave manner in keeping with his fine clothes. "About ten days ago you shod a black horse, for a heavy-built, dark-faced, military-looking man."

"I don't know," replied the smith, as he leaned on his sledge. "I shoe a great many horses—black, brown, gray and piebald—for all sorts of people, and I don't tax my memory with it."

"He drove a pair of black horses, with flowing tails and manes," particularized the visitor. "They were harnessed to a black carriage with panels picked in with green. The man had a loud, clear voice, and—"

"I remember the occasion distinctly," interrupted Ivan Feodor.

"But I don't want you to remember with distinctness," the stranger bluntly said.

"Ah, indeed!" exclaimed the smith. "Then why press me so minutely?"

"I'd rather your memory were vague—nay, exceedingly treacherous," the other said in a significant tone. "I have a thousand rubles here," he added, with a shrug of his shoulders. "They are yours just as easy as that," and he snapped his fingers.

Ivan Feodor was at once on the alert. He was needy, greedy, unscrupulous. "I'd like to make a thousand rubles that easy," he said with a grin.

"Who wouldn't, I'd like to know?" asked the stranger, at the same time displaying a bag of coin. "You may be called upon to testify to-morrow. Now, you know, you need not be able to recall the man, the team, or the occasion, with anything like definiteness. You can edge away, when questioned, without your conscience troubling you about it afterwards."

"I understand you," responded the smith, with a grin, his eyes on the bag of gold. "Really, I don't know that it was ten days ago. It might have been twenty. There are many dark-faced men and many dark horses. As I didn't repair the carriage, I am not sure that I looked at it. I had no occasion to."

He laughed cunningly, whereupon the visitor said: "I find you can do me a service. Here is the money."

The smith took the bag with an avaricious chuckle. "But my wife saw the man and the team," he slowly said.

"Oh, she did, eh?" cried the visitor; "but I have no bag of rubles for her. Perhaps they will not send for her."

"Anyhow, her memory is ten times worse than mine," Ivan Feodor said, with a significant leer. "Then, too, my boy was looking on."

"Pooh!" cried the other as he walked away.

The next day the officers of the law arrested the smith, his wife and his son, a bright, honest, observant boy, and took them before the magistrate.

Colonel Olonetz, the prisoner, was present at the hearing, but the smith and his wife would not swear to his identity. The one thousand rubles had befogged their memories, and the conflicting character of their testimony was purposed.

A look of gratification came to the face of the prisoner, for he knew the evidence was not sufficient to convict him. His equanimity was a little disturbed, however, when the prosecuting officer of the Viceroy of the valosti (district) called the blacksmith's son to the stand.

After it had been ascertained that the boy knew the nature and responsibility of an oath, it was administered.

"What is your name?" he was asked.

"Paul Feodor," was his prompt reply.

"How old are you?"

"Fourteen years, sir."

"You are Ivan Feodor's son?"

"I am, sir."

"You are learning your trade with him?"

"Yes."

"You saw the stranger and his team about ten days ago?"

"I did, sir."

"Describe the horses."

"They were black, heavy, handsome."

"With flowing tails and manes?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were they well mated?"

"Yes, sir."

"Your mother said they were not matched in size or color."

"They were a well-matched pair," insisted the boy.

"What do you know about the carriage?"

"It was a new carriage, painted black, with panels picked in with green, and wheels of the same color."

"Your father testified that the wheels were painted red; and your mother said they were yellow."

"The wheels were black, sir."

"Colonel Olonetz, stand up!" ordered the prosecuting officer. Then he asked Paul Feodor, "Is this the man who drove the team?"

"He is, sir," answered the boy, fearlessly.

"Are you positive about it?"

"I am, sir."

The direct testimony of the boy annoyed the colonel, for he saw that it was not without effect.

"I claim the right to cross-examine this boy," he said.

"Proceed," the prosecuting officer quietly rejoined.

In spite of the most adroit and persistent questioning, the colonel could not get the boy to stultify himself; he did not even succeed in confusing him.

"What hour of the day was I at your father's shop?" he asked at last.

"At five o'clock in the afternoon," replied the boy.

"Your father said I was there at noon; your mother says I was there in the morning. Why is your memory any better than theirs?"

"You were there at five o'clock in the afternoon," persisted the boy.

"How do you know?" fiercely asked the colonel.

He did not in the least suspect that the answer to that question would cost him his commission and banish him to Siberia.

"Because you looked at your watch," slowly and impressively replied the boy, "and it struck five while you held it in your hand."

The colonel sat down with an ashen pallor on his face, his knees weak and twitching.

"What do you say, Master Feodor?" cried the prosecuting officer, as he sprang to his feet.

"Do you mean to say that the watch struck?"

"It did, sir. It struck five. I never knew that watches struck."

"Colonel Olonetz," the prosecuting officer blandly said, "be so kind as to let me look at your watch?"

The timepiece was ungraciously surrendered to him.

"A valuable old heirloom," the officer said, admiringly. "A relic of the sixteenth century, no doubt. It is one minute of five o'clock now."

He held out the watch in his flat, open palm. He lifted his other hand in a waiting gesture, a perfect stillness filling the room. The silence was broken by the watch striking five times with silvery distinctness, and the prisoner's doom was thereby sealed.

"Ivan Feodor," the officer said frowning, "your hearing is bad, your vision dim, your memory too accommodating. I dismiss you for an honest boy's sake."

Paul Feodor's part in the affair was related to the Viceroy, who in turn informed the emperor. The latter made a mental note of it. At least the boy, after he grew up and had mastered his father's trade, became chief of farriers in the emperor's favorite brigade.—Harper's Young People.

TEMPERANCE.

THE GROGGERY CASH-BELL.

* From the earliest glimmer of day

To the setting of every sun,

There's a chiming of bells that merrily tells

Of shame and of crime begun.

Ching!

Five cents for a glass of beer;

Ching!

Ten cents for a whisky straight.

And the devil stands near with a horrible leer

Like the wrath of a hideous fate.

And all through the wearisome night

In noisome and smoke-tainted air,

Men are mixing their brains with horrible pains

And branding their souls with despair.

Ching!

Ten cents for a glass of rye;

Ching!

Fifteen for a Bourbon sour.

While the little babes cry because hunger is nigh

And tortures them hour after hour.

Oh, vain for the church bells to sound

The beautiful praises of Christ.

By a merrier chime ringing all of the time

Are the souls of our brothers enticed.

Ching!

Ten cents for a glass of wine;

Ching!

Fifteen for a bumper of rum.

While the desolate pine with a patience divine,

And the mourners with sorrow are dumb.

Then what though hard times be abroad,

And the gaunt form of famine appear?

There is gold and to spare to buy whisky and care,

And enough to buy sorrow and beer.

Ching!

Ten cents for insanity's spell;

Ching!

Five cents for a bumper of woe—

'Tis a musical knell ringing souls down to hell,

And to frenzy and shame ere they go!

A SATIRE.

IS IT UN-AMERICAN OR UN-CHRISTIAN TO SELL LIQUOR AT THE FAIR?

The Local Directory's Reply.

To the members of the American churches of all ranks, from laity to bishop, including editors of the religious press:

Since it became known to the public that we have decided to permit some foreign exhibitors of certain products (beverage liquors) to sell samples upon the Exposition grounds, you have not ceased to charge us with engaging in the saloon business and to vehemently protest substantially that our action is un-American, un-Christian, immoral, etc. We ask you to pause long enough to hear our defense.

We admit that in a certain sense, and to a slight extent, we are in the "business." Perhaps fifty, possibly a hundred restaurants will sell beverage liquors with their meals. But guided by the safe example of our municipal, state and national government we have fully guarded against all evils by exacting a large license fee—"sharing the profits." We needed the revenue. Is that un-American? Investigating on our own account we find in our country 200,000 saloons, to which the American people in their individual capacity pay annually $1,200,000,000, and from which in their governmental capacity, they exact for the general government $200,000,000 and for the States as much more. We find these saloons established and protected by law, and the laws enacted by legislators elected by 12,000,000 voters. Is such a traffic American and our mild form un-American?

Is it un-Christian? Here we have also investigated. We learn by consulting officials and official records of American churches, that about 4,000,000 voting members exercise the political power of the 20,000,000 citizens, constituting one-third of the voting strength, the political power, the real government of the nation. We learn that more than ninety-five percent of these Christian voters, during at least twenty-five years, have, in state and national legislative elections, sustained with their ballots the administrations which have enacted the above-named liquor laws. Can such a traffic, sustained with such a practical unanimity by the political power of Christian churches, be un-Christian? Why do you single us out for your savage denunciations? Is the traffic worse inside than outside the Exposition grounds? There are 6,000 saloons in the city outside our grounds licensed by our good Mayor Washburne. Why don't you jump onto him to revoke those licenses, and make the Exposition as safe outside as you wish it to be inside? Thousands of you voted for him and will do so again, knowing his record, if he is again a candidate. Why don't you strike the officials who have established the nation's 200,000 saloons instead of voting for them? If we are guilty, the mayor is 6,000 and you voting Christians are 66,000 times as guilty. Why strain out our gnat and swallow the nation's camel?

We confess that the traffic is immoral everywhere. But will not our little restaurants be comparatively innocuous to those who have safely run the gauntlet of the nation's 200,000 saloon dives and doggeries, scattered "thick as leaves in Vallambrosa?" Why, Christian friends, our grounds with the permitted traffic will be a secure asylum—will be absolute safety—to which every native inhabitant and foreign visitor should flee, from the overwhelming saloon scourge outside.

You wield one-third of the political power of this nation. Unite upon a prohibition platform and ticket, and you will infallibly attract enough voters to make a governing plurality at next fall's election, and can destroy utterly the saloon. Will you do it? If not, permit us to sorrowfully point out that while you refuse this or some other equivalent exercise of your undeniable power, you are posing as exhibitors in a vast Columbian Exposition of hypocrisy; and to say "Fudge" and "Fie upon you" in reply to your continued accusations; and to suggest in the spirit of your Leader, that you yoke up to our nineteenth century steam and electric motors and drag that ponderous beam from your own eyes before you poke your annoying tweezers into our visual organs in search of our alleged mote. So mote it be! Sincerely,

A COLD WATER STORY.

Somewhere lives a small farmer of such social habits that his coming home intoxicated was once no unusual thing. His wife urged him in vain to reform. "Why, you see," he would say, "I don't like to break off at once; it ain't wholesome. The best way is always to get used to a thing by degrees, you know."

"Very well, old man," his helpmeet would rejoin, "see now if you don't fall into a hole one of these days, while you can't take care of yourself, and nobody near to take you out." Sur enough, as if to verify the prophecy, a couple of days after, returning from a drunken frolic, the fellow reeled into his own well, and, after a deal of useless scrambling, shouted for the "light of his eyes" to come and help him out.

"Didn't I tell you so?" said the good old soul, showing her cap frill over the edge of the parapet; "you've got into a hole at last, and it's only lucky I'm in hearing, or you might have drowned." "Well," she continued after a pause, letting down the bucket, "take hold." And up he came, higher at every turn of the windlass, until the old lady's grasp slipping from the handle, down he went to the bottom again. This occurring more than once made the temporary occupant of the well suspicious. "Look here," he screamed in fury, at the last splash, "you're doing that on purpose—I know you are."

"Well, now I am," responded his old woman, while winding him up once more; "didn't you tell me it's best to get used to a thing by degrees? I'm afraid if I were to bring you right up of a sudden you wouldn't find it wholesome."

The old fellow could not help chuckling at her application of his principle, and protested that he would sign the pledge on the instant, if she would lift him fairly out. This she did, and packed him off to "swear in," wet as he was.—Exchange.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The healing of Eneas. Vs. 32-35. There was now a rest from persecution. The loss of their leader, Saul, must have been felt keenly by the Jewish party, for there seems to have been no one in their ranks willing or qualified to take his place. Peter could now make a leisurely missionary tour, comforting and building up the rent and scattered churches; and on his way he came down to the saints which dwelt at Lydda. Nothing is more noticeable than the common use of this word "saints," by the apostles, when speaking of or to these early converts, yet now it is a term carefully avoided even by those who ought to feel it their highest honor and joy to wear it. All Christians are "called to be saints." See 1 Cor. 1: 2. How careful, then, should we be to make our calling sure, and, so far from being ashamed of the term when applied to us by a godless world, esteem it far more glorious than any title of nobility. Here he found a poor paralytic who had kept his bed eight years, but who was made immediately whole when commanded by Peter, in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, to rise up and take his bed. The result was a very general conversion of the people in Lydda and Saron who witnessed or heard of the miracle. Eneas was made whole that the glory of Christ might be made manifest in his healing. We do not read that he ever became a noted evangelist or teacher; and yet this paralytic, though he may have been a poor and ignorant man, by his simple faith in Jesus became himself an embodied sermon, so eloquent that it turned the population of two cities to Christ. Faith is a mighty power, and in the poorest and most illiterate often brings forth the grandest fruits.

2. The death of Dorcas. Vs. 36-38. Joppa is the modern Jaffa, the scene of many stirring events both in the crusades and during Napoleon's campaigns in Egypt; but the fact that it was the abode of this lovely and beloved Christian woman, whose name has become synonymous with deeds of charity, gives it a deeper interest than all the wars and sieges through which it has passed. Tabitha is the Syro-Chaldaic, and Dorcas the Greek, for an antelope or a gazelle, which, because of its beauty and gentleness, was often used for a woman's name, just as we to-day use the names of flowers, like the rose or lily, in the same way. A beautiful character does not always accompany a beautiful name, but it did with Dorcas. She was full of good works and almsdeeds. She combined both the active and passive form of Christian benevolence. She not only gave liberally of her money to help the poor, but she gave herself. To those widows and orphans who had been fed and clothed by her bounty, mysterious indeed must have seemed the dispensation of Providence which thus took her and left others who might seemingly have been better spared. From the action of the disciples in sending for Peter, we can see that the church at Joppa felt her death as a severe blow. Perhaps they had come to rely on Dorcas too much, just as in our churches to-day the tendency is to let the peculiarly efficient members bear the brunt of the work, thus fostering a self-complacent spirit of laziness in those who should be emulating their example. Bengel says, in reference to the disciples sending for Peter, that it shows they did not possess any miraculous gifts. We do not know to what heights their faith might have risen had there been no Peter to call on; but it is true that the gift of miracles is mentioned along with others, such as the gift of tongues, of healing, etc., as not given to all alike. Paul expressly implies (1 Cor. 12: 28-30) that all cannot work miracles. "Then Peter arose and went with them." His faith seems not to have faltered at the extraordinary call made upon it. He puts all the weeping throng out of the chamber, reminding us of Jesus when he raised the ruler's daughter; but unlike him in this, that he kneeled down and prayed. He had not, like Jesus, life in himself. He was only the human channel to convey that life to the dead and motionless form before him. What must have been the joy of those weeping widows when he presented their benefactress alive! The result of this miracle, as in the other, was that "many turned unto the Lord." We are told that in the last days deceivers shall arise who will work great signs and wonders. We may always know them by their fruits. A work which is of God will turn the people to God, but a work which is of Satan will turn the people away from God, to follow wild speculations and anti-Christian theories.

3. Simon the tanner. V. 43. A tanner's trade was not considered reputable by the Jews, because the necessary contact with blood and dead animals made it ceremonially unclean. Even among heathen nations it was a business carried on outside of towns. Peter, by lodging with a tanner, shows that he was already divested of many of his Jewish prejudices, and therefore prepared for a still broader experience.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The London Freeman says: It is reported that the deacons of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, in answer to an invitation from the church that Dr. Pierson should return to its pulpit, have received the following telegram: "Philemon, Verse 22."

—Mrs. Spurgeon received a letter from an admirer of her late husband, requesting that she would send his sermon on "The Greatest Fight in the World" to 35,000 ministers, of various denominations, in every part of Great Britain and Ireland. He enclosed in his letter a sum of money sufficient to defray the cost of complying with his request.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The minutes of the Congregational churches of Connecticut, just issued, show that that denomination is barely holding its own in that State. There are but 306 churches in the State, and only 115 churches have settled pastors. The membership of these is 59,444, showing an increase during the year of but 437. The number of scholars in the Sunday-schools of these churches is not so large as it was a year ago; and 118 churches with a membership of 12,499 report no infant baptisms.

—The annual contributions of the Congregational churches in the United States, for benevolent purposes, amount to $2,448,875.

EVANGELICAL.

—The Moody Institute on 80 Institute Place, Chicago, is being enlarged by the addition of two new stories to the men's building. This will give accommodations for something like a hundred and fifty new men; and Superintendent Torrey says they are waiting to enter. There are more calls for accommodations than he has heretofore been able to meet, and the demand for lay help from among the students and graduates of the school have been far beyond his ability to supply.

—Mr. Moody will hold a mission in London in October, for eight or ten days, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, to reach the central and southern portions of the metropolis.

—The weekly evening vocal class which has been carried on in the Bible Institute for the past three years will resume on Tuesday evening, October 4. This class is specially for Christian young people who are not members of the Institute, and last year numbered nearly five hundred members. The daily vocal classes will meet at 10 A. M., and are also open to any such who wish to attend. No tuition is charged, the only expense being the price of the book, which is furnished at fifty cents, the wholesale price. The Institute is located at 80 Institute Place, between La Salle avenue and Wells street.

FRIENDS.

—Anson Cox, of Estacado, Texas, is doing a noble work. He has traveled in a cart to various points and held meetings, some of which have been very successful revivals, resulting in many conversions, and great good to the church. One appointment required 68 miles of travel each month, and the aggregate of his travel for the last few months has been 425 miles.

—A conference of the Peace Association of Friends in America is called to be held at Friends' Meeting House at Indianapolis, Ind., commencing on the 22d of Tenth month (October), 1892, at 7:30 P. M. The object of the conference is to consider how Friends may best increase the interest in and carry forward the cause of peace. Subjects of much importance will be discussed, both as regards the general and special aspects of work, the interests of the Association, and the progress made in the several yearly meetings.

MENNONITE.

—The General Conference is to begin on the 1st of October, at Harrisburg, Ohio, at 10 A. M.

—The Christliche Botschafter, Cleveland, Ohio, tells its readers that in Prussia and throughout all Germany the Mennonites are on the decrease, and adds, among the Mennonites in America alone an increase in membership is manifest. This increase is due, not only to immigration but also to accessions from other churches.

—A step far in advance of their practice of former years was taken by the camp meeting people at Perkaspie, Pa., this summer, in that they closed the gates of the ground on Sunday.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—All branches of Methodists are being welcomed to City Road Chapel, London, the mother church of Methodism. The Primitive Methodists are to hold their missionary breakfast there in May.

—Rev. Charles H. Kelly, Methodist book-steward in London, Eng., has made another discovery of valuable manuscript books in the cellars of the book-room. The find consists of fifteen volumes in excellent preservation. Of these the greater number contain hymns and poems in the beautiful handwriting of Charles Wesley.

—Ohio Wesleyan University opened its fall term with more students than have been present at any preceding matriculation day. The attendance will exceed 1,200.

—Bishop Foster says he is one of only eleven in all the world who have preached the Gospel for fifty-five years consecutively, and without rest, in the ministry.

—The Christian World of London, in a note relating to Miss Willard's visit to England, says: "Miss Willard is connected with the American Methodist Episcopal church, and her influence therein is probably equal to that of several bishops put together; but, like the other women members, she is not allowed to take part in the government of the church."

—The corner-stone of the new church at Houghton, Mich., was laid Saturday afternoon, Sept. 10, by Mrs. R. Edwards, the oldest member of the church, and nearly seventy-six years. She did her part well, too. This is probably the first case of a woman performing such a service in connection with a church.

—The venerable Henry Martin, a member of First Methodist church in Elgin, Ill., died suddenly, Sept. 18, aged eighty-seven. He aided to build the two larger churches in Elgin, and had purchased homes in that city in which several superannuated preachers have been sheltered.

The National Association of Local Preachers of the Methodist Episcopal church will hold its thirty-fifth annual meeting in the First M. E. church, Cleveland, O., Oct. 1 to 4.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—On Wednesday last, at Toronto, Can., there was commenced a ten days' session of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, or, to give it its full title, "The Fifth General Council of the Alliance of Reformed Churches Holding the Presbyterian System." The first of these councils, which are held every four years, was held in Edinburgh in 1876. The others since that time have been held in Philadelphia in 1880; in Belfast in 1884, and in London in 1888. To-day there are in the city about 200 delegates, comprising ministers and elders, and this number will be increased by over one hundred more ere the session closes. The churches represented are the English Presbyterian church, the United Presbyterian church of Scotland, the Free church of Scotland, the Presbyterian church of Australia, the Presbyterian and Reformed churches of the continent of Europe, the Presbyterian church of Canada, the Reformed churches of the United Presbyterian church of North America, the Presbyterian church in the United States, the General Synod of the Reformed church in the United States, the Cumberland Presbyterian church, the Church of Scotland, the Reformed Presbyterian church, Original Secession, and the Welsh Calvinistic. Rev. Prof. Blaikie, of Edinburgh presides.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—The Roman Catholic church is making strenuous efforts in the United States to win the Negro race, and with skilful methods, as well as no inconsiderable success. Thus an annual collection is called for. And on January 1, 1891, twenty-one churches were set apart for the use of colored Catholics, with thirty-four priests in charge. During 1890 baptism was administered to 4,883 children and 704 adults. From the same report we learn that in 115 schools 8,280 children were in attendance. Over twenty different sisterhoods are in charge of these schools, of whom two are composed of colored women—the Oblates of Baltimore, and the Holy Family Sisters of New Orleans. There are, moreover, a foundling asylum, six orphanages, three industrial schools, a guild for servant girls, an academy, and a home for the aged. The Catholic Negroes are put at 152,692.

HELPFUL HINTS.

Clean bronzes with sweet oil carefully rubbed on, then polish with chamois.

Put a teaspoonful of salt into a kerosene lamp once in awhile.

If an article has been slightly scorched in ironing, it may be whitened by placing in the bright sunlight.

In pouring out medicine turn the bottle so that the label is on the upper side, and thus will not be soiled or defaced.

To remove grass-stains from light summer dresses put a little alcohol in a saucer, wet the stained part with it, rub well and the green will be gone.

If the mirror is placed where sunlight or any very strong light falls directly upon it, the quicksilver will be liable to dissolve, leaving dark spots on the glass.

Never bite sewing silk nor pass it through the mouth, as it is soaked in acetate of lead to make it heavier. Lead-poisoning has been known to result from such a habit.

Instead of putting food into the oven to keep hot for late comers, it is a good plan to cover closely with a tin and set it over a basin of hot water. This will keep the food hot and at the same time prevent it from drying.

A scientist says that, of all fruits, the apple is the most nutritious, being the richest in sugar and albumen. The juiciest apples are more digestible, but the mealy sorts are usually preferable since they are more nutritious.

The amount of dust which works into a mattress is scarcely comprehended by a housekeeper unless she sees it as it flies in clouds when the hair is cleansed. This dirt, unhealthy in all ways, cuts the hair and injures it, so that mattresses should be renovated as often as every four years.

If you are obliged to be on your feet for many hours, it is a great relief to change your shoes occasionally. There is a practical reason for the rest this simple artifice affords. No two shoes compress the foot in exactly the same place, so it is rested in one sore spot although it may be tired in another.

A thorough and faithful use of the brush is the best medicine for the hair, always remembering that it is the hair, not the scalp, which is to receive the vigorous treatment. The brush should be immaculately clean, with fine, soft bristles that go through the hair, taking with them every particle of dust.

What is left of a prescription, the use of which is permanently discontinued, should be thrown away, as it is not likely that the same combination will ever be used again; and most of them undergo changes in character by age, so that to keep them only swells the contents of the medicine chest and increases the liability to error.

Before returning home in the fall, when the house has been shut up all summer, certain precautions should be taken. First, all the windows should be opened, flooding the house with air and sunlight. Then the water must be turned on and the pipes flushed thoroughly. It is important to have all the plumbing carefully examined and good disinfectants should be used.

A wet umbrella should always be placed handle down, so that the moisture shall drip from it at the edges of the frame and the material with which it is covered dry evenly. If it is allowed to stand, handle upward, the water runs down to one spot at the top, where the strong lining about the ring holds a good deal of it. This in a comparatively short time rots the material and it breaks easily.

One of the simplest ways to remove fruit-stains from linen or cambric, is to place the stained part over a bowl and pour boiling water through it. Do this before the stained article has been put in water containing soap or any helps to remove dirt. If the water is poured through soon after the stain is made it will take less to remove it.

push them back on the shelves, dusting the front only. The best thing for the daily dusting of the books is a small hair brush with long bristles, which enables one to brush the top of them easily. Once in two or three weeks they should be thoroughly dusted by taking out half a dozen at once, cleaning them and the shelf from which they came and putting them back in order.

"If your daughter must ask her way of a man, tell her to ask a laboring man," said an experienced woman who knew life. He might not doff his hat so deferentially, but he would guide her better. For every empty observance, heartless formula, polite word or deed, not founded on honesty and reason, we are tempted to think less of those we falsely honor; action and re-action are equal.

FARM NOTES.

From the Farm, Field and Stockman.

LIVE STOCK.

The cow sets us an admirable example—she never blows her own horn.

Feeding cold milk is a frequent cause of scours in calves. Feed milk at blood heat.

It is not the amount of food consumed, but that digested, which keeps the horse strong and plump.

When buying yearling or weanling colts it is well to see both sire and dam and know what you are buying.

The beef cattle men are all complaining that beef is low, while mutton and poultry are proportionately higher.

The horse that wears a cruel bit attached to an over check-rein, has an owner that hasn't a bit of humane feeling.

It will be safe to keep young stock off of low, damp pastures, especially at night and till dew and fog are gone in the morning.

It is easier to wash and keep the legs clean now than to cure the scratches after awhile. But be sure the legs are thoroughly dried after washing.

You will find the horses will rest much better during the night if you clean them up well in the evening. A good night's rest means better work the next day.

When the colt is first hitched to a wagon, don't give him a load that requires any effort to move. The foundation for many a balky horse has been laid in this way.

If you wish to form a dairy herd to procure a large yield of milk for a cheese factory or for sale by the quart or gallon, use a pure-bred Holstein-Friesian or Ayrshire bull of a good milking family.

POULTRY.

Give one feed of good, sound grain daily. Wheat is good.

Fowls like fresh water in the fall as well as in the summer.

When you see the fowls busy scratching you may conclude they are thrifty.

More than 3,000,000 eggs are used annually by three factories in this country, which make the albumen-paper used in photography.

It matters but little where the roosts are arranged provided they are out of the way of those who are compelled to pass in and out. The roosts should be in such a position that the fowls will be comfortable, the main object being to avoid drafts or currents of air which soon play sad havoc with a flock.

HORTICULTURAL.

Save seed from the finest and smoothest tomatoes.

Get in your bulbs for winter and early spring blooms.

Leaf mold makes good material for potting most plants.

Save the earliest and best lima beans for seed—not the tallings of the crop.

If there are large weeds in the garden mow them and burn so as to destroy as many seeds as possible.

The apple-trees of a Wheaton, Illinois gentleman (W. B. Guild), are blossoming for the second time this season. That is a pretty sure sign that he won't get any apples.

Will some of our readers who have had experience in caring for sweet potatoes during the winter give us, for publication, the mode they have found the best for keeping them in good shape till spring?

Of the cheap remedies used to rid cabbage of worms, our neighbor gardener found two ounces of saltpetre and a handful of salt to two gallons of water the most effective. On our own plants air-slaked lime did the best work.

If Kinsley, Kansas, subscriber who wishes to know the best way to destroy seedling cherry sprouts will cut them off close to the tree at once, we think it will kill them. If the "sprouts" are the "seedling" itself, dig up by the roots.

John Thorpe, Chief of the Bureau of Floriculture, has a night-blooming cerus at Jackson Park. He expects this plant, which has forty-two buds, to burst into beauty in a short time. It came from Freeport, Ill., and is more than twenty years old.

A Freistatt, Mo., subscriber asks: "When is the best time to replant strawberries for next year's crop, and which of the runners are best, young shoots or older ones, for planting?" Set them out just as soon as you can, and use the older plants from this season's runners.

The prices of potatoes this season will be remunerative to those who follow the plan of putting in about the same amount to the crop year after year. Some always plant less the year following low prices. They usually meet disappointment in having none to sell when prices are good.

Seeds of either peas or beans infested with the pea weevil, may be disinfested by placing them in a tight receptacle with camphor, chloroform, ether, or better still, bisulphide of carbon. Before planting, it is well to throw them into water, when the "buggy" seed will float and may then be separated from the perfect ones and destroyed.

One leads to the other. The "cutting" of prices leads to the substitution of worthless goods—fraudulent imitations of the genuine medicine, dilutions of it, all sorts of cheap substitutes to make a larger profit. That's the reason the makers of Dr. Pierce's medicines object to the cutting of prices—and that's the reason they prevent it, on their medicines.

To protect the public from fraud and imposition, the genuine guaranteed medicines of Dr. R. V. Pierce are now sold only through druggists regularly authorized as agents, and always at these long-established prices:

Golden Medical Discovery (for the liver, blood and lungs), $1.00.
Favorite Prescription (for woman's weaknesses and ailments), $1.00.
Pleasant Pellets (for the liver, stomach and bowels), 25 cents.
But they're the cheapest medicines sold, for you pay only for the good you get. The money is refunded if they don't benefit or cure. Beware of spurious imitations or substitutes at lower prices than above.

Bro. I. R. B. Arnold of the "River Mission" is again visiting Illinois for a few days. He speaks or has spoken in Glen Ellyn and Wheaton before he returns.

A private letter from Munich (Bav.), Sept. 18, states that the cholera panic all through Germany was then beginning to subside. All means possible were used to prevent the spread of the epidemic, and not a single case had then appeared in Bavaria.

As intimated in a former issue, the Chinese Six Companies, of San Francisco—an oligarchy to which the Chinese in America unreservedly render strict obedience—have issued a proclamation urging resistance to the United States laws which require every Mongolian to register his name, residence, etc., with the authorities, accompanying the record with his photographic portrait. This step will place the dusky aliens in serious opposition to the Government, and tend to inaugurate anarchy and bloodshed.

News from the Sandwich Islands reports that a syndicate of citizens of the United States has applied for an exclusive franchise by the Hawaiian legislature to establish a lottery in Honolulu for a term of twenty-five years. The company is to pay for the franchise $500,000 each year in quarterly installments, the minister of the interior to disburse this sum for the following purposes: Ocean cable between Honolulu and any port on the North American continent, connecting with the American telegraph system, $100,000 per annum; a subsidy for the construction of a railroad around the island of Oahu, $50,000 per annum; a subsidy for a railroad through Hilo and Hamakua, Hawaii, $50,000 per annum; roads, bridges, landings and wharves in Hawaiian kingdom, $175,000 per annum; improving Honolulu harbor, $50,000 per annum; encouragements to industries in the kingdom, $50,000 per annum. Other inducements and concessions are added, which, if the franchise is granted, will place this enterprise on a footing similar to that of the old Louisiana State Lottery, which is now happily extinct. Hawaii will find it a gigantic and pestiferous monopoly.

The German Catholic Congress, in session at Newark, N. J., last week placed itself, unmistakably, in opposition to the American public school system. Thousands of persons were in attendance at the public meeting on Tuesday evening, drawn thither by a rumor that Cahenslyism would be recommended. Resolutions were adopted, declaring, among other things, that "we approve what St. Peter approved; we recommend what he recommends; we condemn what he condemns, and we tolerate what he tolerates." Touching upon the school question, they indorsed those bishops, especially the bishop of Illinois, who have declared that parochial schools must be maintained, and an emphatic protest was made against any attempt on the part of the State to enact any laws which should in any manner infringe upon the rights of those schools. All Catholics are called upon to give their votes to such men only as are "right upon the school question." If the friends of the public schools, and of taxation for the education of all children, expect to maintain their position, they will understand from the action of the Roman Catholics that they have no school-boy quarrel on their hands. Vigilance, earnestness and united effort can alone save "the little red school-house" from demolition.

ANTI-SECRET STATE CONVENTIONS.

Members of the National Christian Association and all friends of Anti-Secrecy Reform are hereby invited to attend and participate in the approaching State Conventions in behalf of the cause:

NEBRASKA

While the official program is not yet received, we are enabled to announce that among those who are expected to attend are the following: Rev. E. B. Graham, Rev. J. W. Morton (North Loup), and Rev. W. C. Paden. Prof. S. M. Hill, principal of the Luther Academy, Wahoo, is to present the issue with Jesuitry. Rev. John M. French, pastor of the First United Presbyterian church in Omaha, will also address the convention. Rev. W. I. Brooks, of Pawnee, will give an address on the Church vs. the Lodge. Rev. W. S. Fulton, of Bostwick, Neb., will also address the convention. Bro. Wm. C. Bissell, of Humboldt, will furnish a paper; and J. R. Dodds, an excellent singer, of Wahoo, will conduct the singing during the sessions. Let our friends in the Western District rally on this occasion, in force. Dr. D. H. Coulter, of Winchester, Kans., has consented to attend.

NEW YORK.

The New York State Anti-Secrecy Convention will be held at WALTON, DELAWARE COUNTY, OCTOBER 27TH AND 28TH, beginning at 2 o'clock on Thursday afternoon. There will be five sessions, the convention closing on Friday evening. The official call and program will appear later. Everything seems favorable for a rousing convention. Among those expected to be present are the entire State Committee. There is promise of abundant entertainment for all who will attend. Rev. J. P. Stoddard is to be present with his charts; and the effect of secret societies upon the labor question is to receive consideration. Let arrangements be made for a large attendance.

IOWA.

A., is called to meet AT MARENGO, IOWA COUNTY, TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 15TH AND 16TH, beginning at 1:30 Tuesday afternoon, assembling in the Wesleyan Methodist church. The completed program of exercises is not yet received, but we learn that it will include addresses from Pres. Blanchard, Rev. M. A. Gault, Rev. W. C. Paden, and others.

THE LODGE IN THE CHURCH.

BY S. L. COOK.

Nearly fifty years ago a Presbyterian church was organized at this place, then in the forest. Those who organized this church were settled in new homes and were true to the religion they professed, making uncommon sacrifices and fertilizing the vine with their prayers and tears. It grew, and was a light which made the surrounding moral darkness visible. About seventeen years ago it had seventy-five members, and had sufficient strength, moral and financial, to build a very respectable house of worship, the old stand-bys bearing the chief burden; but, alas, to those who could see, the eye of the lodge was fastened upon the church which to human view was about to become the centre of influence in the community.

The lodge had already an agent, in the person of an elder and a frivolous assistant. From that time to the present, the work and management of the church had been a sealed book to all except to the lodge agent and a few illiterate and thoughtless. Many could not and would not believe that they were led by lodge dictation; and yet, with claw and beak, it was at work, and the mismanagement was so palpable and offensive that one by one our most intelligent and reliable members withdrew, thus frittering away the strength of the church. Although still blind to the Christless, disturbing element until the concealment could no longer be maintained, weakness, instead of strength, ensued.

Finally, without any personal quarrels, a condition of chaos was discovered. One of our elders had acquired an unenviable general reputation. In addition to being indicted by the Grand Jury for arson, our old elder, being deputy prosecutor, in the face of universal and unanimous belief of guilt, had a nolle prosequi entered, both belonging to the same lodge. The thoughtful then began to see that they were made the unwilling and unsuspecting ally of lodge rascality, if not the silent accessory of sin and the harborers of crime. Ft. Wayne Presbytery was asked to send a committee to investigate matters. They came, composed of lodgemen and their henchmen. The decision was for Elder Easterday (the alleged criminal) to cease to act, with the advice for Elder Prentiss to cease also. He assented; but in a few weeks one of the committee came back to administer the sacrament and recognized the elders more prominently than ever before. A large portion of the church refusing to commune, at the next meeting of the Presbytery Dr. Hays (also an elder and lodgeman) made a statement, and the Presbytery suspended the whole session and assumed the management and entire control of the church.

Another committee came, with the lodge tactics in good working order, and made things no better fast. Then the plain declaration was made that they were fighting for secrecy in the church, a matter that the Presbytery, by resolution, had forbidden to be discussed a year before.

The secretists are the only ones who ever mentioned the subject in the church.

And now came another committee, a few weeks ago, composed of Revs. T. E. Hughs, of Lagrange; Weir and J. M. Boggs, of Ft. Wayne—not apparently to harmonize the church, but to co-operate with the four secretists in the church. The meeting was at half-past seven P. M., on the supposition that the country members would not be there, and outsiders and people who had not been in church for years, and the infirm, were hauled in, and every one with their tickets prepared by a Mason, to elect elders and trustees. The committee, without one word of advice or exhortation, readily acquiesced in the fraud. The thinking portion of the members refused to vote. The result was that the four secretists were elected elders and trustees; two of them in their dotage; one of the others more or less soiled with dishonesty and want of chastity; the other a frivolous, unreliable and conceited gatherer of knowledge on the street.

A most ridiculous and pitiable scene occurred during the farce. Robert Dykes, one of our sincere and irreproachable members, one who has served another church as elder for many years in a quiet way, asked a proper question. The Rev. J. M. Boggs, of Ft. Wayne, turned upon him with the ferocity of a hyena and replied: "Shut your mouth, or I will throw you out of the house!" Certainly he did not get this in his theological course of training, or in his ordination vows. It is certainly sadly shaded with the spirit of the lodge and its manners.

The memorable closing of a prolonged effort to surrender the Presbyterian church to lodge methods and dictation, makes a page in its history. The strength of the church for the last forty years walked quietly to the committee and called for their dismissal by letter. That element represents, and has always represented, the mental, moral and financial strength of the church, financially not less than $100,000. They have now the four male members, heretofore described, financially possibly $10,000, and, like the old Methodist, after hearing some glowing experiences in class meeting, rose up and said: "Brethren and sisters, I have no religion to brag on." Covering so long a period, many things must be omitted in an article of this kind; but the times are such, and the encroachments of Satan so manifest, that it behooves every friend of the kingdom of Christ to guard well the walls of Zion; and when we can do no more, do just as we did—refuse to be partners in building up a rival system of religion.

The last thing noticeable that we have seen was on last Sunday morning—what appeared to be a building, or repair, committee, examining the church building, both fraternity men, and using extreme profanity. This may suit the officary, for they have often refused repair work to good, moral men. Blow thou, north wind, and come thou, south wind, and blow upon the garden of the Lord.

WHITTIER AS A PROSE WRITER.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

By the popular mind little is thought or known of Whittier except as a poet. Yet three volumes of his essays and occasional articles have been published, and they reveal a style that for beauty, strength, and clearness will compare favorably with that of our most eminent authors. Unlike Emerson and Holmes, who were more distinguished for their prose than their poetic contributions, Whittier was mainly—almost solely—a poet; a poet not of the highest order, but of a capacity that is never mediocre, and never other than highly respectable.

It was perhaps mainly because his life was devoted to the promotion of human freedom that he was so much a poet; for poetry, like eloquence, is the natural language of liberty. Not all reformers have been poets, but all true poets, from the ancient prophets down to our times, have drawn their inspiration from love of justice and liberty.

Whittier's prose is all of the same general type as his poetry; that is, it is reformatory—gentle in spirit, yet bold, manly and aggressive. His conception of a reformer is given in the following from "The Scotch Reformers," and is an admirable pattern by which to test our fitness for such a work: "He who undertakes to tread the pathway of a reformer who, smitten with the love of truth and justice, or indignant in view of wrong and insolvent oppression, is rashly inclined to throw himself into the great conflict, which the Persian seer not untruly represented as a war between light and darkness—would do well to count the cost in the outset. If he can live for truth alone, and cut off from the general sympathy, regard her service as his own exceeding great reward; if he can bear to be counted as a fanatic and crazy missionary; if, in all good nature, he is ready to receive, from the very objects of his solicitude, abuse and obloquy in return for disinterested and self-sacrificing efforts for their welfare; if, with his purest motives misunderstood and his best actions perverted and distorted into crimes, he can still hold on his way and patiently abide the hour when the whirligig of time shall bring about its revenges; if, on the whole, he is prepared to be looked upon as a sort of moral outlaw or social heretic, under good society's interdict of food and fire; and if he is well assured that he can through all this, preserve his cheerfulness, and faith in man—let him gird up his loins and go forward in God's name. He is fitted for his vocation; he has watched all night by his armor."

"Great is the consciousness of right. Sweet is the answer of a good conscience. He who pays his whole heart's homage to truth and duty—who swears his life-long fealty on their altars and rises up a Nazarite, consecrated to their service, is not without his solace and enjoyment when to the eyes of others he seems the most lonely and miserable. He breathes an atmosphere which the multitude know not of; a serene heaven which they cannot discern rests over him, glorious in its purity and stillness."

One of the first and most vigorous of the prose writings of Whittier was his "Justice and Expediency," written in 1833, which contains the principles that run through his entire writings and those of the earlier Abolitionists, namely, that both justice and expediency demand the immediate abolition of slavery, and that such abolition was to be sought for by appealing to the conscience and the good sense of the nation. He amply vindicates the early Abolitionists and doubtless correctly states their position in regard to war in his letter to the Jeffersonian and Times, Richmond, Va.

He says, "All the leading Abolitionists of my acquaintance are, from principle, opposed to war of all kinds, believing that the benefits of no war whatever can compensate for the sacrifice of one human life by violence."

In this position he stood side by side with Daniel O'Connell, of whom he was a profound admirer and defender. In O'Connell's long and earnest labors for the repeal of the union between England and Ireland, his appeals were always to reason,—always in protest against hatred and violence. He says, "The Repealers must not have our cause stained with blood. Far, indeed, from it. We can and ought to carry the repeal only in the total absence of offence against the laws of man or crime in the sight of God. The best revolution that was ever effected could not be worth one drop of human blood." Again he says, "I have a soul and a God to answer to, in another and better world, for my thoughts and actions in this. I disclaim here any act of mine which would sport with the lives of my fellow-creatures, any amelioration of our social condition that must be purchased by their blood." Had such principles as these pervaded our religion, we should never have witnessed the fratricidal strife of '61-'65, and we should not now be confronted with the vast race problem that is at once our dishonor and our perplexity.

A CENTURY OF STRIKES.

The history of strikes in the United States dates back to 1796. It lacks but four years to make it centenary. The straddle of the caliper is patriarchal and includes a series of struggles of which history has more to note of financial losses than of moral repentance. This slit in the public pocket is said to have cost the nation more than an equivalent for its national debt, with the State debts of New York and Pennsylvania added to the total. There is more in this cold arithmetic than can be figured on a slate. Statistics are not biographies. We get the numerals but not the men, in a count of noses and dollars; the principles and privations involved in a century of industrial struggles, with its unsung songs of sacrifice and its untold tales of folly, are securely but necessarily left untouched. Of fools there are always enough, of good men more than we ever hear, but of petrified humanity there is no such thing earning its living. Every strike has had its poorhouse, its tragedy, and its Golgotha.

The initial strike of American labor was that of the journeymen boot-makers of Philadelphia. It was repeated in 1798 and 1799, the object an increase of wages. In 1803 occurred the New York sailors' strike. Here the strikers compelled other seamen to leave their ships—a step that caused the muster of the town guard, the arrest of the leader, and the ignominious failure of the strike. In 1805 the shoemaking guild of Philadelphia repeated their previous experiments, but were fined for "conspiring to raise their wages." In 1809 the New York cordwainers imitated their Philadelphia brethren of St. Crispin. In 1815 the ubiquitous shoemaker laid down his awl and last at Pittsburg, and ended his claim for higher pay by getting on the wrong side of the jail door and contributing to the city exchequer. In 1821 the printers inaugurated their first strike at Albany, N. Y., as a protest against the employment of non-union men.

The agitation for shorter hours was started in 1830, at Boston. In 1834 the laborers on the Providence railroad made a wage demand, and were subsequently handled by the local militia. 1835 saw the first big mill strike at Paterson, N. J., resulting in twenty-six weeks' idleness and a loss of $24,000 in wages. From 1836 to 1842 some fifteen strikes were reported, in three of which the militia had to shoulder their muskets to prevent rioting. In 1842 was inaugurated the struggle of the ironworkers in the Pittsburg district. It broke out again in 1845, and in 1850 made a volcanic outburst, women drawing bars from the grates of furnaces and using them for weapons. In 1868 and 1869 some seventeen strikes occurred, while from 1871 to 1876 they were more numerous than ever. In 1877 occurred the great railroad strike, in which the military arm was called into service, and candidates provided for the morgue and the coroner. The damage done in Pittsburg was placed by government experts at $5,000,000. In 1880 the strike-slate had a total of 762. From 1881 to 1886 inclusive there were 3,692 strikes, involving not less than 1,323,203 men and 22,304 establishments. Since 1877 we have added to the list the Reading strike, the Carnegie strike of 1888, the Pittsburg puddlers, and the Turtle Creek miners. In 1890 the eight-hour question brought about a series of strikes at Chicago, Boston, Indianapolis, etc., involving about 50,000 men, the cost running up into the millions. The government statistics show that between the years 1881 and 1887 inclusive there occurred 24,518 American strikes, with a direct loss to the strikers of $51,814,743, to which might be added the incalculable losses to employers in damage to property and the compulsory closing of works, and the cost to the various States in the maintenance of troops, etc. The Homestead appendix will represent a costly event, and perhaps do something in the way of arousing public sentiment as to the urgent necessity of adopting corrective measures. Lives, property, and money have had the sluices wide open, folly and obstinacy have had their ghastly carnival, and it is time for common-sense to find its way into the hat it has so long vacated.—Age of Steel.

THE OATH OF THE SOUTHERN FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Quite a number of letters from members of the Farmers' Alliance have been received at this office protesting against the idea that the Alliance is oath-bound, or that it desires to do anything in secret.

That such an attempt is altogether likely to be made, and in fact has already been determined upon, is evident from the contents of a little book which one Alliance man has sent us. This book is called the "Ritual" of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, and claims to have been printed in 1890 by order of the executive board of that organization. In it we find the following:

President: Mr. ———, you will give your name when I use mine and repeat after me as follows:

OBLIGATION.

"I, ———, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, do solemnly promise and affirm that I will never reveal any of the secrets of the order to any one not entitled to receive the same. I will never, under any circumstances, write, engrave, indite or print, or in any way make any impression, picture or design, that would convey any idea of the secret work, signs or password of this order. I will faithfully support the constitution and laws of the order. I will never wrong or defraud or deceive a member, nor will I permit it to be done, if in my power to prevent it. In my intercourse with a member I will always speak the truth. I will not oppose the admission of any one to membership solely on account of a personal matter, nor will I propose any one whom I have reason to believe is an improper person, or who would be an unworthy member. I further solemnly affirm, that, should I be expelled or dismissed from the order, I will faithfully keep this obligation as sacred out of the order as when a member. So help me God."

It is difficult to understand how honest men could be asked to take a stronger oath or pledge of secrecy than that. And in one of the manuals sent us the pledge, which is not in the form of an oath, is, nevertheless, made binding until death. These pledges would seem to sustain all that has been said about the secrecy and oath-bound condition of the Alliance in so far as this national organization is concerned.

The secret organization known as the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union was formed in Oct. 1, 1889, out of a heterogeneous mass of alliances, unions and wheels, many of which began their existence as non-secret bodies as long ago as 1873, and some of these have evidently been independent enough to reject the order of things sought to be imposed upon them by the national organization. We hope they will persevere in well-doing and maintain their independence and personal freedom to the end.

We sympathize most heartily with the feelings which have prepared so large a number of farmers to enter into this movement, and for that very reason we are anxious that the movement should take on such a form that it will be possible for all good men to take part in it. The farmers have long enough allowed the political bosses to count upon their votes as a matter of course, and it is high time that they should assert themselves. Moreover, no one doubts the perfect honesty or the desire to do right of the great body of members of the Alliance. What we are anxious about is that, having begun to think for themselves, our farmer friends should not jump to the conclusion that they have thought it all out at one effort, but that they should keep on studying the great economic questions which they are trying to settle, and hold themselves free to change their minds whenever they receive new light.

Alliance Independent assumes, as a matter of course, that we would justify the Prohibition party in having a secret plan of campaign against the saloons. In that he is entirely mistaken. We want no secrecy "in ours," even if it be only in the matter of grips, signs and passwords. If the Prohibition party should require of its members a pledge, even such as the most innocent of the Alliance pledges that has been sent us, we would at once repudiate that party and declare it to be utterly unfit to undertake the government of a great nation. We would condemn secrecy or a membership pledge very much more severely in the Prohibition party than in any other party, for the very reason that we believe that party to contain the germ of the great reform movement which we hope to see sweep over the nation before many years, and therefore needs to be kept true to right principles of action in order that the reform for which it is preparing the way may be inaugurated on a lasting basis.—New York Witness.

THE MINOR SECRET ORDERS.

There are some secret orders for which specious pleas are presented that seem to have power to deceive some of the very elect. These minor orders, as they are called, are professedly in the interest of noble and praiseworthy causes, and are said to be free from some of the principal objections which hold against Masonry and Odd-fellowship. That the reader may not be in doubt as to what orders I mean, I refer particularly to Good Templars and the Grand Army of the Republic. They take advantage of things that in themselves are good to push themselves into prominence, are intensely sensitive to opposition or criticism, and are defended by some from whom we had hoped better things. It is a matter of special regret to see Miss Willard, as head and representative of the W. C. T. U., coddling the Good Templars, and even the Knights of Labor; as if either of these orders were necessary to the success of the cause of temperance and prohibition.

Some good things have been said in the Cynosure in reference to Miss Willard's position; but on the general subject of the encouragement of these orders there is much that might yet be said. We regard the encouragement of these orders on the part of Christian men, and especially on the part of those who oppose Masonry, etc., as much to be deplored for several reasons:

1. Not one of these orders but bears the image and superscription of the harlot, Masonry.

Men may tell me I know nothing about them; but I answer, it needs but the most superficial observation to discover that everything connected with these minor orders was laid out by the compass and square of Masonry. And if it is a Christian duty to refrain from following after the Beast, it is manifestly a Christian duty to worship nothing that bears the image of the Beast. When a person once consents to worship the image of the Beast it is only a short and easy step to the worship of the Beast.

Miss Willard may write a thousand times that she believes "the greatest secret of Good Templars is they have no secret;" but ten thousand Masons and Odd-fellows will answer, "I thank thee, Frances, for the word," and ten thousand Good Templars, members of the G. A. R., will be ready to take an advance step and say they believe the greatest secret about Masonry and Odd-fellowship is they have no secret.

2. When good men, who say they are opposed to secret societies, defend or apologize for the G. A. R. and Good Templars, they encourage these orders in the indulgence of a malignant spirit towards those who conscientiously oppose them.

More than thirty years ago I was charged with being opposed to temperance because I opposed the Sons of Temperance. In later years I have been charged with being opposed to temperance because I opposed Sabbath desecration and Sabbath speeding under the name of temperance work; and now I am held by some as an enemy to the old soldiers because my anti-secret principles set me in opposition to the organization known as the G. A. R., which wears the short frock of Masonry.

Such want of magnanimity and such a spirit of bitterness does secrecy engender, that the best friend the soldier had when in the field will be spotted by many as an enemy if he dares to lift up his voice against the order in which the soldiers have banded together. And it is more the matter of regret because many of the old soldiers, by reason of the bitter and resentful spirit they manifest, will lose the respect and confidence of those who would otherwise be their friends.

3. As a matter of fact, when a man becomes identified with or ready to defend and apologize for these minor orders he weakens along the whole line.

I know a member, I believe an elder, in the United Presbyterian church who was once a veritable "crank" on the secret society question. He read the Cynosure, he talked the Cynosure, and tried to get every one to take the Cynosure. But in the course of time he became identified with the G. A. R., and a neighbor and friend tells me that he is now dumb on the whole question. And how can it be otherwise? When such a man goes into any of these orders he must feel that he has sold out, surrendered his principles, and rendered worthless any testimony he might profess to bear against "secret oath-bound societies."

4. When toleration is extended to these orders, Masonry and Odd-fellowship demand the same toleration.

At the meeting of the General Assembly of the U. P. church at Topeka, in 1885, certain action was taken in reference to the G. A. R. which was interpreted to mean toleration. The next morning the moderator received a communication from one signing himself a "Presbyterian and a Christian Odd-fellow," demanding in the name of consistency that Odd-fellows should be admitted, as no objection lay against them that did not equally lie against the G. A. R. As a matter of fact, I believe that the influence of the G. A. R. at the present time is doing more to break down the force of the testimony of some churches against secret societies than all other influences combined.

5. These orders seem in some respects to command such attention and such an interest as is not shown toward the church which Christ has purchased with his own blood.

Two illustrations will show my meaning. A ministerial brother said to me, with a funny twinkle in his eye, "There is one good thing about the G. A. R. They make lots of delicate women strong. Why," said he, "I have women too delicate to go to prayer-meeting that can climb lofty flights of stairs and be out till midnight helping on with their entertainments." I thank God that I have no story of that kind to tell from my own experience, but I know there are hundreds of pastors who have seen the same thing.

The other illustration is the case of a farmer, who, I supposed, was in fair circumstances. He was a prominent member in the M. E. church, but has withdrawn, and, I have been told, gives as his reason, want of ability to pay his church dues. But he is a Grand Army man through and through and able to keep up his dues in that order. Can the reader see the secret of his inability to pay, his readiness to leave the church of God for the man-made lodge? There is only one tenable ground to hold on the question of secret societies, and that is to hold the ground against the whole brood. Neither the interests of society, of the country or the church, demand any of these orders; the endorsement of one is practically an endorsement of them all; therefore we say, avoid everything that bears even the image of the Beast.—Rev. Wm. Johnston, D. D., in the Cynosure.

The Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, says: Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary orders. . . . The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, of Chicago, says: A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and Paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshippers.... The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.—The Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter, for October.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Autumnal dog-days.—A new disinfectant.—The old-fashioned singing-school.—Dr. Quint and the American Board.—The Iron Hall.—The Borden case.

The dog-days are singularly depressing when they extend later into the season than the almanac warrants, which has been the case this year; but to-day "the besom of the thunder" has swept the sky clear, and the air is chill and bracing, with a hint of frost in it, which up in the hill-country of Vermont and New Hampshire will probably prove more than a hint.

I notice that the fumes of burning leather-chips are recommended, among other things, as a sure warder-off of cholera, and I am quite inclined to believe it. As I lived near a shoe manufactory in my childhood, I can well remember how on a warm, damp morning in spring or fall, when every particle of ozone seemed to have left the atmosphere, that dark, ill-smelling, smoky pall would settle over us, filling all the interstices in our lungs, and sending the spiritual barometer down to its lowest point. I can certify that it is a grand preventive against mosquitoes and other winged pests; and if it has half as depressing an influence on the cholera-microbes as it has on human beings, they must be very unintelligent microbes indeed if they do not give it a wide berth.

The papers, in their comments on the Fire Island episode, have failed to notice the fact that it was off this Island that Margaret D'Ossoli was wrecked when returning home from Italy with her husband and child. It seems that half a century has not altered materially the character of the people on this part of the New Jersey coast, as they did not on that occasion make the smallest effort to save the ill-fated passengers and crew drowning before their eyes. Poor Margaret Fuller! A glamour will always invest her name which does not depend at all on her published writings. It is like the scent which clings to a queenly rose long faded. She would have been over fourscore to-day, had the sea spared her; but was it not as well, nay, better, to go in the first gorgeous ripening of her womanhood? our New England Hypatia, born before the time, and strange to herself and others because she found no niche at that early day large enough to enshrine her unique individuality.

A pleasant event, which must recall to the minds of many old people now living the hours passed in their youth at the district singing-school, was the late reunion at Providence of the Billings family, descendants of the famous William Billings, the head of New England's musical world—if such could then be said to exist—eighty or a hundred years ago. "Billings' pupils" have, almost without exception, followed their instructor "into the silent land," but his work still lives. I remember hearing once of a famous singing teacher of those olden days (his name has slipped from memory, but he certainly illustrated in his career not only the true Yankee grit, but the old saying that genius is hard work), who went to singing-school a great, overgrown boy of eighteen, unable to sing a note, and laughed at by the older pupils for his awkward efforts at time and tune. But, instead of giving up and accepting everybody's verdict that he had neither ear nor voice, like Demosthenes of old, of whom he had possibly read, our Yankee boy went off into the woods to practice all by himself, and by sheer dint of dogged, painstaking perseverance, became at last one of the country's leading vocalists. From a book published years ago I quote the following description of an old-fashioned winter singing-school, thinking it may awaken pleasant reminiscences in the minds of some of the aged readers of the Cynosure:

"Winter after winter the singing-school was kept up. Without a single exception it had always held its meetings in the little, low brick school-house that stood exactly at the junction of the village street and a cross-road. The room was small, illy ventilated, provided with no greater comforts in the line of seats than a double row of low planks for benches, that formed a hollow square about the hot, iron box-stove, and always so meagerly lighted that recognition was, not unfrequently, quite out of the question.

"There they sat, ranged in double rows around the room on those hard, wooden benches—the males on one side of the house and the females on the other. It was expected of every scholar, whether man, woman, or child, that he or she bring a separate candle, that so the expense of weekly illumination might be equally defrayed. This regulation was often the occasion of a great deal of mirth; for some came with little, blunt stumps of candles, just in their last sputtering throes, blackened all over with previous fires, and stuck, as a final resort, into a flat turnip carefully pared for this particular time. It was ludicrous to see them going about from one seat to another, now leaning backward, and now reaching forward to get a light from a neighbor, and incidentally whisper something that had no connection with the light at all. A stranger would have done more than merely smile, I fear, if he could have looked in unexpectedly on our musical group—candles wavering, dancing and glimmering; heads and figures in all possible attitudes and positions; feet, some of them perched high on the backs of the benches before them; eyes staring and mouths agape; and the persevering instructor trying to make accomplished musicians of every one."

Isn't this a delicious Rembrandt picture of scenes and institutions gone by forever?

The next annual meeting of the American Board is going to be an important one, and the great question to come before it will be, "Shall the Board continue to keep its character of a close corporation?" The Board is composed of 250 men—no women admitted—with a life-membership and the power to fill recurring vacancies vested only in themselves. This rigorous exclusion of the sex, from which emanates three-fourths at least of all the missionary effort in the churches, is too Masonic altogether. According to Dr. Quint, in the last number of the Congregationalist: "A committee of ten, chosen by the corporation, conducts all our missionary work, and a committee of seven determine who shall constitute that corporation. To the other 250,000 members of Congregational churches is extended the privilege of the contribution-box alone." No wonder so many of their sincerest members refuse to avail themselves of it, and prefer to work on independent lines. Two points are very significant in Dr. Quint's article: His admission that there are ominous signs of disaster coming to the Board, and the words with which he closes: "The people have come to care little or nothing for a Board. They love the cause, but a dead parchment which stands between them and the honored men and women in the field, excites in them no reverence."

This is true to the letter, even though Dr. Quint said it; only he does not go far enough. It is time that boards of any kind ceased to stand between the churches and their missionary work. Every church of Christ should be a board in itself, as in apostolic times, and every Christian man and woman should be brought into such a feeling of individual nearness to the workers as shall add a zest to the giving and make it no longer, as is too often the case in our churches to-day, a heartless, perfunctory duty, performed unto men but not unto the Lord. It is ominous of coming changes when a man like Dr. Quint begins to see this truth, though ever so dimly. It is also a strange instance of judicial blindness that the inconsistency between his active interest in foreign missions and his life-long adherence to Masonry should not be at least equally apparent. The greatest anomaly on earth, it seems to me, is a Masonic missionary, and, next to that, a Masonic pastor preaching a missionary sermon. How can heathenism in America cast out heathenism in Asia or Africa?

I see that the order of the Iron Hall is to be formally resurrected, and Supreme Justice Somerby is again at its head with flying colors.

Without doubt he will find that the crop of fools is not yet exhausted.

I have alluded in former letters to the Borden case at Fall River, the most peculiar in court annals. A Christian lady, of education and refinement, the treasurer of the Y. W. C. T. U., of most exemplary life and ready for every good word and work, is arrested on charge of murdering her father and step-mother; and after a trial in which all the elaborate theories worked up by the Fall River officials to prove her guilty fell to the ground, and all the evidence is in favor of her entire innocence, the judge who, having presided at the inquest had no right to sit on her case at all, pronounces her "probably guilty." She is then sent to Taunton jail, to await her trial in November, confined to her cell, forbidden even the fresh air, and treated in every respect like a criminal already condemned and sentenced. The whole proceedings, from beginning to end, have been as mysterious as they are outrageous. That they must arrest somebody, and Miss Borden happened to be the only eligible scape-goat, is not an adequate explanation, for an Irish-Catholic servant-girl was in the house at the time, and had really a better opportunity to commit the murder than her mistress, who, according to her own undisputed statement, was at the barn. That it is not a prosecution but a persecution has been clear to many minds from the start, including the writer. Why were all these Fall River officials, who have been conducting the case, even to Medical Examiner Dolan, Roman Catholics? Why did that part of the daily press which is subsidized to Rome assume at the outset that Miss Borden was guilty, and publish, with malignant satisfaction, all kinds of false and damaging stories calculated to hurt her cause with the public? And why, when the latter was refused bail, was the bail of Bridget Sullivan, the Catholic servant-girl, paid by Marshall Hilliard, the very official who was chief in working up the case against her mistress? Our W. C. T. U. women, and indeed all thoughtful, justice-loving people, are beginning to put these things together, and to realize that they have an ugly look. We have fallen on strange times indeed, when the most exemplary life is no barrier against being hounded to imprisonment and perhaps death—for men who will proceed to such lengths would not hesitate to manufacture evidence against her—by Romish officials, who interpret the law to suit themselves. Meanwhile Miss Borden's touching response to the query how she could be so calm, "It is only by entire reliance on my heavenly Father," will sink into many hearts, moving them to pray that these men may be brought to deserved shame and her innocence triumphantly vindicated.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28, 1892.

Mrs. Harrison's condition, to-day, is regarded by her physician and her family as a little better than it was when she came back to the White House, a week ago, although she is still considered critically ill. She fully realizes her situation and bears it with Christian resignation. President Harrison spends every moment that he can spare from his official duties with her and hopes for the best, although he is too good a Christian to murmur at the chastisement the good Lord has seen fit to send upon him. To hope and to pray is all that mortals can do; the result must be left in the hands of God, whose work is always just, although often mysterious to man.

To-day is the birthday of that good woman, Miss Frances E. Willard, whose work in the spread of Christianity and temperance is well-known throughout the English-speaking world, as well as in other parts of the globe, where branches of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have been established. One old gentleman, who gives her the credit of having, by a public address delivered in this city, which he accidentally heard, saved him from a drunkard's, perhaps a criminal's, grave, said with tears in his eyes: "I would rather be Frances Willard than the greatest statesman or soldier that the world has produced; she has a patent of nobility, based on the loves of the hearts she has been instrumental in making purer and better, that, in the eyes of God, will outrank the highest ever issued by royal command; and America could ask no greater blessing of divine Providence than to have ten thousand Frances Willards enrolled under the pure white banners of Christianity, temperance and moral reform, to fight those who, by command of Satan, are working day and night to make men, women and children worse."

A movement has been inaugurated here by the Methodists, which it is believed will result in raising $500,000, that is to be used in erecting the first building of the great American University to be conducted under the auspices of that denomination, at the national capital. The idea, which made a most auspicious beginning last Sunday, is to raise this money by $1 subscriptions—no person being allowed to subscribe more, each subscriber receiving in exchange for the dollar a handsome aluminum souvenir medal. The building to be erected by this fund will be known as the Abraham Lincoln Memorial Hall.

The final preparations for the presentation of the case of the United States before the international court of arbitration, soon to assemble in Paris, for the purpose of deciding questions in dispute between this Government and Great Britain concerning certain rights acquired in Behring's Sea by the purchase of Alaska from Russia, are going on in the State Department and in the Department of Justice. How much more satisfactory this is than if the country was being made wild with excitement by preparations in the War and Navy Departments for a war with Great Britain!

Rev. Stanford Mitchell, the singing evangelist, occupied a Washington pulpit, morning and evening, last Sunday. In addition to singing such popular hymns as "Rock of Ages," Mr. Mitchell makes use of the airs of ballads which have been family favorites for years and which are familiar to nearly everybody in his song-service, using words appropriate to his text, and the effect is wonderfully enthusing. Among the old airs sung by him, with words of his own, were "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," and the "Swanee River." He will preach and sing at the same church next Sunday.

The international monetary conference, which was to have been held in October in some European city, to be agreed upon by the representatives of the several governments taking part therein, will, on account of the prevalence of cholera in Europe, not be held for some time to come, possibly not until next year, although there is a possibility of its being held in November or December.

Washington has resumed its usual quietness, and it hardly seems possible that only last week we had so many thousands of visitors;—there is a difference of opinion as to the number, but by actual count the White House, which is always the center of attraction with strangers, was visited by 400,000 people. Of course some of the strangers may have gone there twice, and some of them were accompanied by Washington friends, but it may be judged from the figures that a good many people were in the city.

Among Washington's visitors this week, are Lieutenant and Mrs. Peary, who have but recently returned from a stay of nearly a year in the Arctic regions. *

REFORM NEWS.

THE NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION.

WALTON, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am here arranging for the N. Y. State Convention. Wednesday evening the State Committee met at the residence of Dr. Stone, Binghamton, for prayer and conference relative to the coming convention. After reading correspondence from friends and looking over the situation as best we could, the time selected is Oct. 27th and 28th. The convention will open at 2 P. M. Thursday and have five sessions, concluding Friday evening. The date earlier in the week suggested by some of the friends would not suit those here; hence the selection of this date, which we trust will be satisfactory to all. The official call will be sent you in due time. Everything appears favorable for a rousing convention. There will be a strong delegation from Binghamton. The entire State Committee expect to be here. State Secretary Rev. S. R. Wallace, of Syracuse, writes, while attending a meeting of the N. Y. R. P. Presbytery. He says: "I write in haste during our meeting, to say that I accord with your arrangement for the convention, and will do all I can to make it a success. You can depend on me for an address on the subject you name, or any other that you wish me to speak upon. We are having a good meeting."

A call on Rev. Mr. Shaw, pastor of the Covenantant church here, assured me that we will receive a royal welcome. His church will be open, and his people glad to entertain. He does not wish to be selfish, and so suggests that I see some of the other church pastors and offer them the privilege of entertaining the convention. The place of meeting will be definitely announced later, but we are sure there will be plenty of open doors in Walton.

Some have inquired if the New England agent is to be with us this year, and I am glad to reply that he is expected. He will be the "general all-around man," as usual, of course showing the royal road to Hiram's grave with his chart-aid. Those who can and do not hear him will miss a treat.

One of the questions we hope to have discussed at this convention is, The effect of secret societies on the capital and labor questions, or What's the matter at Homestead?

Rev. W. H. Clark, District Chairman for the Free Methodists, will have charge of the Conference meeting for the morning of the second day. Dr. Stone, who remembers back to the Morgan times, will doubtless give us some reminiscences of those times.

Let all who can plan to be at this "coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." There will be plenty of free entertainment for those from a distance. You will find Walton on the Ontario and Western R. R., about fifty miles from Binghamton.

En-route for this place I made several stops in Pennsylvania, which were both pleasant and helpful.

I was glad to make the acquaintance of Bro. W. W. Sible, of Harrisburg, Pa. This brother, like Paul, works at his trade while preaching the Word. He has gathered around him a little company of the faithful, who have purchased a lot and built a church. They are known as United Brethren, and purpose to be faithful in bearing testimony against the modern Cain worship. I hope to accept the invitation to address these friends in the near future. Bro. Sible subscribed for the Cynosure, and will, I trust, write us of his conquests.

Time and space forbid mention of much personal kindness given your unworthy servant. May the Lord richly reward all whose hearts are made warm by the love of Jesus to aid the furtherance of his cause in the earth. We lose nothing by our sacrifices for truth here, for there remaineth to the faithful "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" hereafter. More anon.

W. B. STODDARD.

REFORM WORK IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

VERDON, Neb., Sept. 29, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Last week, with me, was a busy one in Pawnee county. Tuesday evening we had a good meeting at Burchard, in the U. P. church. The pastor, Bro. S. S. Stewart, did all he could to make it a success. The Presbyterian pastor, Bro. Junkin, also took part.

There is a strong prohibition sentiment here. The Prohibitionists are mustering all their forces for a vigorous fall campaign. They are disposed to think the anti-secrecy issue should not be brought in, for it might divide their forces. "One issue at a time," say they, "is all we can carry. When the liquor power is overthrown, we should then take up the anti-secret issue."

But if there is one fact more than another that the experience of prohibitionists has demonstrated, it is that the strongest prohibitory law which can be formulated, with the most perfect machinery for its operation, cannot be executed or enforced where the judges, sheriffs, jurors, councilmen, mayors and policemen are members of secret societies, sworn or pledged to obey each other's signs, grips and passwords. I am satisfied, from careful observation and from the testimony of thousands, that at this point lies the secret of the non-enforcement of prohibitory legislation. If we are at great pains and sacrifice to construct a locomotive, but raise no question as to the competency or fidelity of the engineer who is to take charge of it, then may it be said that the anti-secret question must not be raised in connection with prohibition. Why jeopardize the cause which has cost so much labor and sacrifice, by committing it to unfaithful leadership? Besides, through the machinery of the secret lodge system, liquor can be brought into any community, no matter how strong may be the prohibition sentiment.

I saw an illustration of this at Summerfield, Kan., last Sabbath, where I preached twice in the U. P. church. Here there is a large Romanist and infidel element, with a secret organization known as a Turner Hall, which has a large membership. Its chief influence is conviviality and intemperance. Through this organization large quantities of liquor are imported, and the authorities, many of whom are members of the organization, can do nothing to prevent it.

The U. P. pastor, Bro. W. T. Warnock, is a Cynosure reader, and this aspect of the question has led him to take a deep interest in the cause; and it is this impression that is leading many pastors to consider the anti secret issue as fundamental to every other. It is the great question, into what hands should the momentous interests of civil government be entrusted? The pleasant Sabbath I spent with Bro. Warnock's people, just over the line in Kansas, will be long remembered, and also the two large audiences I addressed in the Mission Creek (U. P.) church, Neb., Bro. J. S. Colvin, pastor. This is one of the strongest reform churches in the State, and it is owing largely to the leadership of Bro. Colvin, who for many years has been at the front in the most radical reform work. One of his members and best reform workers is J. D. Barr, who is candidate for the State Legislature on the Pro-

CORRESPONDENCE.

GEO. W. CLARK ON KNIGHT TEMPLARISM.

Geo. W. Clark, the "reform singer," of Detroit, Mich., recently received a letter from another Clark—his cousin, who was formerly a member of the Legislature in Maine; since employed in the Patent Office at Washington, and, later, connected with a great Pacific railway. The tenor of the cousin's letter was in superlative praise of the recent great Masonic conclave of his "fraters" at Denver, Colo., and also of the Republican party. Among other things, he said he "doubted whether there was a society of men on this continent that could equal them in nobility of character;" and added: "It is mere accident that caused me to allude to this subject, for I am aware that it is like displaying a red flag in the face of a male of bovines. But I was about to tell you I have not yet received the record of our Grandfather Clark, which I am called upon to furnish for printing in the Annual Year Book of the 'Sons of the Revolution.' Please send it to me."

In speaking of the Republican party, he says: "The world has never seen its equal in all history! And that will be its record in the future when men get past the chagrin of their defeats, and when the unbiased historian shall make up the books! And I thank God that for thirty years I have been a part of it."

GEO. W. CLARK'S REPLY.

76 WEST MONTCALM STREET,
DETROIT, Mich., Sept., 1892.

MY DEAR COUSIN:—Your flaring "red flag" is received, and read and re-read, and the address you enclosed also; but this "bovine" of the male department neither paws nor tears the earth.

He has seen too many of those phantasmagorical phantasms since your secret oath-bound fraters murdered Capt. Wm. Morgan, Dr. Cronin and others, to be otherwise moved than with pity for the young men who are duped by the blare and blarney of the tinselled lodgites into their hidden, tylered and guarded, exclusive chambers, where "it is a shame to speak of those things that are done of them in secret." And then not only duped into its tomfooleries, but fooled out of their native manly independence; and fooled out of their money, for they really get no valuable equivalent in exchange for the cash spent and the time worse than wasted. Furthermore, any foolish quiz, who is so anxious to know the "sublime but hidden mysteries" of these pompous "orders," can get all their pretended, but long-ago-revealed, secrets, for from fifty cents to a dollar—by applying to 221 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

And now I wonder what Cousin Addie, thy good wife, must have thought when you read to her that wonderful, high-faluting address to that wonderful body of wonderful men in their wonderful trappings and wonderful toggery and gewgaws and feathers, when she remembered that that same "Most Worshipful" and grandiloquent orator and the "ancient and noble order" he was exhorting to such chivalrous deeds, inexorably excluded—and shut out—the "better half" of creation (to which she belongs), barring out their own mothers, wives and sisters from sharing in the "sublime," "elevating" and ennobling "mysteries," and enjoying the most exalted privilege, pleasure and honor of being locked in and led round the tylered lodgeroom with a cable-tow, blind-folded, and in a half-nude condition!

God's word of truth hath plainly said
They twain shall ever be as one!
One's joys the other's joys shall be,
Shall share alike in shade or sun!

And you say, "You doubt if there is another society of men on this continent that can equal those men," collected at Denver, "in nobility of character," and think there must have been considerable advance in the animal man since one of the descendants of the dwellers in those caves could stand up before such an assemblage and make such a speech! As to the "nobility" of that secret conclave you laud so highly, let us see: Men are "known by the company they keep." "A tree is known by the fruit it bears."

What was the mission of that body of men at Denver? Was it to "rescue the perishing?" No. Was it to lift up the fallen? No. Was it to save our youth from the snares and pitfalls of the secret lodges and the saloons? No. Was it to beat back the powers of darkness and the devil—to have no fellowship with them, but to reprove them? Not so. Was it to set an example of Sabbath observance, by traveling over the country on the Lord's day, desecrating it by wholesale? No! Was it to protest against and help to save our country, its homes, its sons, its institutions, its laws, from the deadly liquor traffic and the iniquitous license scheme that legalizes and sustains it all over the country? Not much.

But, what, then went they out to Denver for to see, or to do? Oh! perhaps it was to "rescue the tomb" of the Son of man from the sacrilegious Colorado "Saracens." Pious souls! Rescue the "tomb" of the Saviour with swords and guns and bayonets, which he forbids to use, and whose name they exclude from their lodge ceremonies! Beautiful consistency! Oh! tempora! Oh! mores!

Now pray, tell me in what consists, or where comes in, the vaunted "nobility" of these men? What was the real object of all this "fuss and feathers?" It was simply a vain show—a glaring advertising show-bill; a pompous dress-parade; a vain-glorious exhibition of military glitter and glare—of a set of "high cockalorums," with their costly trappings, their fustians and their feathers, to advertise their unhallowed secret conclaves, to gull and draw into their covert meshes unsuspecting, over-credulous young men and older gudgeons. I don't quite see; perhaps Cousin Prentis can inform me how this kind of jugglery can make "noble men." Henry Ward Beecher used to say: "Dress did not make the man, though the man looked a little better dressed up." Better yet the Irishman's idea, when he said: "The togger did not make the man, but the charracter."

Now, can you or any mortal man tell me how these "Grand Puissant," "Royal Arch Worshipful Masters" serve the Lord Christ, or their human kind, by the useless waste of the millions of money and time expended on these costly displays of toggery and trappings and feastings and the erection of such costly idolatrous temples?

Now, compare for a moment these high cockalorum Denver and Kansas City swell displays with that body of able, earnest, devoted, patriotic Christian temperance workers—men and women too—who met at Cincinnati last June, in that great National Prohibition Convention, with the patriotic and humane purpose of abolishing from our country its greatest and most deadly foe, the liquor traffic—a baleful traffic on which is annually worse than wasted all of TWO BILLIONS of the people's money, and which drives 150,000 souls to perdition every year in the United States.

There was no "fuss and feathers" or vain display about or with this consecrated host. They were animated and inspired by a holy and divine purpose—"for God and home and native land." And, what is more, not a liquor "bar" or "bad-house" got a customer; nor was the taint, or smell, or the smirch of rot-whisky, or foul-poison tobacco, found upon their garments. More still, this Prohibition Convention raised over $20,000 to carry forward the great work of saving the country from the bitter and blighting curse of intemperance. How much did your vaunted Denver conclave raise for reform work?

And now, tell me, my cousin, which of these "bodies" best deserves the extravagant, the superlative meed of praise which you so enthusiastically assumed for your secret society fraters of the Denver conclave? It seems to me this is a very easy question for you or any one else to answer.

Again: The address of your "Grand Puissant Master," Hon. Hugh McCurdy, of Michigan, which you so thoughtfully sent me, I have carefully read three times. It is a carefully written discourse from a Masonic standpoint, and contains some good suggestions by which anybody might be benefited in reading; but the eloquent speaker was indebted to no dark-lantern, secret order for the fine moral sentiments and the good words of advice he uttered, but to Christianity and Christian civilization; sentiments inculcated by the Christian religion long ages before speculative Freemasonry had an existence; and it would be the wildest misnomer to credit the origin or the exclusive possession of such principles to any secret society on earth.

It is from the sacred Scriptures the Masons steal what little of "the livery of heaven" they have to "serve the devil in."

(To be concluded.)

"GOOD MEN ARE MASONS."

DEKALB, Iowa, Sept., 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—To defend the lodge, it is claimed that "certain good men have been Freemasons," and especially "ministers." Then why oppose secret societies, since so many good men compose them? If the principles of the lodge are bad and only the vile compose it, there would be less cause for opposition. Prove that there is nothing in the lodge worth saving—that its members are totally depraved, and opposition will largely cease. Christianity is at war with principles that curse humanity, not with men. And as long as a man has not "sinned away his day of grace" he should be saved from lodgery as well as other sins.

It is known that the principles of secret societies are bad, and as long as it can be proved that "good men" help compose them, the Lord will send the light to undeceive them.

If the lodge is the synagogue of Satan—place of false worship, using the material of the church—people of God—good men—then it cannot be successfully denied that it is our duty to oppose the lodge and defend the church in the Spirit of Christ.

It has been proven, by the best of lodge authority, that it is a religion not founded on the Bible. So, if lodgery is a religion not founded on the Bible, it is of the god of this world, to deceive Christians.

There are two sources of religion: God in Christ, and Satan, the god of this world. In one is salvation only. The other is a deceitful counterfeit. That good men are deceived by it is a pity.

The adoption of a national uniform law regulating all cases of bankruptcy in every portion of the Union upon a just and equitable basis is very desirable. The necessity for such a general statute is obvious in every community; and to meet this exigency, in the House of Representatives at Washington, last June, Mr. Oates, from the Committee on the Judiciary, presented a report favoring the system incorporated in what is known as the Torrey Bankrupt bill. It is tersely described as "a measure for the discharge of honest insolvents, the diminution of fraud, the prompt and economical administration of bankruptcy estates, the maintenance of integrity in transactions on credit, and the promotion of commerce."

This bill was passed by the House, July 24, 1890. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary reported it favorably, but it was not reached for consideration by the Senate in the Fifty-first Congress, because of its place on the calendar. In the Fifty-second Congress it was introduced in the Senate. As previously noted, it was reported favorably to the House, where it is known as Bill 9,348. It has the approval of hundreds of bankers and business men, and is probably as perfect a measure of the kind as Congressional wisdom can frame. Those who wish to learn more of it should write to their member of Congress to send them "Report No. 1674, H. of R., 52d Congress, First Session." It is well worth reading for the history of bankruptcy laws and the summary of the provisions that make the Torrey Bankruptcy bill meritorious.

Scribner's Magazine for October begins a group of articles (illustrated) on the World's Fair at Chicago, with a picturesque description of "The Making of the White City"—at Jackson Park—by H. C. Other papers include the following varied and attractive titles: Salem Kittredge, Theologue—His Secular Excursion, by Elias Perry; French Art—Romantic Painting, by W. C. Brownell, with reproductions of pictures by French artists; Stories of a Western Town—Tommy and Thomas, by Octave Thanet, illustrated; The Education of the Deaf and Dumb, by Walter B. Hartt and Prof. Fred D. Chester, and Ewing Gibson contributes another on The Earthquake at Charleston, S. C.—all of absorbing interest. Tom Paulding, by Brander Matthews, and Two Girls and a Roy, by Lieut. Fletcher, are concluded; and the current volume is also ended. The other more prominent papers are: A Land and Water Tussle, illustrated, by Clarence Pullen; How Columbus Reckoned; by Royal B. Smithey, illustrated; The Stone Autograph Album, by Chas. F. No one can read the Herald of Health, edited and published monthly by Dr. L. M. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street, New York, without being greatly edified and interested in its hygienic expositions. It is designed to instruct the common people in the arcana of health and vigor, and admirably does it perform its mission. The October issue is no exception to the general rule, and interest concentrates in the following articles which it presents; A Case of Acquired Deformity Transmitted Through Three Generations to Both Sexes, by the editor; Notes Concerning Health; Sanitary History of a New Town; Hygiene of the Teeth; Women's Underclothing and Health; Of Interest to Women; Topics of the Month, and New Books. $1.00 a year.

Historia for October, the new illustrated magazine of historical stories, is replete with heroic deeds and national events, presenting exploits of Decatur and Somers in the U. S. Navy; A Soldier of His Country; The Test of Courage, a poem; Morgan, the Buccaneer; Adventures of a Young Norseman; The Combat of Hector and Ajax; Duty Well Done; Fighting the Mexicans—continued, and the Death of Sarsfield. A good number. The Historia Company, Chamber of Commerce Building, Chicago.

The 1893 edition of "Peloubet's Select Notes," the acknowledged standard commentary on the International Lessons, is announced for early publication by W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston. Its universal use in years past has proved its intrinsic worth to thousands of teachers and scholars, who have been materially helped in their Bible study through its original and carefully selected comments on the Sunday-school Lessons.

The Century has sent a man to Europe to gather the latest data with regard to railway crossings. The magazine is soon to have an article on this subject and kindred topics which relate to "Good Roads."

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

IN BRIEF.

THE LAST ENGLISH CARDINAL DEAD.

Cardinal Howard, who died a few days ago, was born in Nottingham, England, in 1829. He was grandson of the younger brother of Bernard Edward, fifteenth Duke of Norfolk. In youth he was an officer of Her Majesty's Second Life Guards. At the age of twenty-six he became a priest, and consecrated himself entirely to the service of the Pope. He was made archbishop in 1872, and cardinal in 1877. In 1878 he was given charge of the English college in Rome. He excelled as an Arabic, American and Russian scholar. He was troubled during the past few years with a brain affection, but the immediate cause of his death was pneumonia, contracted in Brighton, England, where he died.

THE SOUVENIR COINS.

The managers of the World's Fair sought an appropriation of $5,000,000 during the last session of Congress. This was refused, but a gift of 5,000,000 souvenir half-dollars was given on condition that the Fair be closed on Sundays. These souvenir coins will be made from uncurrent subsidiary coin now in the Treasury. A large number of the proposed souvenirs have been contracted for at one dollar each. And it is supposed that the whole amount can easily be sold by the World's Fair managers at that price, thus realizing the full extent of the original appropriation asked for.

The souvenir half dollars, unlike medals of the commemorative order, will be legal tender of their face value, the same as the ordinary half dollars. There are now $14,000,000 of uncurrent subsidiary coin in the Treasury. From these will be coined the souvenir half dollars, and given to the World's Fair without expense, the government paying for the coinage. Before they are turned over the World's Fair managers must stipulate in writing that the gates will not be opened on the Sabbath day.

A RESERVATION TO BE OPENED.

It is likely that the Northwest will be the scene in the near future of one of those land excitements which created such a furore in Oklahoma and the Dakotas recently. According to the Helena Journal, that part of the Crow reserve ceded to the United States two years ago will be opened for settlement this fall. A new treaty has been concluded with the tribe.

The reservation begins on the Yellowstone river, nine miles east of Billings, and runs southwest between Clark's Ford and Pryor Creek, to the foot of the Pryor mountains. Thence it runs east to the Big Horn river. The land is rich in mineral, and much of it well adapted for agriculture. Irrigation can be practiced there with little of capital.

In 1885 allotments of land in severalty were made to the Crows. The tribe numbers about 2,300 at present. They are said to be doing well. The government is constructing a system of irrigation for them. But it is thought that when government paternity is withdrawn they can not stand against the advancing white man. Disease is making serious inroads among the tribe, and it is only a matter of time when the whole reservation will be occupied by white people.

WHERE DOES THE GOLD GO TO?

What becomes of the gold? This is a question which an exchange puts and at the same time attempts to reply to it. Since the discovery of the metal in California to the present time the United States has produced $1,900,000,000 in gold. These are the figures of the Superintendent of the Mint. According to his report the total amount in coin and bars, on December 31st, 1891, in the United States was $688,665,211. This latter amount was known to be in the country in the shape of coin and bars in the mint, in the treasury and in the possession of banks. Gold exports to the amount of $57,000,000 can be accounted for, and so can $3,500,000 turned into plate, jewelry, gold leaf, dentists' foil and so on. But all this only aggregates about $740,000,000, which subtracted from $1,900,000,000 leaves over $1,100,000,000 unaccounted for. Trade returns between the United States and Europe from 1843 to 1891 inclusive, show an excess of exports from Europe to this country over exports from here to Europe of $473,000,000. This sum, it is supposed, was paid in gold, but still about $700,000,000 remain unaccounted for. How much is hidden away by thrifty persons who are their own bankers can never be accurately ascertained. Vast quantities of gold have been buried and, perhaps lost forever. Some has been sunk in the seas with lost vessels and so on. But still the interesting problem comes, up, what becomes of the gold? In round figures the United States produced up to the present nineteen hundred millions of dollars in gold. She has now in her banks, mints and treasuries, only about seven hundred millions. For plate and jewelry she used about four millions, and paid four hundred and seventy-three million for foreign goods. That leaves about as much gold unaccounted for as there is now known to be in the form of bullion and currency in the country.

CYNOSURE PREMIUM LIST.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET & BROWN'S COMMENTARY.

We present this work to our Christian readers with the conviction that it will be welcomed as a most valuable addition to the Biblical literature of the day, and will be found to possess

ADVANTAGES OVER ANY OTHER SIMILAR WORK, IN THE FOLLOWING IMPORTANT PARTICULARS:

1st. Its Thoroughness. This Commentary is not written by one writer only, as is the case with Clark, Henry, Scott, and others, but by three of the ablest scholars of the present day, and these have quoted extensively from the works of no less than one hundred and fifty of the most eminent Biblical writers of the present and the past.

2d. Its Modernness. New light is continually being thrown upon the Scriptures by the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shone, by investigation in science, the expository labors of scholars and critics, and the discovery and deciphering of ancient inscriptions, monuments, and manuscripts, thus rendering the commentaries of former days comparatively useless.

3d. Its Compactness. The text and the comments are not printed in separate parts, as is usually the case, but are intermingled, so as to form one continuous history. There are no blank spaces, nor is the book filled up with unnecessary portions of the text. It is what it purports to be—a Commentary—not a Bible. "It is literally packed," says Bishop Wiley, "full of good things."

4th. Its Brevity. Dr. Smith, editor Chicago Standard, says: "I have, in several instances, seen a sermon in a sentence."

5th. Its Liberal Spirit. It is more unsectarian than any other Commentary. "The names of the authors are a sufficient guaranty against any denominational traits in it." These authors are each of a different denomination. The hearty recommendation of the leading men of all denominations gives this still greater emphasis.

6th. Its Scripture References. These are more numerous than will be found in any Commentary extant. Parallel passages are given wherever they are needed. Scripture is thus explained by Scripture, and the Commentary will thus be found to answer the purpose of a Concordance to a very great extent.

7th. Its Illustrations and Maps. These are sufficiently numerous to decidedly enhance its value and attractiveness; while the great majority of Commentaries have no illustrations.

8th. Its Cheapness. No Commentary of its size and merit was ever sold for anything like the price.

TESTIMONIALS.

Rev. Joseph F. Tuttle, D. D., President Wabash College.

It is a noble work that ought to be placed on a hundred thousand shelves in this country.

Rev. Stuart Robinson, D. D., Louisville, Kentucky.

Having for more than twenty years been myself engaged in the popular exposition of the Scriptures from the pulpit, every Sabbath evening—and, of course availing myself of all the aids within my reach—I have met with none among them which so well accomplishes the great end of a popular exposition—viz.: to show the people, in the fewest words, how to read the Bible for themselves—as the very comprehensive Commentary of Jamieson, Fausset & Brown.

Rev. James B. Angell, D. D., LL. D., Pres. Univ. of Mich.

I am acquainted with no Commentary of such conciseness which is so likely to prove satisfactory and helpful to American Christians.

Prof. Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D., Pres. Dartmouth College.

An admirable companion for the Sabbath-school teacher, for heads of families, and for daily readers of the Bible and inferior to no work of the kind and compass with which I am acquainted.

The present edition of this excellent work deserves, and undoubtedly will receive, a large circulation among families and students of the Scriptures who wish to learn what God has revealed and taught. Aside from the Bible itself, they can go to no better source of instruction.—Interior, Chicago.

The unqualified commendations of this Commentary, from the highest sources, together with its already extensive and rapidly increasing sale, have given it a position in the religious world superior to that of any similar work, and prove conclusively that it will soon be universally adopted by Sabbath-school teachers and Bible readers generally, to whom its uses has now become indispensable.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farwell Address: "Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the paths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1892.

"Freemasonry in a pagan country is pagan; in a Mohammedan country it is Mohammedan, and in a Christian country it professes to be Christian; but in this profession it is not only grossly inconsistent, but intensely hypocritical."

—CHAS. G. FINNEY, a Master Mason.

MASONIC LITERATURE.

Thousands of books relating to Freemasonry, many of them written by Freemasons for the promotion of Masonic principles, and others teaching the ancient origin and character of the fraternity, have been published; and it is wonderful how much importance Masonry attaches to the great majority of these works as unanswerable arguments in favor of its excellence and perpetuity.

On this subject, Rev. Chas. G. Finney (himself a "bright" Mason) writes thus plainly: "Masonry cannot be known from a perusal of the eulogistic books which adhering Masons have written. Of course they are under oath in no way whatever to reveal the secrets of Masonry. But it is their secrets that the public are concerned to know. Now their eulogistic books, as any one may know who will examine them, are silly, and for the most part little better than twaddle. If we read their orations and sermons that have been published in support of Masonry, and the books that they have written, we shall find much that is silly, much that is false, and a great deal more that is mere bombast and rhodomontade. I do not say this rashly. Any person who will examine the subject for himself must admit that this language is strictly true. . . . Adhering Masons do not profess to publish their secrets; and that which the country and the church are particularly interested to understand they never publish—their oaths for example—and, therefore, we cannot tell from what they write what they are under oath to do."—Finney on Freemasonry, pp. 23, 24.

Since Mr. Finney died, this statement requires some modification; for the Masons have recently published "Ecce Orienti," a ritual of the three Blue Lodge degrees (oaths and all) in cypher; but any one having either of the expositions of Freemasonry made by Ronayne or Doesburg will find it a perfect key to the cypher; so that this official ritual assuredly verifies the two Anti-masonic expositions referred to, and all others extant. If the authors of "Ecce Orienti" have not broken their Masonic oaths, committed perjury and "given away" their secrets, as surely as has the National Christian Association, then language fails to express the truth when it comes in sight.

We have before us, in the September issue of the Masonic Chronicle (a fraternal organ of considerable reputation among Masons, and printed at Columbus, Ohio), some choice specimens of Masonic "fine writing," a few of which we reproduce for the edification of those of our readers who know the real value of such "twaddle" and "rhodomontade," as Mr. Finney calls it:

"Let us live up to the teachings that Masonry gives; keep it in its purity; frown down innovations, and when the journey of life is ended, we may receive our reward at the hands of the 'blessed Emanuel.'"

A dissection of this passage thus strips it of its ad captandum pretensions: "The teachings that Masonry gives:"—"Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor a substitute for it."—Mackey's Encyclopedia, p. 641. "Frown down innovations;"—No true Mason dares to improve or change Freemasonry: "These (Masonic) landmarks can never be changed. Nothing can be subtracted from them—nothing can be added to them—not the slightest modification can be made in them."—Mackey's Encyclopedia, p. 453.

"Receive our reward at the hands of the blessed Emanuel;" this is blasphemy. "Emanuel"—the Greek form of "Immanuel, God with us," one of the titles of the Lord Jesus Christ, whose name the Masons cut out of their Scriptural allusions, or use blasphemously in some of their rituals. Such a hodge-podge is Masonic literature, of which the above is a fair specimen.

Here is another interesting sample, from the same paper:

"That rusty old locomotive Anti-masonry creeps along on a dilapidated side track at a snail's pace, its machinery worn out, its boiler leaking, but it does try to make an awful noise; a few fanatics are trying to run the train, but it's hard, uphill work. Once in a while, they pick up some one that has been bounced from the Masonic train; we are willing, and they make a great noise over it. The simple truth is they have not got the right kind of lubricating oil; we use truth and our machine runs smoothly; they use untruth and they don't make any headway, and are troubled with hot boxes all the time."

So writes Frank W. Baxter, Highgate, Vt. What do our Cynosure friends think of it? Mr. Finney was right.

THE GREAT IMPORTANCE OF THE ANTI-SECRECY REFORM.

There is peculiar significance in the opening paragraphs of the letter from Rev. M. A. Gault, on another page of this issue. His ideas may not be new to many readers, but their force and importance deserve a wider range than the Cynosure can give them, for they strike the keynote of the tendency of the age, and reveal the high and sublime character of the reform in which the National Christian Association is engaged.

Not only so, but they plainly show that in the present crisis of our political affairs—when the times are so pregnant with danger to Christianity and civil government,—the secret societies are rapidly becoming the rulers of the nation, in spite of the great reform movements of the day, and that the warfare on the lodge is indeed and in truth the REFORM OF ALL REFORMS, second only to those instituted by the early Christian church.

Let Bro. Gault's letter be carefully read and re-read and candidly pondered. The enemies of Christianity, justice, morality, purity and freedom are not afar off, but at our very doors, and even in our households. Shall they prevail against us?

OPPOSED TO THE LODGE.

At the recent session of the Michigan Conference of the United Brethren in Christ (Radical branch), the following stirring resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, We believe that organized secret societies are evil in their nature; and,

WHEREAS, Anti-Christian combinations are rapidly increasing and clearly demonstrating their anti-Christian character, endangering the peace and prosperity of church and state; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That it is the imperative duty of all Christians to refrain from connection with such combinations.

2. That this is no time for us as a church to compromise with worldly secret associations.

3. That we, as ministers and members of the United Brethren church, will seek through grace to overcome all such worldly conformity as would rob us of our peace, or destroy our usefulness.

IN MEMORIAM—CAPT. WILLIAM WILSON.

The first intimation received of the death of Capt. WILLIAM WILSON, at his home in Menominee, Wis., at half-past 9 o'clock, Sunday forenoon, September 4, 1892, was received in a letter from our esteemed associate, Rev. W. W. Ames, Secretary of the Wisconsin State Association, auxiliary to the N. C. A.

Captain William Wilson was eighty-five years old on the 9th of February last, he having been born at Chatham's Run, Lycoming county, Penn., in 1807.

His last illness was of about six weeks' duration. Once during that period he was able to ride out. Much of the time he suffered but little pain and retained his usual faculties.

He heartily joined in religious exercises, and as long as he had strength he persistently attended the prayer-meetings of the church greatly enjoying participation in the ordinance of the Lord's Supper at the covenant meeting just before he was overtaken by his last illness. He seemed to be sensibly impressed that his end was at hand. His whole trust was in the atoning mercy of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the Sunday-school he held the position of superintendent, from the day of its organization, more than twenty-three years ago. This school, under his administration, was very prosperous. In 1876 the names of 2,000 attendants were on the records.

He held his strong aversion to secretism to the last. If any stranger sought the use of the church for lectures or meetings, he was sure to investigate his attitude toward the lodge, and would refuse admission to all who manifested sympathy with it.

His benefactions to the poor, and to Christian enterprises, were many, and often very large and cheerfully bestowed.

A great admirer of our free American institutions, he deeply deplored the legal disability of woman, and longed for the day when she might have the full power and benefit of the ballot. As a reformer, he ranked as a strong Abolitionist and temperance advocate, and did much for the support of these causes.

He was a man of great physical strength, and possessed remarkable business capacity. More than to any other man belongs to him the credit of developing the resources and prosperity of that portion of Wisconsin in which he early established his home and business. The wisdom of his counsels was highly valued by his associates and legislative committees, who cheerfully concede their indebtedness to him for the success of their great enterprises and investigations.

At the same time he was as simple and humble as a little child in his deportment. He seemed never to be ashamed to answer a difficult question by saying: "I don't know." Even in the strength of his manhood, twenty-five years ago, he said to the little, despised church of which he became a member, when he was requesting the privilege of starting a class for the study of Bible doctrine: "My place is with the children." In the church, always ready to bear his part, he never manifested a desire to have his vote count for more than that of the poorest member. He had no desire to be in the majority, only as that should stand for the triumph of righteousness, preferring to be counted in a small minority in the right, to forming part of the largest majority devoid of truth and justice.

He appreciated eloquent sermons, provided they were thoroughly Scriptural, and the speaker frank and sincere; but no amount of learning or eloquence could reconcile him to the absence of these qualities. Briefly, he loved to listen to the plain, simple truth for its own sake.

In the language of another: "In his death has passed away one of the oldest pioneers of the Northwest, he having penetrated the wilds of Wisconsin Territory about fifty years ago. Settling at Menominee, he has seen his personal schemes develop beyond all precedent conceptions, and, all about him, has seen the wilderness blossom as the rose, growing into populous cities and prosperous villages, threaded upon gigantic railways and held but a moment apart by telegraphic ties, where once lay the long, lonesome, tortuous Indian trail. He has noted the change from the startling whoop of the Indian to the regulated sound of the steam whistle. Where once glided the Indian canoe, he has sent his floats of timber designed for the palatial structures of civilization. From the slow, and anxiously looked-for, communication by the follower of the trail, he was permitted to listen to the electric whisper from ear to ear.

"He lived to see the third generation of his posterity by the wife of his youth (Miss Maria Blair), who departed this life before the hardships of Wisconsin began.

"His second beloved companion (Miss Angeline Hale) became his true yoke-fellow in the frontier experiences of the then Northwest, leaving her loving imprint in the hearts of savage and pioneer alike, as well as those within his reach in prosperous years of later life, by kindly acts and Christian deeds.

"He has at last followed these loved ones, having been privileged to see the birth and development of the greatest scientific features that the world has so far possessed. Thus has God blessed the life of a man of noble deeds."

Nine children, and about twenty-five grandchildren, deeply mourn his loss, with other relatives and a host of friends.

An immense concourse escorted his remains to their burial. A train of well-nigh two hundred carriages, followed by about three hundred and fifty employes of the company (Knapp, Stout & Co., of which Capt. Wilson was a member), on foot—the largest funeral cortege ever witnessed in Menominee. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Kidder, of Eau Claire, the pioneer minister of the Chippewa Valley. The remains were interred in Evergreen Cemetery.

Capt. Wilson was, during his long life, engaged in various enterprises. First, a farmer, lumberman and pilot in Pennsylvania; afterwards a contractor on the Illinois Central Railroad; proprietor of a stage line in Iowa; justice of the peace; then a lumberman in Wisconsin.

"To some he appeared," says the Menominee Times, "as a man with eccentricities, . . . but to those who knew him best, by contact, business and social relations, and were brought nearer to him and saw more of his real life, these were but the outward manifestations of a noble enthusiasm, a high sense and appreciation of justice, truth and a spirit of helpfulness."

On the first page of this issue we present a fine portrait of our loved and lamented friend and co-worker.

SENATOR DAVIS ARRAIGNED.

United States Senator Davis, of Minnesota, in his seat in the Senate, last spring, when the Chinese exclusion bill was under discussion, distinctly stated that "there is more matter for profound concern in the attempts of Herr Cahensly, made last year to denationalize American institutions and plant as many nations as there are people of foreign tongues in our midst, than in all the Chinese questions that have arisen since 1858."

This accusation, coming from a gentleman of so much influence, greatly incensed the German Catholics by its sweeping severity; and at the recent session of the German Catholic convention at Dubuque, Iowa, that society authorized its president "to request Senator Davis to withdraw these remarks publicly. Should, however, he refuse to withdraw them," they add, "we will consider it our duty to appeal to our Catholic brothers in Minnesota to use all honorable means to prevent Senator Davis' re-election."

The result will be looked for with interest, as the insult is deemed so great that it must be re-sented."

—At the sessions of the German Catholic Congress, in Newark, N. J., last week, a resolution was adopted denouncing all anti-Catholic secret societies. Rightly interpreted, it is not secrecy to which the Romanists object; it is the indifference or opposition of those societies that will not acknowledge the rule of the papistry.

—The German Baptist General Conference was opened in this city last week, to continue until Tuesday. At the invitation of Rev. J. L. Meier, pastor of the First Church, the N. C. A. Corresponding Secretary addressed a large union meeting on the danger of lodge worship Sabbath afternoon. There was a full program, and ten or more speakers, but fifteen minutes was given our cause. In the evening, Immanuel Norwegian Lutheran church was visited, and a good audience heard of our work with deep interest.

—Tarkio College, the U. P. institution in Missouri, has had a remarkable experience during the past year. First, its buildings were burned, with a heavy loss; then ensued unfavorable weather, delaying reconstruction; the new doors and windows were destroyed by fire at the factory; then new stairs and bannisters were burned in another factory; and these and other delays have retarded the completion of the structure for several weeks. We are pleased to learn, however, that the college opens with much larger attendance than in any previous year.

hibition ticket. He is clean, from hat to heel, from the secret society infection and is quite popular in his district, in which he stands a strong chance of being elected.

Tuesday I attended the S. E. Nebraska Baptist Association at Falls City—a town that is cursed more with saloons and lodges than any other of its size in the State.

This week I hold meetings in this county (Richardson), at Verdon, Silver Creek, Salem and Dawson. Rev. S. W. Patterson, pastor of the Evangelical church at Verdon, has arranged these meetings, and will go with me from point to point. He has charge of three congregations, and is a devoted worker, thoroughly imbued with the spirit of reform. He was for many years a member of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan's congregation, in Kansas, and is now saturating his people with the old-time theology and reform zeal he imbibed from Bro. Milligan.

I am now able to announce positively that Dr. D. H. Coulter, of Winchester, Kan., will make an address at the Wahoo State Convention, Oct. 18, 19. He has been with us in many conventions, and cannot be excelled as a convention worker and speaker. There is none whom the Wahoo people are more interested to hear.

AMONG NORTHERN ILLINOIS CHURCHES.

"SKANDIA."

This word does not appear in the first impressions of our Illinois Forest City, but it emphatically does in the second.

Rockford is a city of some 30,000 people, extended widely, and growing rapidly. The churches are among the most remarkable buildings. The Second Congregational (Dr. Barrows) is one of the finest structures of the kind in the West. Chicago can surpass it in size only. The First Swedish Lutheran is the largest in the denomination, seating 3,000 people. Its pastor, Rev. L. A. Johnston, has spoken at our reform conventions, and at various times read papers against the lodge in local ministerial meetings. The Court St. M. E. church is also a very fine and large building. Throwing all its rooms open some 2,500 people could hear the Gospel from its platform. I was told that a canvass of the city showed about one-half its people attending church more or less regularly. This probably includes the two Roman Catholic and the two Unitarian churches; but it is nevertheless a remarkable showing. No other place of the size equals it, to my knowledge.

Another striking feature of the city is its manufacturing. They meet you on every hand, and on the east and south are stretching away into the country. Another item of remark is the comparative absence of saloons. Rockford has at times prohibited these places. This year a few are licensed; but their time promises to be short. The best sentiment of the city is against them, and the Prohibitionists seem to be the only active party. Mr. James Lamont, aided by several students from Wheaton, who are called the "College Quartet," is pushing a strong campaign for Bidwell and Cranfill.

Among the causes for this excellent pre-eminence of Rockford among our inland cities it is natural to speak first of the Swedes. This people number nearly one-half the population. They are found in all departments of business and are the right arm of the factories. "Skandia" is written over ten or a dozen of these hives of industry. Seven churches, some of them large, receive the multitudes of these kinsmen of ours from North Europe on the Sabbath. They could accommodate near 10,000, and the throngs that pour into them show the spirit of the people.

The rule among the Swedish people is opposition to the lodge. Some serious exceptions are found, but that is the rule; and if Swedish influence is felt in business, religion and temperance, it is in our reform also. Visiting among the pastors I found the objections to the lodges widely felt and more or less clearly stated. Several churches will be open for addresses and when time can be given a good work can be done.

THE SWEDISH MISSION CONFERENCE.

I visited Rockford at the request of Rev. C. A. Bjork, of the large Mission church in Chicago and president of the Conference or "Covenant" meeting of his people. It was an earnest and devotional assembly of some 250 pastors and delegates. They gave audience to the request of the N. C. A., adopted resolutions condemning the lodge, and appointed editor Hallner of the Missions Wannen (Mission Friend) of Chicago and Rev. F. M. Johnson of Rockford, delegates to the pastor's conference at our next annual meeting. They raised in a short time nearly $1,700 for their Alaska mission, and projected stronger educational work in St. Paul. The religious services, afternoons, evenings, and on the Sabbath, were crowded by thousands, and a revival spirit prevailed.

OTHER ROCKFORD CHURCHES.

The Free Methodist brethren meet in a hall on State street. They welcomed me speaking on the dangers of lodge worship; and the day was profitably spent with them and at other services.

Bro. H. P. Marks of this church was my kind entertainer.

Rev. S. G. Ohman of Zion Lutheran church wishes an address before his people at some early day. He is a young pastor of noble bearing and true heart. He subscribed for the Cynosure to better inform himself and instruct his people respecting the dangers of secret societies. Pastor Dorn of the German Lutheran church is equally awake, and will be true to his trust. Both the Congregational pastors are quietly but decidedly against the orders; so are some of the Methodist and Baptist pastors, but I was grieved to find one interesting young Methodist brother full of lodgery and blind to its evils. May our short conversation lead him to see a better way.

THE ILLINOIS WESLEYANS.

This Conference met on Wednesday the 21st in the Kishwaukee church of which Rev. W. C. Mullenix is pastor. Bro. Mullenix and his motherly wife extended a welcome to their home, and I visited the Conference during the first day. By suggestion of Rev. William Pinkney, president of the body, I was permitted to occupy the evening and spoke to a good house on the undivided worship which our Lord demands of all mankind. Bro. Pinkney followed with a rousing exhortation which will be felt in that interesting community, for the Patrons of Industry are insidiously intruding their secret methods among the people.

THE NORWEGIANS OF HAUGE SYNOD.

At the suggestion of pastor Brohaugh of Trinity Lutheran church, Chicago, I visited a quarterly conference of this interesting people on the 30th of September at Norway in LaSalle county. In every direction for ten, fifteen to twenty miles the beautiful rolling country is filled with Norwegian farmers. The colony began at an early day—1830 or thereabout—and has been gaining steadily ever since. Norway is but a country center with two or three stores, a postoffice, school and three churches, two Lutheran and one Methodist—all Norwegian. The Conference postponed an auction sale of articles made for the purpose, to provide money for missions, for a half hour while the people were told something of the N. C. A. work and its urgency. They crowded the church and listened eagerly. To many of them the theme was new, but the older men were glad of the movement. The Hauge Synod differs chiefly in its devotional methods from the Lutheran brethren whom I met in Decoriah. They use the Gospel Hymns in English and are less conservative and formal than the larger body. Each local church, as I understand, makes its own rule for the lodge, although the Synod is committed by resolution and practice to opposition.

I left this interesting meeting immediately to reach a train for Chicago where the Sabbath is to be spent profitably if God wills.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) DEPOT, }
Sept. 26, 1892. }

On reaching home Friday last, I found, among others, two urgent letters from Bro. Z. Graves to visit him at once. I left Boston by the 2 o'clock P. M. train and reached his home in the early evening, to find him seriously ill, but able to talk quietly. He has been confined to his bed for four weeks, and has suffered greatly. His trust in Christ is unshaken, and his interest in our special line of reform unabated. His regret is, not that he has been true to his convictions and fearless in their defence, but, rather, that he has not been more faithful and persistent in defending the faith and keeping Christ's bride "unspotted from the world." I remained over Sabbath, preaching in the Congregational church, meeting Bro. and Sister Viol, who had been in my congregation when I was a pastor at Byron, Ill.

The doctor gave little encouragement, when he called yesterday, and last night was one of anxious watching to Bro. Graves' wife and children who were at his bedside. He was resigned and cheerful, and suffered less pain when I left him at noon; and if the dear Lord has a work for him yet to do, he can raise him from his couch of suffering, as he called Lazarus out of his tomb.

Let this dear family, who are united in our work, be remembered in the prayers of the saints.

COVENANT LOVE.

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God.—Rom. 8: 28.

All things, dear Lord? Is there no thread of woe
Too dark, too tangled, for the bright design?
No drop of rain too heavy for the bow
Set in the cloud in covenant divine?

I know that all thy full designs are bright;
That darkest threads grow golden in Thy hand;
That bended lines grow straight—the tangled right—
The bitter drops all sweet at thy command.

Command the sweetness! make the crooked straight!
And turn these dusty, tangled threads to gold!
Swifter, dear Lord! I cannot longer wait;
Faith has grown weary, longing to behold.

I know the promise, but I crave the sight;
I yearn to see the beautiful design;
To hail the rose-tints of the morning light;
To watch the straightening of the bended line.

Why these enigmas? Wherefore not receive Their bright solution? Then a voice drew near:
"Blessed are they who see not, yet believe!"
And one I knew approached, and wiped my tear

With wounded hand, and sighed. Ah! then I fell Down on my knees, and held him by the feet,
And cried, My Lord! My God! All, all is well!
With thee the dark is light, the bitter sweet!

A TENDER FATHER.

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." There are some who know what it is to have a tender father who "pitieth his children." For many years they have been fed by a father's bounty and a father's toil. They have been dandled on a father's knee and pressed to a father's heart. They have been cautioned by a father's voice and watched by a father's eye; borne in a father's arms, protected by a father's care. For them hunger and thirst and cold and heat have no terrors. A father has guarded against all these things, and his care has protected his loved ones. When sickness has come the father has sat by the bed-side, watched the beating pulse, and ministered to the necessities of the sufferer, and rejoiced with new joy when health has been restored and life prolonged.

"A father pitieth his children." When they go wrong, he pities them. When they disregard his advice, and are laying up for themselves sorrow and trouble, he pities them, and perhaps feels himself powerless to shield them from evils which they might have escaped if they had heeded his kind warnings.

It is God that has planted the sense of fatherhood in the human heart. It springs from him. It is a spark from the flame of eternal love; and as a father loves and pities his children, so the great God yearns with all the pity of a loving father over those who are creatures of his creation, the monuments of his mercy, the objects of his care.

Let the saints of God rejoice in the love of their compassionate Lord. Let the broken-hearted and the sad come to the throne of his grace and seek his mercy; and let those who have found the world a desert waste, and a howling wilderness, whose earthly homes are desolate and whose earthly fathers are laid in the dust, turn their thoughts to their heavenly Father, and, casting all their care upon the Lord, look forward to the day when they shall see his face, and abide in his presence for evermore.—The Christian.

SWEETEST THING IN THE WORLD.

"What is sweeter in the world than a baby?"
"A sweet mother."

This was the question and answer I heard when walking through the park, one morning, in early summer, passing with others one of the dainty bits of humanity that one sees at every turn, being trundled along beautiful walks.

Why did that beautiful answer, "A sweet mother," so stir the deepest, tenderest feelings of my nature?

I had heard the words many times before, but they came to me then as a revelation, gathering, as I repeated them over and over, a beauty, a strength, and a magnitude, that seemed to reach eternity.

"A sweet mother!" aye, sweet in the truest sense of the word!

Mothers, do you realize that in granting to you motherhood, God has placed upon your brow a regal crown? Worn and weary as you sometimes are, it may be hard to realize this; you have possibly looked with a feeling akin to envy upon those of your sex, who, untrammelled by home cares and responsibilities, have risen to fame in the eyes of the world. Nevertheless, grand as is the work of some of them, it is not so lofty and honorable as yours, even the lowliest among you; and there are times when the most famous would exchange all her years of worldly honor and applause for one hour of your sweet home-world.—Exchange.

LINCOLN ON MARRIAGE.

In his wanderings about the city a few days ago the writer had occasion to call on a man who was an intimate acquaintance of Lincoln—and such men are growing fewer. The conversation turned on the great man naturally, for if a man knew Lincoln intimately he is sure to run to Lincoln before the conversation is over if it lasts sufficiently long. "In some respects," said the gentleman referred to, "Lincoln's memory suffers by reason of his having been the king of wit. There are those who think that he never said anything serious. I cannot understand how such an impression exists, but I know it does. Why, he was one of the greatest philosophers I ever heard, and his philosophy was always modestly put, but at the same time he was always so sincere in it that he was at times almost solemn. I remember on one occasion he was talking about marriage, a subject in which he always took the most profound interest. He said that every man who contemplated marriage should stand over a doctor with a club and make him tell the truth in reference to the chosen partner for life, if there was no other way of getting it out of him. And he went further. He declared that the parents who would allow a girl to marry a man without knowing as nearly as could be known his physical as well as his moral condition, deserved to be scalped. In his opinion the whole marrying business was wrong. He declared that fashionable girls too often were cursed with foolish mothers, who cared for nothing but to see their flesh and blood sold to the highest bidder. There was nothing funny in that sort of talk, was there? It ought to be framed and hung up in every home in the land. How few men knew the depths of that master of men. What a loss to the world that he should have been taken away from it at the time when he was just being understood."—Chicago Tribune.

THE DATE OF THE CRUCIFIXION.

That the time of the crucifixion of Christ may be approximately demonstrated by astronomical calculation, after paying due honors to the historical data we possess concerning that most important transaction, has been all but positively proven by an eminent United States Supreme Court Justice, Judge Joseph P. Bradley. The cardinal points in this much controverted question are these: 1. The time must be brought within the reign of Pontius Pilate. 2. It must be after the fifteenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, and after the thirtieth year of Christ's age. 3. It must occur on the fifteenth day of the Jewish month Nisan, and on the sixth day of the week, or Friday.

After a great deal of laborious research, Mr. Bradley deduced the following interesting conclusions: There were only three years between the year A. D. 27, and the year A. D. 35, both inclusive, in which the 1st of Nisan, and consequently the 15th of Nisan, happened on a Friday. These were A. D. 27, 30 and 33, the last being very doubtful. But the crucifixion could not have happened before the year A. D. 28, and probably not later than the year A. D. 31. Therefore the year 30 is the only one which satisfies all the conditions of the problem. It satisfies them because it gives opportunity for Jesus to teach publicly for about three years and to attend three passovers during his ministry, or four, according as it commenced on or before April 3, A. D. 27. Now, since in A. D. 30 the 1st of Nisan fell on Friday, the 24th of our March, the 15th fell on Friday, the 7th of our April. Therefore, Friday, April 7, of the year A. D. 30, was the day of the crucifixion.—Philadelphia Press.

THE LOST HOURS.

The limited express on the Pennsylvania railroad was speeding into the city of Philadelphia with its precious freight of human lives, when suddenly the great engine slackened its force, and the train ceased to move.

"What is the matter?" cried a portly man in the rear of the car.

"There is an obstruction in the way, and we shall be detained two hours," was the reply.

"What, sir!" cried the portly man. "Why, I tell you I have an important business engagement in which my life's interests are at stake! I tell you, man, I must reach the city on time."

"We cannot do it, sir," said the official; "we shall be detained here at least two hours."

"Oh," cried a gentleman with flushed cheeks, "this is more than I can bear. My mother is dying and I shall be too late to receive her blessing. I could bear it," he bitterly added, while the sobs shook his frame, "but I have been a wayward child, and was not thoughtful of her comfort."

"And I," said a gentleman in evening suit, "was to have addressed an audience at the academy to-night. I shall reach the hall just one hour too late."

Two girls on the opposite side of the car discussed the mishap with indignation.

"I cannot see to match that silk by gas-light," cried one; while the other, with tears of vexation answered, "I shall miss that musical social now! To think that the first chance I ever had to listen to a brilliant star should be lost through this luckless mishap."

In a seat by the window sat a sweet-faced lady, with silver hair, and hands folded peacefully before her. A bustling man, passing her, said, "Madam, you at least are not inconvenienced, I see!"

The patient face lighted up with a sad smile. "Sir," she answered, "he that believeth shall not make haste." Seeing the puzzled look on his countenance, she continued, "I am a widow, sir, and childless. There is one family tie left me still, a little grandson, who attends the grammar school in Philadelphia. Yesterday, upon returning from school, a runaway horse broke his leg, and he is now lying in the Children's Hospital. I, sir, am on my way to be with him while they amputate his limb. But," she continued as she brushed the tears from her eyes, "there is a heavenly Father whose child I am, and he bids me run with patience the race that is set before me. I cannot doubt his promises, for they are yea and amen to his children, sir. I am waiting for his commands, and trusting peacefully in his Word."

A hush fell over the car. An angry man who but a moment before uttered an audible oath, with a shamed face slipped out of the car door. The pale man brushed away his tears, and the two girls who had complained so bitterly resumed their talk in an undertone, with tell-tale blushes on their faces.

The two hours struck, the engine whistled, the train moved slowly at first, and then once more the Pennsylvania express, with its mighty iron horse, was speeding over the line to the city of Philadelphia.—Sallie V. DuBois.

CHURNING-DAY.

They dearly loved the house-mother's churning-day—these three blue-eyed little children—because that was one of the few times that the busy mother could tell them stories; sometimes about the wonders of the Black Forest; sometimes fairy tales; sometimes stories of when she was a little girl; but the stories they loved best were of the old days when Spain did not allow any people in that country to have any Bibles, or to worship God in the simple Bible way. It made them thrill all over to hear of men and women, and even little children, that would die, burning at the stake, rather than kneel to the image of saint or virgin.

"I wish I had lived then," cried Hans, clenching his small fist; "I'd show the Spaniard a thing or two; I would have died shouting rather than to give up to him."

"Ah, Hans, Hans!" said the mother, resting on her dasher, "dost thou not know that God asks of thee something harder than that?"

"Harder than being burned, mother!" exclaimed timid Ernest; "how can that be?"

"Ay, does he! He means thee to live for him, boys. Dying was over in a few minutes; one could make up one's mind to bear that, and so go quickly home to the Lord; but living for him means hard trying every hour of every day—oh, so many hours, so many days!"

Then the dasher began its noisy journey again, and Mother Gretchen's three little boys watched it with very sober faces.—Selected.

WE ALL MIGHT DO GOOD.

We all might do good
Where we often do ill;
There is always the way
If there be but the will;
Though it be but a word,
Kindly breathed or suppressed,
It may guard off some pain,
Or give peace to some breast.

We all might do good
In a thousand small ways;
In forbearing to flatter,
Yet yielding due praise;
In spurning ill rumor,
Reproving wrong done,
And treating but kindly
The heart we have won.

We all might do good,
Whether lowly or great;
For the deed is not gauged
By the purse or estate;
If it be but a cup
Of cold water that's given,
Like the widow's two mites,
It is something for heaven.

HE COULDN'T GET THE GATE OPEN.

More than sixty years ago, a boy, ten or twelve years old, started one morning to go to school. He didn't like his teacher and did not like to go to school. He wanted to stay at home, but he knew he could not do that because he was not sick, and had no excuse. But he thought he could invent one that would answer.

His mother started him off with his dinner-pail in his hand, and thought, of course, her little boy would go straight to school, as he often had done before. But after he had been gone fifteen or twenty minutes the little fellow came back.

Was he sick? No. Had he been hurt? No. Did anybody or anything frighten him? No. What then?

Well, he told his mother "he couldn't get the gate open."

His mother knew this was a poor excuse. She knew he could very easily climb over the gate if it was fast, and that her little boy was only shamming.

What do you think she did? Let him stay at home? Go and open the gate for him? No. She just went towards the wood-pile, and picked up a little switch, and then, turning to the boy, said:

"Come on, I will help you get the gate open."

He soon took the hint and was off as nimble as a cat, not caring for gates or fences either.

This boy lived to be nearly eighty years of age. He died on the day before last Christmas.

During his long life he found many gates to be opened—as we all do—and that a lively step and a lively switch will help, not only over gates, but over wide ditches, steep hills and high mountains.

After many years the gray-haired man came to the last gate. It opened of itself, and led into the graveyard, where he now sleeps.

The last gate is before us all. It may be just a little way off, or it may be a long journey. No matter, it is surely ahead somewhere, and we will come to it sooner or later. When we reach it, may it not only lead into the graveyard, but beyond it into the brighter world where gray hairs and trembling limbs are never seen.—Anonymous.

TEMPERANCE.

ASTOUNDING FACTS ABOUT LIQUOR.

Prof. Peabody, of Harvard, in a recent lecture, says that there are at present in the liquor traffic throughout the country some two hundred thousand persons, one hundred and sixty-three thousand in the retail and the rest wholesale. These figures represent only the dealers. The number of persons employed is upwards of one million. The worst of these horrible figures is that they mean the withdrawal of just so many persons from the right kind of employments. In their present occupations they contribute little or nothing to the wealth of the country. As to the amount of liquor consumed in 1886, $337,000,000 was spent for spirits, $304,000,000 for beer, $16,000,000 for domestic wines—a frightful total of about $700,000,000. This is one-twelfth of the amount spent for food, clothing and necessities of life. In the same year there was received as wages $947,000,000, and the liquor bill consumed two-thirds of it. Again, it costs $320,000,000 a year for churches, and the drink bill would buy all the churches in six months. Behind all this is the great importance of the moral aspect. That drink is injurious to the person in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand goes without proof.

In New York, last year, 1,434 husbands procured divorces from their wives on the ground of drunkenness. During the same year, 12,432 wives procured divorces from their husbands on the same charge.

An English paper, from statistics taken from the press of the United Kingdom, reports the records of the murders of women by inebriated husbands from Jan. 1, 1889, to Jan. 1, 1891, to be 3,004.

It is said that New York City alone contains one hundred thousand men and women disabled on account of the use of strong drink. Being disabled they are removed from spheres of usefulness, and are burdens to their fellows. Their brains are sodden, their nerves are alert to pain and suffering, and they hang upon the ragged edge of expectancy, hoping, yet fearing, for the end.

Thousands of such facts could easily be collected. In the aggregate they are appalling; and they all show how enormous is the guilt of the American people who tolerate and legalize this the accursed traffic. If God is the Judge of nations, awful judgments are impending if this nation will not repent.

WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO?

Discordant elements are springing up everywhere, and riot, bloodshed, destruction of property, defiance of civil authority, characterizes the movements of the day. Civil authority has to be appealed to, and the military is called out to quell riot and anarchy. When we see the growth of communism, the rapid increase of crime, the progress of anarchy, the sympathy extended to law-breakers and the truckling fear and cowardice of sworn officers of the law, the question naturally arises, "What are we going to do?" The number of deaths by murder in the United States is more than double the average in the most criminal countries of Europe; and this number is increasing in our country every year, and at a ratio far greater than the increase of the population.

Recent statistics published in sundry journals show very clearly this great increase. We have reached very high figures, and figures evidently destined to go higher. In 1890, the number of murders in the United States was stated by statisticians to be about 4,000; in 1891, it was close upon 6,000. At the time of the tenth census there were 4,608 persons in prison charged with homicide, and in the eleventh census 7,351. This seems enormous, especially in view of the fact that here is an increase of persons held for murder of over 59 per cent, while the increase in population has been less than 25 per cent.

We see but one way to put a stop to all this iniquity, and that is to strike at the saloon, the known source of nine-tenths of it. Men are already realizing their helplessness to grapple with so serious a situation; and some from principle, and others from the thought of necessity, are favoring the granting of the franchise to women, that her influence, combined with the better class of men, may overcome the evil.

Mrs. Livermore has well said, that just as in normal vision we need two eyes in order to get a correct perspective, so we need to have both the masculine and the feminine at the ballot-box to view the present and future and prepare for its needs by guarding it from evil and opening the way for the good.—Pacific Ensign.

THE ORGANIZED AND POWERFUL EVIL.

The saloon no longer stands alone, unconnected and unsupported by any other. The whole liquor business is to-day thoroughly organized, and is full of resources, cunning, vigilant, politically powerful and carefully entrenched. A very large portion of the saloons are owned by the big distillers and brewers or the wholesale dealers. Various causes have contributed to this organization and concentration of the traffic, among which we may mention the peculiar method of government taxation during the war, which led to large investments of capital in the business; the general concentration of trade of all kinds in our time, and the pressure of temperance reform, specially of its faulty methods of restriction, of license high and low, which utterly failing to control or exterminate the evil traffic, have only served to concentrate and train it to successfully meet opposition. It has gone into politics, and where it does not own or control one or both of the great parties, it wields the balance of power between them. It employs a half million of men, and these with the dependents and hangers-on of the saloon, make an army of a million and a half of men, or about one-eighth of the voters of the nation. This is a voting force with which it has been able to turn elections at its will. A vast capital is invested in the traffic, and it yearly collects from the people a revenue of more than a thousand million dollars, while its indirect cost to our nation is perhaps a thousand million more. The nation pays a third more for liquors than for bread and meat combined. The saloon has a revenue, it is said, equal to that of all our great railways combined.—John C. Scott, in Knoxville Journal.

NUGGETS.

A dispatch from Hamburg says that the cholera there has been especially severe on beer drinkers and intemperate people generally.

The Prohibition party has gained 278 in Vermont, as shown by recent State election, while the Democratic party lost 1 as compared with last year, and the Republicans 6,262—the latter, however, carrying the election (as in Maine also) by reduced majority.

Resolutions are being adopted in many places asking the Columbian Commission, which meets in Chicago Oct. 18, and remains in session for some days, to investigate the charge made on the floors of Congress and in the press that the local Directory of the World's Fair have contracted to violate the liquor laws of Illinois.

The Treasury Department has decided that representatives of foreign governments who desire to entertain visiting exhibitors or representatives from their governments with liquors need not pay duties on the liquors used. The department will also permit exhibitors to give away samples of liquors, cologne and similar goods. These gifts, however, must have no commercial value.

Last year the inhabitants of Germany drank 52,304,000 hectolitres of beer, an increase of over 7,000,000 over the quantity imbibed in 1890. If they would abstain from lager, the occupation of the Socialists would be gone, for so many of them would be so far on the road to a moderate prosperity, that they would have no temptation to covet their neighbor's goods. In poverty is anarchy bred, and alcohol is the mother of poverty and crime.—Catholic Review.

A dollar and a half in hand now, for a subscription to the Cynosure, is better than two dollars a year hence.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The devout centurion. Vs. 1, 2. This lesson marks the beginning of a new era for the Christian church. It is true that when Christ expired on the cross the middle wall of partition was broken down, and there was neither Jew nor Gentile. But it took some time for men brought up as strict Jews, holding rigidly to all the requirements of their law, which demanded their complete separation from all heathen foreigners, to recognize these changed conditions. Cornelius reminds us in many respects of another centurion mentioned in Luke 7: 5. He was "a devout man;"—not merely observant of all his outward religious duties, but intensely spiritual. He "gave much alms to the people," as in the case of the centurion to whom we have likened him, described by the Jews as one who loved their nation and had built them a synagogue. It was natural that he should testify his gratitude for the spiritual benefits he had derived from this despised nation by ministering to them in carnal things. His good works were accompanied by prayer. One result of the numerous organizations characteristic of this age is that they absorb all the time and energy of the workers, leaving no "still hour" for reading the Scriptures and communing with God. "If we cannot do anything else," said a devoted white-ribboner whom years and infirmity had laid aside from active duty, referring to others similarly situated, "we can at least pray for the leaders, who are given no time to pray for themselves." But, as in Cornelius' case, every soul should have two doors:—one inward, opening towards the Holy-of-holies, the other opening outward towards the world of humanity. Works without faith are as dead as faith without works. If Cornelius had simply prayed and given no alms, or given alms, but never prayed, it could not have been said to him, "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God."

2. Cornelius' vision. Vs. 3-8. Cornelius without doubt was yearning after a deeper experience,—a "second blessing," which would perfectly satisfy his spiritual cravings. Judaism was an immense advance over the heathen religion in which he had been reared; but with the instinct of a plant growing in the shade, but always stretching up towards the light, so he was certain that there was something better beyond if he could reach it. If his had been the haughty, arrogant spirit which a military life tends to develop, he might have caviled at the idea that one who could help him should be lodging with a humble tanner. But he was immediately "obedient to the heavenly vision," and sending for three of his servants to whom he declared what he had seen, he sent them to Joppa. We are told that Cornelius "feared God with all his house." Fewer Christians would stand alone if, like Abraham, and this Gentile centurion, they commanded their households after them, and used their authority in every way to keep their children and servants from unholy and contaminating influences. His was a religion not kept for outside show. Even for his most intimate and trusted servant he chooses one of like mind with himself. His piety was not woven into his life as a mere ornamental design, but was a part of its warp and woof.

3. Peter's vision. Vs. 9-18. Cornelius needed Peter to show him the way of God more perfectly, but Peter needed Cornelius no less. Christ had promised that he would make him a fisher of men; but how was this promise ever to be fulfilled, while he clung to his caste prejudices and called every Gentile unclean, when God, by sending his Son to die for him equally with the Jew, had declared emphatically that there was no difference? In this vision of Peter's we have a graphic representation of the world of humanity. It was a great sheet, thus typifying the vastness of the field. It was knit at the four corners, so that of all which it contained nothing should fall out. So the Gospel offer includes all. No one can slip outside the pale of the gracious invitation and say, "It is not for me." Christianity recognizes no outcasts, no Pariahs, but continually cries, "Whosoever will, let him come."

4. Peter's obedience. Vs. 19, 20. It was God's plan to bring these men together. The way in which he did it should teach us the need of being spiritually receptive; open to every impression which he may send. Peter had no clear light on the vision till the messengers arrived from Cornelius. Like any of us, he had to wait for providential leadings. To follow our impressions, without first being sure that they agree with Scripture, reason and Providence, is to run on the quicksands of fanaticism and make spiritual shipwreck.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—A brief note from President Harper states that his duties are very pressing just now: "With a faculty of one hundred and ten to get in working order you can well appreciate the demands at present in Chicago."

—This is news from the Mission Rooms in Boston: "A party of twenty-eight persons will sail from Boston, Sept. 24. Besides these about a dozen candidates go out this autumn, several from the Pacific ports, to Japan and China."

EVANGELICAL.

—Thursday, August 25th, was observed in San Francisco as the mid-week Sabbath. Several thousand business houses were closed during more or less of the day. Many neighborhood prayer meetings were held in the morning at eight. Services were held in forty churches at nine. Mr. Mills preached in the Pavilion at ten to an audience of 5,000 people, a large number of whom were business men. Two thousand were present at the noon prayer meeting in California theatre, and hundreds were turned away. At half-past two there were 6,000 at the Pavilion, and in the evening 8,700 by careful count. Deep and widespread interest was manifest. Many of various ranks and ages appeared among the converts; in many instances husband and wife arose together. The interest was fully sustained throughout Friday. The evening after-meeting was given up to the converts, several hundred speaking. Multitudes rose silently to announce their purpose of leading a Christian life. Saturday evening, was for the Chinese only. There were 1,000 present, including the Chinese Consul and Vice-Consul. Three hundred Chinese signed cards declaring their purpose to become Christians, nearly all of whom were men. Over 5,000 cards have been signed so far.

—Methodists, Presbyterians and Quakers have had the largest increase among evangelical churches in Germany.

—In the name of the State University of Colorado a composite, pan-sectarian theological school has just been organized, with a faculty composed of two Baptists, two Episcopalians, a Congregationalist, a Disciple, a Unitarian, and a Universalist. The Methodist is missing because Denver University is so near a neighbor.

—The British Young Men's Christian Association has a membership of 83,817—an increase during the past year of 5,123.

LUTHERAN.

—The twenty-first annual convention of the N. Y. and N. J. Synod will be held in St. Paul's, Wurtemberg, N. Y., Rev. G. W. Fortney, pastor, October 4-9, 1892.

—The sixth annual convention of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Central Illinois Synod will convene at Shipman, Ill., October 13 and 14, 1892.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Miss Gertrude Howe, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, from Kiukian, China, arrived in this country Aug. 6, bringing with her five Chinese students—three boys and two girls. One of the latter, Mary Stone, was educated by the Des Moines branch and comes as the protegee of that branch to take a course of study in the medical department of Ann Arbor University, Mich.

—Northwestern University is more prosperous than ever. Even the attendance from Chicago, so far from being decreased, has advanced 125 per cent over last year's record. The registration so far in the college of liberal arts alone has reached the imperial figure of 471, and the late comers will increase this to over 500. The most sanguine did not quite expect this.

—The census returns show that the Methodist Episcopal Church South has forty-two annual conferences in this country and three in mission fields abroad, with 1,209,976 members and 15,017 organizations. These organizations have in all 12,687 church edifices, which are valued at $18,777,362. Of the more than 200,000 colored members reported by this church in 1860 only a very few remain in connection with it. Thousands at the close of the war joined other Methodist bodies, and in 1870 the church set off most of those it then had into a separate organization known as the Colored M. E. church. Adding to the returns respecting the Southern Methodist church those already reported in relation to the Methodist Episcopal Church North, we have as a total in regard to the Methodist Episcopal body in the United States: Organizations, 40,878; church edifices, 35,531; seating capacity, 9,662,174; value of church property, $115,498,770; communicants, 3,450,330.

—The General Missionary committee of the Methodist Episcopal church will meet in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9.

—Twenty-seven charges in the Texas conference pay their pastors $200 or less a year.

—The majority of English Methodist preachers lose their votes at every election by reason of the long period of residence required—two years.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—We learn from a recent article in the Forum that, during the last decade, the Roman church in the United States has not kept pace, in the way of growth, with the Protestant communions. The communicants of the Roman church increased 15½ per cent; of the Congregational church, 33 per cent; of the Methodist Episcopal church, 30 per cent; the Presbyterian church, 40 per cent.

—There are now eighteen missions of the American Missionary Association among the Chinese of California. Sixty-five joined the church during the last year, and about three hundred Christians are connected with the missions. Their offering for Christian work for the first fiscal year amounted to $6,290.40. The other denominations, the Presbyterian, the Methodists, the Baptists, and others, have a similar record; and it is an encouraging fact that the Gospel is making steady progress among the Chinese in California.

—The report of the fifteenth year of work at the Pacific Garden Mission has just been issued. It is prefaced with a memorial card in honor of Col. George R. Clarke, the founder and promoter of the Gospel enterprise, who was called to his reward June 21, 1892, and "being dead yet speaketh." Mr. Chas. Cook, one of the active helpers, has also passed away. Mrs. Clarke and Harry Monroe have had the main burden of the mission, valuable assistance being given by Mrs. Carlos Swift, superintendent of the Bible class, and by other helpers from Central Baptist church, the Training School and Moody's Bible Institute. $7,710.61 represents the expenditure of the past year, nearly half of which, as usual, is contributed by the founders of the mission. Much good has been accomplished by this veritable life-saving station amid the breakers. Meetings have been held every night with an average attendance of about 300, and of 500 on Sunday nights. The number of souls helped, who can estimate?

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—Several female delegates to the Protestant Episcopal Convention, of the diocese of Mass., were refused admission by a vote of 86 to 85.

REFORMED CHURCH IN AMERICA.

—The record of the First Church, Westfield, Mass., is, according to an exchange, unparalleled. Its first pastor died in 1729, after a pastorate of nearly fifty-seven years. Then followed pastorates of fourteen years, thirty-five years, twenty years, forty-four years and thirty years. None of the pastors thus serving the church during its first 200 years were dismissed; all died in service.

—On September 12th, a missionary party started from Jersey City for China, via Portland and San Francisco, in whom the readers of the Cynosure will take interest. The party consisted of the Rev. E. P. Thwing, M. D., his wife and daughter Gertrude, with his son, Rev. Edward W. Thwing, and his wife. Dr. and Mrs. E. P. Thwing and daughter go to China at their own expense, the Dr. with special reference to establishing an Insane Asylum in Canton. The readers of the Cynosure may recall Dr. E. P. Thwing as one of its contributors. The Rev. E. W. Thwing and wife go out under the appointment of the Presbyterian Board. The party were to sail from San Francisco on Sept. 27th.

—Tidings have reached us that about the middle of October a party of 300 persons will emigrate from the Netherlands, in order to found a New Holland colony in San Louis Valley, Colorado. This colony is to consist only of professing Christians.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The Salvation Army intends to show at the Columbian Exposition, in a complete manner, its whole scheme of moral and social reform.

—In Australia, a judge recently handed over a prisoner to one of the Rescue officers, with the remark: "We can do nothing with her; if any one can do her good, it is the Salvation Army."

—The social wing of the Army has entered into a contract with the London School Board to supply the schools of the metropolis with fire-wood for the ensuing winter. This will amount to 1,250,000 bundles.

—"Whatever has the Salvation Army done to our Dan? He's not the same lad since he went there. All he's fit for now is to read his Bible and pray," said an Irishwoman whose son had been captured by the Army.

—Five hundred and fourteen thousand one hundred and fifty-nine destitute people were sheltered and fed last year by the English Salvation Army.

HOW TO AVOID CHOLERA.

The following are the views of Dr. Shakespeare, the port physician of Philadelphia, concerning cholera. The doctor is a bacteriologist—that is, a germ expert. He says:

In my opinion Asiatic cholera, highly infectious and frightfully mortal as it usually is when it obtains a footing amid ignorance, poverty and squalor, is, fortunately—even in such a favorite locality—of all the dangerous epidemic diseases the most easily and certainly avoided by the individual, if only the proper precautions be constantly and scrupulously observed. Cholera victims may be lived with, handled, nursed and treated with absolute impunity if these precautions be never once forgotten or neglected. The cholera poison does not affect the air, even of the sick room; it cannot be inspired with the breath; it does not enter through the skin, or through cuts, sores or abrasions of the body. It enters through the stomach only, and assails by way of the intestinal canals.

All cause, of whatever nature, of disturbance of the functions of the stomach and intestines should be studiously avoided; such as intemperance of all kinds, either in drinking or eating; all irregularities of personal habits, either as to time of meals, occupation, exercise or hours of sleep; all emotional excitement should be removed—in short, every circumstance which experience has shown may exercise a disturbing influence upon these important functions should be carefully guarded against; the use of articles of food which are liable to occasion indigestion, or to cause an unusual or unhealthy activity of the digestive apparatus should be interdicted.

The importance of a healthy condition of body is pre-eminent. A healthy person could take cholera germs into the system and not be affected by them, unless they were introduced in great numbers, as the natural juices of the stomach are strong enough to kill a small quantity of the germs. The popular notion that large quantities of whiskey are beneficial to a person who has been exposed to infection is fallacious. Strong drink should be avoided, as it weakens the system and lowers vitality, while it does not kill the germs of disease. The cholera germ is the easiest to kill of any germ of infectious disease.

Experience has abundantly proved two laws which have an important bearing upon the spread of cholera: (1) The tendency to infection varies exceedingly among individuals, and is with the majority small. (2) Disturbed conditions of the digestive apparatus greatly increase the susceptibility of an individual, and render him far more liable to an attack after exposure to the infection.

Cholera is never generated by fright, ill-health or constitutional weakness, filth, starvation or anything else, unless this infectious principle be first introduced into the stomach. Without the actual presence and multiplication of the cholera bacillus in the intestinal canal, an attack of Asiatic cholera cannot occur.

What, then, are the rational and reliable preventive measures for the individual during times of actual or threatened prevalence of cholera? They are crystallized in four words—prompt isolation, thorough disinfection.

A YOUNG LADY'S RULES.

The following rules of conduct fell out of the pocket book of a young lady, and an unscrupulous newspaper reporter picked them up, says the Paducah Standard.

1. I don't let a man smoke when he walks or drives with me. If he knows no better than to do it, I promptly tell him what I think of it.
2. I don't give my photograph to men. I used to, occasionally, but I am wiser now. I should hate, by and by, to know that my face might be hanging up in Tom, Dick or Harry's room.
3. I don't let a man take my arm when he walks with me. If he does, I tell him I prefer him to give me his arm.
4. I don't go out with a man friend just because he asks me. I like it better if he asks another lady to go, too—his sister, for instance.
5. I don't let any man "see me home" from church. If he hasn't gumption enough to take me there and sit through the services with me, he may stay away altogether.
6. I don't let a man friend give me presents unless it is something of a trifling cost, like fruit or flowers. And I always gauge a man by his taste in this respect.
7. I don't encourage any young man who is not perfectly polite and agreeable to my mother. Whoever calls upon me sees a great deal of her.
8. I don't allow a caller to stay later than ten o'clock. If he does not go home at that time, I politely tell him my custom.

A neglected cough may lead to consumption, therefore, take Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

Homeless!

That's the way your husband feels, when you're trying to clean house in the old-fashioned, hard-working, fussy way. It's enough to drive any man to take the first steps downward.

You can just as well make home pleasant while you are making it clean. Take Pearlina to it. That saves so much work that house-cleaning is no trouble, either to the worker, or the looker-on. It's sooner over, and it's better done.

Beware

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as" Pearlina." IT'S FALSE—Pearlina is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 330 JAMES PYLE, New York.

FARM NOTES.

THE BEST LIVE STOCK IS THE CHEAPEST.

A writer for the Ohio Farmer says: In these days of low prices for beef and pork it does not pay the farmers to keep any but the best breeds. Inferior stock is kept at a loss, while the well-bred animals, whether cattle or hogs, are paying fair profits on the feed consumed. We hear men say that it does not pay to go to much trouble to get good stock, or to pay much attention to it. Let us investigate a little.

Some of the neighbor farmers have been practicing in that line. One man bred his three sows to a hog which was well bred, but on account of the low price of fat hogs, was the only male stock hog kept in the vicinity, and was thus bred to excess; result—fourteen pigs raised from the three sows. Others had the same experience, except that some of the sows raised no pigs. Other men bred to any kind of cheap hog, and from twenty sows only sixty pigs were raised. In the same vicinity four men have paid strict attention to using none but the best male hogs, which were well cared for and allowed to give but one service; result—litters of seven to ten pigs of good quality.

While one man complains of his hogs not doing well, another gets good growth. A butcher not long since hunted around for some good larded hogs, and paid $3.60 per hundred pounds, while shippers were buying at $3.30. Does this careless manner pay the farmer? Is it not a fact that those farmers who have secured the best hogs have got more for the corn fed to the hogs during the last two years of low prices than those who have been careless? Good, well-bred male hogs have been fattened and sold off during the last two years, while an inferior class has been used by the general farmer. It is discouraging to breeders of good stock to be offered only fat hog prices for well-bred breeding stock; and as for service fees, it is worth as much to collect them as they amount to. The writer has established the rule of pay at the time of service, in cash or grain. Several farmers in this vicinity have kept up the quality of their stock but a majority have not, and three-fourths of the live stock, especially cattle, are much inferior in quality to those kept twenty years ago.

Had the farmers of the United States held rigidly to the practice of rearing none but the best live stock, grain, fruit, produce and poultry, there would never have been any need of an alliance society to get legislation. If each and every farmer would study his own needs and wants and labor to have the best, debts would disappear as the smoke does, gradually and surely. They would be the money loaners instead of borrowers. Let each and every one strive to have nothing but the best, and success will be the result.

SEASONABLE HINTS.

High feeding, or the forcing system, will produce more pounds of butter from a given amount of food than will the gradual or ordinary plan of feeding, but it is possible that it wears out the machine more quickly.

Fall plowing, wherever nature will permit of it, is one of the most effective methods of combating insect pests. By depriving them of shelter and exposing them to the action of winter great numbers will be killed off which otherwise would come out in the spring vigorous and ready to attack the young crops.

Celery and asparagus are the two vegetables most rarely seen in either the farmer's or the village garden, yet there is none that will better repay the labor of cultivation. We speak from experience. Beside, one is the first vegetable to come in the spring, and the other is the last in autumn. Thus they help to lengthen the season.

We have known some farmers, who were sensible in most things, to handle their orchards as if they did not know that any trees were growing there. They would plow, grow crops that impoverished the soil, or use the orchard for pasture, as if the trees were no more to be considered than fence posts. It is no wonder that in such circumstances the trees become discouraged and die, or, if they live, become stunted and sickly, and produce fruit that is of little worth.

Clean up fallen leaves and rubbish in orchards and anywhere else upon the farm that it may have collected, as early as possible. Not only is it unsightly, but it furnishes shelter and a breathing place for innumerable insects and vermin that will come forth another season to annoy you. Burn all such, or put it to good use in the compost heap.

We shall never again attempt to fight the potato bug with any application of dry poison. Our experience this year has shown a better way. A single good sprinkling with a solution of Paris green, one pound of poison to twenty gallons of water, killed them off more effectually than we have ever been able to do in any other way. If the sprinkling has to be done by hand it is a good deal of work, but not so much as to go over two or three times with dry powder. If one has a spraying apparatus the work may be done with that quickly, easily and economically.—Exchange.

A good appetite can be bought, like anything else. And good digestion after it, too. Both of them come with Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. That starts the torpid liver into healthy action, purifies and enriches the blood, cleanses and repairs the system, returns health and vigor, and builds up flesh and strength. For all diseases that come from a disordered liver or impure blood, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Scrofulous, Skin and Scalp Diseases—even Consumption (or Lung-scurf) in its earlier stages, the "Discovery" is the only remedy so sure and certain that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

On these terms, it's the cheapest blood-purifier sold, no matter how many hundred doses are offered for a dollar (or less)—for with this, you pay only for the good you get.

Can you ask for better proof of its superiority over all other blood-purifiers?

The 100,000 Chinese residents in California are reported as being in open rebellion to the oligarchy of the Six Companies, which recently ordered them not to register their names, addresses and photographs, as required by the amended Chinese Exclusion bill.

Alfred, Lord Tennyson, poet-laureate of Great Britain, is dead, at the age of eighty-three. Had he not been poet-laureate or a lord, he would still have ranked as England's greatest secular poet. All the fame that he achieved in this distinctive position was honestly deserved, and cheerfully accorded. Now that he is dead, it is difficult to designate any other living English poet who can claim the honored office which he so ably filled for many years. We look in vain in Tennyson's poems for the sentiments of a true reformer, nor can we look up to him as we can to Cowper and Young as the poet of Christianity. We may accord to him unqualified praise as a writer, endowed with manliness and brilliancy of ideas, and as one on whom the gift of poesy was lavishly bestowed; but while the world was charmed by his fancies, we find in his poetry little that testifies to the advancement of any of the great questions of the age that make men of less genius great because of their connection with these important reforms.

This construction put upon President Harrison's reference to education in his letter of acceptance, by the Catholic Review, is both liberal and reasonable: "It amounts to this—that parents who cannot conscientiously use the present public school system may, after helping to pay for the education of the children of their neighbors who can do so, build and support schools for their own. On the same subject ex-President Cleveland writes in his letter of acceptance: 'An enforced education, wisely deemed a proper preparation for citizenship, should not involve the impairment of wholesome parental authority nor do violence to the household conscience.'" "This," adds the Review, referring to Cleveland's expression, "is not clear, definite, or specific." It seems, however, to support Mr. Harrison's views. "If not, why not?" On this subject the North-western Christian Advocate, the mouthpiece of the Methodist Episcopal church, has this to say: "He who is sleepy, or indifferent, or ignorant with respect to this public school question, needs prodding. The best fruits of general intermingling of children in the public schools are mutual acquaintance, adjusting of diverse habits of thinking, and that practical averaging of mundane instincts which begets republican respect for one's equals in a land where there is no supreme king."

"Maine has," says the Voice of Masonry for October, "an eminent Committee on Ancient Craft Masonic Correspondence," of which Josiah H. Drummond is the chairman, with the reputation of being "a veteran expert in such work." His expressions, therefore, should have great weight with the Masons. Among others, he "hands down" this decision: "A Christian can pray only in the name of Christ; a Hebrew cannot pray in his name. While there should be no petition in a Masonic prayer to which Christian and Hebrew cannot alike say 'amen,' each must be allowed to approach Deity in the only manner which he conscientiously believes to be according to the law of God. It is precisely the same as in taking an oath; the Christian has one way, and the Hebrew another," etc. This makes the Masonic prayer, like Pope's, "universal"—suitable, alike, to be addressed to Baal, Joss, Buddha, or any other representative of "deity," and gives it, besides, such a general direction that it goes nowhere, reaches nobody, and receives no answer. Masonry has yet one thing to learn from Holy Writ, which it professes to hold in such high estimation, and that is, that prayers addressed to the Almighty, devoid of the Spirit and name of Christ, are worthless. This trying to pray "good Lord" and "good devil," just as it may happen, is a very poor sort of petitioning for a blessing.

A TRUE HERO.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

The daily papers, both in Canada and this country, have recently been lauding as a hero a young Covenant minister, Rev. John Ramsey, who was a delegate to the Pan-Presbyterian Convention at Toronto. He, with a large body of delegates, came with an excursion on Saturday, Sept. 24, from Toronto to Niagara Falls. That afternoon, as Bro. Ramsey and a few other delegates were walking across the new suspension-bridge, a lady of the party, Mrs. Grimson, lost her balance and fell over, her feet catching between the gas-pipe and the lower girder, where, as if by a miracle, she remained hanging, head downward, over the foaming river that flowed nearly two hundred feet below. While the bystanders seemed paralyzed with terror, Bro. Ramsey, who is a powerful athlete, jumped over the railing and, seizing a cable, let himself down to the lower girder and grasped the lady, holding her safely until the bridge officials lowered ropes and pulled them both up. Mrs. Grimson was completely prostrated, while Bro. Ramsey was none the worse for his heroic venture.

We sincerely congratulate him on being the instrument of saving a precious life. He spent several days with us at Blanchard, Iowa, last summer, and subscribed for the Cynosure. He was impressed with the fear that secret societies were about to take this country, for everywhere their lodge-rooms were conspicuous, and their badges and parades and conclaves were flaunted in the faces of the people. In Ireland, he said, Masonic lodges were numerous, but their existence was much more concealed from the public, and it was seldom they marched in funeral or other processions. Bro. Ramsey visited Denver during the Masonic conclave, and was startled at the power of this organization and its fearful hold upon popular sentiment.

The Blanchard people were delighted with a stereopticon lecture he gave, while there, of "A Trip through Ireland." He will remain in this country until December.

ON REFORM.

[Report of the Committee on Reforms, New York Annual Conference, Free Methodist Church, 1892.]

It is the duty of the church of Christ to raise the voice of warning against all evil; to be on the lookout for its manifestations, and to point them out when they appear.

That there are gigantic evils which beset us upon every side, none can deny. They endanger the peace and prosperity of our fair land, and are a blot and a stain upon our nation.

1. The chief of the number, the curse of all curses, the sum of all villainies, is intemperance. As has been well said: "It cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength, and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the loving mother, extinguishes natural affection, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachment, blights parental hope, and brings down mournful age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends, and all of them paupers and beggars. It feeds epidemics, imports pestilence, and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, poverty, disease, and crime. It fills our jails, supplies our almshouses, and demands our asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels, and cherishes riots. It crowds our penitentiaries and furnishes the victims for the scaffolds. It is the life-blood of the gambler, aliment of the counterfeit, the prop of the hangman, and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, upholds the hypocrite, resurrects the thief, and inspires the murderer. It violates obligations, reverences fraud, and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue, and slanders innocence. It incites the father to butcher his offspring, helps the husband to massacre his wife, and aids the child to grind the parricidal ax. It defeats life, curses God, and despises heaven. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness. With the malevolence of a fiend, it calmly surveys its desolations; and, insatiated with havoc, poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, and slays reputation. It curses the world and then laughs at its ruin. It banishes the soul from the regions of the blest to the place of the damned.

We pledge ourselves to stand by every consistent effort made for the overthrow of this demon.

[Note by the Conference Secretary:—The Committee on Reform did not mention the Prohibition party, as it is well known, far and near, and repeated by conference after conference, that our church, preachers and people, with scarcely an exception, preach, pray, and vote prohibition, first, last, and all the time.]

2. Romanism differs from the evil of intemperance, in that it is an insidious foe. It lays its plans in secret, and, as far as possible, executes them in the darkness. Rum and Romanism are closely allied. Rome practically controls the rum traffic. She uses this traffic to accomplish schemes. The greater per centum of rumsellers belong within the pale of the Romish church. Her priests absolve them for their murderous work of destroying souls, and then preaches them into the land of glory when they die. She is filling our land with foreigners, who, while professing to be citizens of this country, have sworn allegiance to the Pope of Rome. She is seeking to destroy our public schools by driving out Protestant teachers and filling their places with those of Catholic faith. Wherever she can get the power she banishes the Bible from the school-houses, or substitutes her own version in its place. Rome seeks to run the whole political machine of our country, caring for the parties only as they serve to carry out her wicked plans. As has been said, New York State generally determines the political complexion of the Republic; New York City controls the State; 40,000 voters hold the balance of power in that city; 5,000 saloons control these 40,000 voters; these 5,000 saloons are controlled by the holders of 5,000 chattel mortgages upon the saloon property; these 5,000 mortgages are held by about twenty brewers, distillers and wholesale liquor-dealers; the majority of these twenty men are controlled by the Roman Catholic church, and the Roman Catholic church is controlled by the Pope of Rome. So, through the agency of the rum traffic, the Pope is running the political machinery of our nation; running it to the ruin of our free institutions, running it to secure supremacy of our land and to bring it into subjection to the Roman Pontiff.

We fear that unless the Protestant church awakens to the real condition of affairs, and takes consistent, persistent and united action against the doings of this foreign potentate, we will live to see great trouble and distress, and behold our fair land again deluged in blood.

3. Organized secrecy is another great evil which stands directly in the way of the progress of the Christian church. It is one of the greatest exhibitions of intense selfishness that exists in the world. With its humiliating and degrading initiations, blasphemous oaths, horrid penalties, un-Christian and anti-Christian principles, it is a menace to good government, a destructor of the home, and a blight upon the church. Its tendency is to cause men to violate conscience, to disregard the law of the land, and to trample upon the rights of others. It often shields crime, thwarts justice, and punishes the innocent. It substitutes so-called good works for real faith, the decrees of the conclave for the law of the land, the rules of the order for the precepts of the Word, and the god of the lodge for the Christ of the Bible.

4. We protest against all forms of Sabbath desecration, and deplore the fact that we are fast becoming a nation of Sabbath-breakers. Railway trains, street cars and milk wagons roll along our streets and destroy our peace and quietude, and violate God's law. The pernicious Sabbath newspaper, with its sensational trash and moral filth, debauching the people and depopulating the churches, is doing incalculable injury. We call upon professors of religion everywhere to lift their voices against these moral plagues which are spreading spiritual blight and death wherever they go.

These are perilous times, and there is great need of loud voices, strong nerves and brave hearts, to assail the foe and win victory for the cause of God.

We declare ourselves in favor of all reform movements which have for their object the destruction of evil and the purification and elevation of the human race.

We rejoice that, as a church, we have taken our stand against all these evils; and we pledge ourselves anew to continue the work on this line until the end comes.

THE GOSPEL IN UTAH.

[The following address was delivered before the sixty-sixth annual meeting of the American Home Missionary Society, last May, by Mrs. A. J. Bailey, wife of Rev. A. J. Bailey, of the Congregational church, now preaching in the State of Washington, but formerly stationed in Utah.]

It is with great pleasure, dear friends, that I stand here to-day to speak for the work of the American Home Missionary Society, to me one of the grandest societies that I know anything about. Are you oppressed? Do you feel the weight of responsibility as you have listened to this one or that one telling of this opportunity or that opportunity for Christian work? It reminds me of that little story which Dr. Smith Baker told us a while ago of the little girl who walked home with him one night from prayer-meeting, where he had been unusually earnest, and said to him, "What a world of good you might do, Dr. Baker, if you would only wake up." [Laughter.] That is what I have been thinking about all the time: What a world of good we could do if we would only wake up. This is the Lord's idea—his thought concerning us.

I wish to talk to you first about Utah. What hope is there for the Territory? To get right down to facts, what has been done there? We have been working there a good many years, and it is your privilege to know what the Gospel has done for Utah, and for that part of our country which has been so blighted by the curse of a false religion—Mormonism. Have there been any changes?

You read the reports and are somewhat disappointed. I do not wonder. The fruits of the work cannot be told in figures. But there are changes in Utah; wonderful changes, too. We have a very ignorant people out there, but there are ignorant people in other parts of the country.

It was in an Eastern church the other day that an Eastern lady of culture said to me, "Why, the Mormons, they are those men who all have many wives, don't they?" "No; they do not." "Why, you don't mean to say that polygamy is done away with?" "Certainly I do." I should be ashamed to speak of it to an Eastern audience if it had not been so lately demonstrated. We have laws in Utah. There was a time in my earlier acquaintance with the Territory when I could not go anywhere without this matter of plural marriage being thrust upon me. In years past polygamy and Mormonism have been synonymous terms with us. It made our cheeks tingle with shame when we thought of American women suffering thus and brought so low. But during the past five years I have gone freely about the country and I have known just one case of plural marriage. I have heard of others, but I have known just this one case during that time—one man who boasted that he owned two wives and who boasted of a score or more of children, crowded into a little dirty hovel, whose misery I could not describe. That man, a few weeks after I saw him, was put in the State penitentiary of Utah, and he is there still. I want to emphasize this fact, that it is not a common thing to-day to see men in Utah with more wives than one. I heard of a case—and I believe it to be true—where the Mormon church itself, only a few weeks before I left Utah, excommunicated a man because he did not obey the commands in regard to plural marriage. The people have been commanded by the church not to take more wives than one, and this man was excommunicated because he did not obey. But this picture of the man who boasted of having more wives than one, living with his family in utter wretchedness, is a complete illustration of what all that Territory would have been had it been left to go on its downward course, because it was on the downward track. It was fast approaching the level of Asiatic heathenism when it was arrested in its course by three strong forces: Commerce, United States law, and the work of Christian evangelization. Of those three forces which have broken down the barriers of Mormonism and have changed that part of our country so as to make it possible to go anywhere and preach the Gospel there, I claim that the most potent force is that of Christian evangelization. You say it was due to the Edmunds Law. A stronger thing than law has accomplished the work. Polygamy has been crushed under the weight of public opinion; public sentiment is against it in Utah, and I do not believe it can ever live again because of that, and this Christian work has brought about that state of public opinion.

You would like to know something about the home life. What can we do for them in a Christian way? I have been asked to give a little account of the work mentioned by one of our secretaries this morning. In one of the settlements out there, over four years ago, the young women of the place tried to have a little Sunday-school, and the question came up what they should do. They wanted something that was not Mormon, and something on the Sabbath day. What should they read? One of the girls, who had spent a little time in the Territory of Idaho and had attended a Sunday-school there, said they always read a piece from the Bible. That seemed to astonish some of them, but others thought it might be true, and finally they decided by vote to always read a piece from the Bible. Shortly after that my husband and myself were invited to go there regularly and preach to them. We went, and we labored among them constantly for four years. I would like to picture them to you in a better way than I can in the few moments that I have to-day. We have never been disappointed in that people. We found them—the men and the older women particularly—very pronounced in their opposition to the Bible. They called themselves infidels; they believed that they were followers of Robert Ingersoll; they declared that they hated the Scriptures, and they never wanted to have that book read to them any more. We began preaching the Bible, and it was not long before they themselves built a little house for chapel and school purposes. They paid for it themselves. They have taken a decided interest in the work from the first. Their attitude has been entirely changed toward the Bible and toward Christian churches. As one of the women expressed it not long ago, she said of our work there: "They have converted this whole neighborhood," meaning by that that their whole attitude toward Christianity was entirely changed. Two years ago, when we were having a series of meetings, there was a woman who was very strong in her opposition to the church, and said with a good deal of bitterness to her sister, who had risen in the meeting and expressed her desire to be a Christian: "I thought you had been fooled enough when you joined the Mormon church; I did not think you would be such a fool again." This past winter, while we were holding meetings there with a great deal of interest and the evident power of the Spirit, one night I was passing down the hall when this woman stopped me with the question: "Mrs. Bailey, what would you do if you had brought up your whole family to hate God and to hate the Bible, teaching them that it was all a lie? What would you do? I cannot reach my children now. Some of them have grown up; some of them have gone from home and have homes of their own. I cannot reach them now. What shall I do?" She was intensely in earnest. I told her I did not know what she could do except to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. But she said: "Mrs. Bailey, I have thought again and again that if I had had the early training which you had I should believe just as you do; but I thought I was right; I thought so for many years." That woman's daughter has come into the church, but she herself has not. Her last words to me were: "I am waiting, hoping that my husband will come in with me."

That church there is not large, but we believe it to be a true church of Christ. There are as many as a score there who have given evidence that they are Christians; but I want you to make it possible for those who are there in Utah to-day to have such teaching that they will not have the attitude which these people had toward Christianity in the past. You can do great things for the future if you will.

ORANGEMEN AND THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT.

The history of Orangeism in this country (Canada), and especially in the Province of Ontario, where it has its stronghold, is a deeply interesting one. It is a curious fact that, although the organization is one of the oldest and strongest in the Province, and has been one of the chief factors in the politics of the Province and of the dominion at large, there is no such thing extant as a history of its progress in British America. This, together with the fact that the whole powerful organization supports only one small weekly newspaper, will convey an idea of the standard of literary culture among its adherents. The reader of history is apt to entertain a very strong prejudice against this society. Charles Dickens in his "American Notes" speaks of having had pointed out to him a window in a Toronto house from which a shot was fired with murderous intent at a passer-by. He goes on to say that a flag floated over that window and that he "need hardly say that the color of that flag was orange." So impartial an authority as Chambers' Encyclopedia gives such an account of the order as would lead the reader to believe that it was a great conspiracy of violence against the Roman Catholics. The society, we are told, was the successor of ruder forms of organization in the north of Ireland, which had carried on for a century before the warfare against Roman Catholics. The Orange order was to be called after the Prince of Orange, who became King William III., of England, and who has been, after their fashion, canonized by the Orangemen as the chief representative of the idea of Protestant succession on the throne of England and of the defense of what they call "Protestant rights." The steps to relieve Roman Catholics in Ireland of the disabilities under which they labored aroused the Orange order to the greatest activity, and in 1829, when the Catholic relief act was proposed in Parliament, the promoters of the order sent out to every part of the Empire and even to the United States to organize branches.

In Canada the religious rancor caused by feuds between Roman Catholics and Protestants, together with the existence of considerable settlements of people from the north of Ireland, many of them already members of the order, had prepared the ground, and the organization extended its power with great rapidity, especially in Upper Canada, now the Province of Ontario. The objects of the order as represented to the public were of the most pacific and praiseworthy nature; but for some reason which the promoters do not explain, the order had the good or bad fortune to attract almost wholly bigots of the most deplorable class, so that for a time the name became identified in Canada, as it had elsewhere, with outrages of all kinds. It even went so far that whole townships were settled by fanatical Orangemen, who would not allow a Roman Catholic to dwell in their midst, and from these townships sallied forth bands of stalwarts on election day to terrorize those whom they could not convince. Many are the tales that old residents tell of the doings of the "Kitley Blues," the "Cavan Blazers," the "Wallace Lambs" and other lawless gangs of the same order. To one Ogle R. Gowan, a man of mediocre ability but much fanatical zeal, the Orangemen of the old days used to ascribe the chief glory of establishing the order in Canada. As one of their balladists put it:

'Twas Gowan in honor first planted the tree,
And its fine orange fruit you plainly may see;
'Tis wide at the top and 'tis sound at the root,
And the heart of each orange is virtue and truth.
Singing down, down, down Derry down, etc.

Beginning with Gowan, the Orange institution either attracted or developed a most rancorous class of politicians. The membership was such that only men of the bulldog character could make their way to high office in the institution, while the man who once succeeded in making a place for himself had in the fact of his success what in these days is known as a "big pull." Nominally, the order is non-political. But then it is specifically organized to defend the "constitution," and as the members, as a rule, are not close students of that very ill-defined thing, their leaders have no difficulty in convincing them that a man who seeks changes which they do not desire is another Guy Fawkes, traitorously plotting the most complete of revolutions and the most diabolical of crimes. Some reformers were foolish enough over half a century ago to allow themselves to be goaded into armed rebellion. For years before the outbreak and almost ever since (in the back townships at least), it has been a part of the Orange creed that a Liberal is a rebel and a traitor. Some Liberals have joined the order, and there are even some districts where the institution has been used for the benefit of the Liberal party, but these are exceptional instances. Where time has worn away the rock-founded belief among Orangemen that Liberalism and rebellion are the same thing, the new belief has been zealously propagated that every Liberal desires to annex Canada to the United States, which is even worse in the eyes of the brethren. Thus, while the Orange order has been always "non-political," its dread and detestation of rebels, traitors and "emissaries of Rome" has kept it always in line with the Conservative party. The facts that the same man is to-day at once the principal secretary of the Orange order and the chief organizer of the Conservative party in Ontario, and that this gentleman directs the affairs of both from the same desk, indicate the relations subsisting between the two. It is a strange commentary upon the "loyalty" of the order, however, that when the Prince of Wales came to Canada as a youth in 1860 he was not allowed by his advisers to land at the city of Kingston because the emblems of the Orange order were displayed by some of those that assembled to welcome him. The royal family to which these people in such fulsome fashion professed their devotion would not recognize their organization even in an inferential way.

The closeness of the Orange organization is the greatest feature of this strange body. Founded in Ireland at a time when property and even life itself depended upon constant vigilance and prompt, united action when the call was sounded, it seems to have maintained this characteristic almost intact even in the Canadian offshoot, degraded as it is to the post of the mere political drudge. A prominent Liberal politician is fond of telling how in conducting a forlorn-hope campaign in an Orange stronghold he asked an old citizen whom he met how he would vote. "I don't know, sorr," was the reply; "we haven't got the word down this line yet how we're to vote." Arguments are lost on such people, because their votes express not their own opinions, but the opinions of their leaders. The society has its ramifications everywhere. In many districts in the Province about the only buildings other than dwellings and barns are the church, the school-house and the Orange Hall. In these districts the chief public holiday of the year is the "Glorious Twelfth," as the brethren call it, the 12th of July, which they celebrate as the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, an engagement in which William of Orange, coming to Britain in 1690 by invitation of all classes to take the throne, met and decisively overcame his opponent, the monarch of that time, James II. In former years, when Canadian society as a whole was much more uncouth than it is now, the "Glorious Twelfth" was in many places a day for decent Protestants to keep indoors and Roman Catholics to visit their friends at a distance. Drunkenness and disorder of every kind marked the occasion. In recent times there has been a decided and general improvement. Toronto has been for many years the scene of the great demonstration in honor of the battle of the Boyne. Those taking part came in from everywhere within 700 miles of the city. With handsome and brilliant regalia, gorgeous banners and plenty of music, the procession, which is always one of the principal features of the day's program, is an imposing manifestation of the solid strength of the Orange body. Toronto is dominated in political affairs by the Orangemen. The present mayor, Edward H. Clarke, who has been four years in office (longer than any previous occupant of the civic chair), is the editor of the newspaper organ of the body. It is one of the marked evidences of the good understanding between the leaders of the two sets of extremists, the Orange and the Catholic, that Mayor Clarke has always received the bulk of the Catholic vote; and that even when disaffection in his own machine threatened him with defeat the steadfast support of the Roman Catholics saved him.—Canadian Correspondent of the Chicago Herald.

TESTIMONY OF C. N. BABCOCK.

I have several reasons.

First, I wanted a clean heart; and in order to get it, I knew it came by an entire consecration, and entire means everything, so I had to give up the lodge.

Second, After I had given myself to Him I could not go where He was not allowed to go, for there is no Christ in the lodge.

Third, To be in the lodge was to be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers." Also, "what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" I have been called a liar for saying there were infidels in the lodge. But we know there are.

Fourth, To be in the lodge was to be "conformed to the world." And last, but not least, we believe in a regular old-fashioned religion that takes a man out of all worldly institutions and takes all love of the world out of him.

We might write more on this subject, but we forbear.

Hope and pray that these few lines may help along on this question of moral reform. Your brother in Christ.—C. N. Babcock, of Shelby, Mich.

TESTIMONY OF A. G. MORSE.

When I was converted I was a Mason and had belonged to four other secret societies, but I found that when I went to the lodge I got lean in my soul. I found also that after going to the lodge I did not have such a relish for the meetings as before I went. Then I took it to the Lord and found I had to give it up or lose my soul. I decided to go to heaven, cost me what it would, and I am in the straight way that leadeth up to the city of God. He that keepeth the commandments of God hath a hope within himself; he that believes God believes his Word also, and God says: "Come out from the world and be ye separate and I will receive you." That is where I stand. Glory to God for the light which the Holy Ghost has shed on my path. I am walking in it, and I am filled with the Spirit.—A. G. Morse.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The subscription book.—A new study for Maine public schools.—The death of an anti-secret veteran.—Other matters.—A novel plan of a Connecticut Congregational pastor.

Among the chief things which have conspired to the degradation of American letters is the mania among publishers to secure as writers, by the payment of large sums, men and women who have achieved notoriety in some other profession, and are without any literary ability whatever. The report that the defeated prize-fighter, Sullivan, is going to betake himself to the pen may be only a canard, but I have no doubt that should he do so, he would find publishers—aye, and readers, too—without any difficulty. Next to this nothing has contributed more to lower the standard by crowding out genuine literature than the book "sold only by subscription." Everybody knows it by sight as well as they know a subscription book-agent; it occupies a place in every library. Thick paper, generous margins, print so large as to make spectacles superfluous, and a corresponding paucity of letter press;—such are the distinguishing characteristics of these handsome and portly volumes, which in so many cases we are wheedled into buying despite the protests of our better judgment, to think with a pang of regret every time we see them on our shelves that we could have bought some gem of standard literature with half the money that would have been a joy forever. That there have been some valuable works offered to the public in this way does not alter the fact that the regular subscription book, from cover to cover, is a grand money-making scheme, containing no information that could not be obtained in a cheaper form. The famous suit of Messrs. Estes & Lauriat against Gen. Butler for breach of a contract made with them to publish his book, has brought out some curious facts for the book-buying public to ponder. One is that these companies are willing to pay high for a famous name. Fifty cents a word is certainly good pay—better than our most noted writers usually receive, but this is what this firm paid James G. Blaine for his share in the collaboration of their latest and most popular subscription book, "Columbus and Columbia." But it is not generally known that these firms keep "book-carpenters," who, on being given a certain subject to write upon, with general directions as to length and other important points, will proceed at once to hew out a book to order, as complacently as a real carpenter would proceed to build a house. However, the true book-lover, who goes to his library for inspiration quite as much as instruction, knows how wide the difference between all such productions and genuine literature.

Forestry has been made a study in the public schools of Maine. It would be well if her example could be followed by every State in the Union, and the rising generation be imbued with a reverential love for our grand forest trees as well as some idea of their value in the great economy of Nature. Let us by all means have more tree-lovers. After all, what is more satisfactory than to plant a tree?—to make of it a friend, a teacher; to watch its growth year by year; to see it leave out in the spring-time miracle of resurrection, and in the fall put on its royal attire as for kings' courts? And then to see how carefully the same kind Providence that watches over us—you and I, reader—tucks the baby-buds away for the winter in their tiny hermetically-sealed caskets, all soft and downy within, without all pitch and varnish, frost-proof and storm-proof. I do not wonder that the favorite figure of the Psalmist to which to compare the righteous man is a tree.

The death of Bro. Zephaniah Graves, of Rehoboth, Mass., will leave a gap in our ranks not soon filled. To him may well be given that high Scripture eulogy, "He was a good man,"—true as steel to the anti-secret reform, and brave as a lion in advocating it, unmindful of results. This beautiful autumn day, with its golden hush, its softly falling leaves, its gentle melancholy, seems full of the memories of our brave leaders who have—not fallen, but been promoted. Who will take their places?

The historic spot in Gloucester, called Fisherman's Field, where the first permanent settlement was made after the landing of the Pilgrims, has passed into the hands of Cornelius Vanderbilt, who paid for it the snug sum of $100,000. Our few places of historic memory are priceless, and should be owned by the people. The apathy and lack of public spirit which will let them become private property is something worse than surprising.

The resolution in the Central Labor Union, requesting the managers of the Mechanic's Fair to keep it open on Sunday, was adopted well-nigh unanimously, only three votes being cast against it. This is a sad proof that the general trend among the laboring classes to-day is away from the Sabbath. Meanwhile what are our churches doing to stem the tide? Readers of the Cynosure may be interested in learning how Rev. C. A. Dinsmore, pastor of the Congregational church in Willimantic, Conn., proposes to keep the boys and young men within its fold. The Willimantic Chronicle gives an outline of his plan as presented in a sermon preached to his people, one or two Sundays ago. He starts out with the statement that both the home and the church are failures in the influencing and developing of our boys;—that the former "has not solved the problem of directing the boy's exuberant spirits in proper channels," and the latter "has never given him a fair chance to grow into Christian manhood." Statements so surprising as these are some slight preparation for what follows. He would have a "Boys' Brigade" started—a movement first begun in Glasgow, and introduced into this country by the way of San Francisco;—its object being "to promote Christ's kingdom among the boys, and train them in habits of reverence, self-respect and Christian manliness." A most worthy object truly, but the way in which it is to be attained is fully equal to Dr. Rainsford's scheme for promoting temperance by establishing church saloons.

"They are equipped" (I quote from the Chronicle) "in the uniform, and drilled in the tactics of the United States army. They have breech-loading Springfield rifles, and are as well furnished as the State militia. Every Sunday they march into the Bible class to receive religious instruction, and are under strict military discipline. Every boy pledges himself to attend the weekly drill and Bible class. If he is willfully absent two consecutive weeks, without reasonable excuse, he is dishonorably discharged from the company. Boys are appointed to the offices for proficiency in drill and in Bible lessons. Each boy furnishes his own uniform, costing about five dollars. If a boy is unable to do this, the church will provide him with one. The guns are owned by the church. Only boys who attend this church or who have no other church connection are admitted. Great care will be taken not to encroach on other denominations. With these qualifications the company is open to any boy between the ages of twelve and twenty-one. To buy the guns and provide for incidental expenses, we shall need two hundred and fifty dollars. Next Sunday we shall take a collection for this purpose, and we are confident you will contribute the amount needed."

The idea of training these boys in the service of the Prince of Peace by giving them military uniforms and Springfield rifles, and of passing round the contribution-box, not to get money to send Bibles to the heathen but to buy guns for Sunday-school scholars! I have not yet heard what response the church has made to its pastor's singular appeal; but if these Christian fathers and mothers can look upon it with the least degree of allowance we are surely in the last days, when the greatest punishment of a lukewarm Christianity is "that God shall send upon them strong delusion that they should believe a lie."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5, 1892.

Every one will agree, on general principles, that the local authorities of the national capital should set an example in dealing with the nefarious liquor traffic worthy of being followed by the authorities of other cities; but alas! every resident of Washington who is familiar with the facts knows that it is just the reverse; and those who have been engaged in temperance work here for any length of time can tell you of a long series of promises of "an improvement next year" made to them by the District Commissioners every year, and just as regularly broken when the time comes around for granting liquor licenses. It is highly creditable to the temperance people that they continue to work for a reduction of the number of bar-rooms just as though the many promises made to them had been kept. Last year, at the request of the temperance workers, every saloon-keeper was required to promise on his word of honor—personally, I do not believe it possible for a rum-seller to be possessed of even a spark of honor—not to sell liquor on Sunday before being granted a license, and was, in addition, told that if he violated his promise no license would be issued to him this year. The license year begins November 1, and it remains to be seen whether this promise, on the part of the District Commissioners, to refuse licenses to those who have violated the law against selling liquor on Sunday, is to be broken or to be kept. If the treatment of the saloon-keepers, large numbers of whom kept their places wide open on the Sunday preceding the opening of the National Encampment of the G. A. R., may be taken as an indication of the feelings of the authorities towards these law-breakers, the promises will be again broken. It was confidently expected that a number of cases would be made against the saloon-keepers who kept open on Sunday, but up to this time not half a dozen of them have been arrested, while there are known to be hundreds who were guilty. Some people say that our police authorities instructed the men not to arrest the saloon-keepers. Of that I cannot speak with authority. But some of the most courageous of the temperance people are at work gathering evidence against all of the saloon-keepers who have, during the present license year, sold liquor on Sunday, which they propose placing before the Commissioners with the demand that licenses for next year be refused to these law-breakers. Of course, they have no authority to enforce this demand, except that of public opinion, which, owing to the system of government of the District of Columbia, is not so powerful here as elsewhere.

The rum-sellers of Washington are directly responsible for the pitiable condition of a number of old soldiers who came here to attend the encampment, and who are still here unable to return to their homes, owing to their having become intoxicated, and while in that condition having lost or had stolen from them all of their money and their return tickets. A public appeal has been made for subscriptions to buy tickets to send these victims of the liquor fiend back to their homes. They are for the present being taken care of by one of the homes in this city.

The Secretary of the Treasury announced this week that the International Monetary Conference, which is regarded by eminent financiers as one of the most important commercial events of the time, would meet at Brussels on Tuesday, November 22.

Three important church legislative bodies are in session this week in Maryland, the Triennial Episcopal Convention, at Baltimore; the fall convention of the Washington City Presbytery, at Hyattsville; and the Annual Lutheran Synod of Maryland and the District of Columbia, at Frederick. A number of Washingtonians, ministers and laymen, are in attendance at each of these meetings.

Mrs. Harrison is not so well as she has been, and unless she gets better, President Harrison will give up his intended visit to New York to participate in the ceremonies connected with the Columbus celebration in that city next week.

Chief Justice Fuller and his family have returned to their Washington residence, preparatory to the opening of the fall session of the Supreme Court, on the 10th inst.

News received at the State and Navy Departments, from Hawaii, is causing some anxiety. Many officials fear that a revolution is impending in the little island-kingdom. Steps have been taken to protect American citizens and interests in case of trouble. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

WINCHESTER, Kansas, Oct. 6, 1892.

Last week I finished an interesting and, I trust, profitable tour of labor in Northern Kansas. I was laboring in Jewell, Republic, and Clay counties. I have already reported several of them; but I have not yet reported my visit to Talmo.

I addressed two fair audiences in the U. P. church five miles from Talmo on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, Sept. 21 and 22. My train was late getting to Talmo, and I did not get to the church until 9 o'clock. But under Friend Oscar Park's management, the audience had remained engaged in singing. They were just getting ready to leave as my friend and I drove up. They returned immediately to the house and listened to me for an hour, and voted to have me give another address on the next evening. I did so.

I enjoyed the kind hospitality of Bro. Oscar Park. I found in Bro. Park a staunch friend of every desirable Christian reform. Some opposition was awakened among our secret society brethren. But that was to be expected.

I went from there into the northern part of Jewell county. I preached Sabbath morning and evening to our U. P. brethren in their country church called Amity, three and a half miles west of North Branch, and lectured for them on Monday evening.

I found here an attentive and appreciative people. Danger threatens from the minor orders here. I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. Samuel Fairis and wife and Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Puntene. I was kindly received by all and gained something for the N. C. A.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings I lectured in the Academy, in the town of North Branch. This Academy is under the direction of our good people the Friends. Prof. Townsend, with able assistants, has charge of the work. I have been thrown among our Quaker brethren but little, and I must express, very emphatically, my appreciation of the kind treatment I received at their hands in every way, and the hearty response to the truth as I presented it.

I shall not forget the kind favors I received from Bro. Dillon and his wife and family. The Lord reward them.

On both these evenings I met a full house of interesting people. I was glad to be given the opportunity to address so many young people. The students turned out, and many other young persons were present. I distributed literature, and gained some help for the N. C. A.

I am trying to sow beside all waters. At three o'clock next morning, Friend Asa Dillon brought me across to Burr Oak, ten miles across the country, to take the 6:30 train for Clifton.

On Thursday and Friday evenings, Sept. 29 and 30, I lectured in the U. B. church, seven miles north of Clifton. We had two profitable meetings. A number of our U. B. friends were then on their way home, by wagon, from their yearly conference at Lecompton. They arranged to be at Roscoe church for the lecture on Thursday evening. We had two good meetings. After the meeting several secret society men or sympathizers sought to create a diversion and call attention away from the main issues, by talking about the benefits of Masonry. The U. B. church is now divided upon this question. That is, the church is now irrevocably divided into two parties, and because of this question. The liberals

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DEATH OF BRO. ZEPHANIAH GRAVES.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 6, 1892.

"LIFT ME HIGHER," were the last words of Bro. Zephaniah Graves, of Rehoboth, Mass., before he fell asleep, on Saturday last, to awake in "the morning of the resurrection."

There were anxious weeping ones about him, but there was "no night there;" only the dawn of a brighter day, which he greeted with a smile, as the attending angels, in answer to his last request, "carried him into Abraham's bosom."

Neighbors and friends gathered on the 5th inst. to "weep with those who wept;" and after a quiet service at the old home, they "took up" his body as the disciples took up John's body, and buried it in the churchyard, there to await the call of Him who is "the resurrection and the life."

Bro. Graves' record is best given by himself, in a letter to the pastor and members of the church to which he belonged. It was dictated by him just one week before his departure, when he was too weak to use the pen himself:

To the Pastor and Members of Stewart Street Baptist Church, Greeting:

BELoved IN CHRIST:—Believing "the time of my departure at hand," I am impressed to send you a brief and parting message, praying that some soul may find comfort, strength and help in the testimony and experience of one who feels that he is near the appointed end and the judgment so soon to follow.

It has pleased our heavenly Father to chasten me sore, but he has given grace to bow submissively and say, Let Him do what seemeth good; "Thy will be done." "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in him."

I was deeply impressed with a sense of God's presence and love when a child. My mother commended me to God's care when an infant, and left for her heavenly home when I was only four months old. Her faith prevailed, and her prayers have been answered, for truly God has led me in "a way that I had not known."

Knowing that I was a sinner, and feeling the need of a Saviour, I used often to go away alone in some secluded place and there kneel before God in prayer; and I cannot recall a time when I found any pleasure in the companionship of the immoral or profane. When about seventeen years of age, I received the witness of the Spirit that I was a child of God, to the exceeding joy of my soul.

On the sixth day of June, 1858, I "confessed Christ before men," and publicly entered into covenant relations with his people in Stewart Street Baptist church, where my membership remains to the present.

I am conscious of many shortcomings, and I am profoundly grateful to God for his long-suffering and tender mercies, and to my brethren for their counsels, admonitions, and watch-care in the more than thirty-four years in which I have been numbered among the "little flock," and regret, most of all, that I have not done more and better service for the Master.

Owing to poor health and other causes, I have only met with you occasionally for worship during the last four or five years; but I have not forsaken the Lord's house or his people, nor have I withheld my substance and testimony in maintaining the blessed Gospel of the Son of God, which is now, as it has long been, my chief comfort and support. "I know in whom I have believed," and, whether living or dying, I am the Lord's alone, and I shall soon see him face to face and "know even as I am known." I have encountered storms, but never have I suffered shipwreck since I embarked with the "Captain of my salvation." When it has been very tempestuous round about, my anchor has held in the "sure word of promise," "all things work together for good to them that love God." "The eyes of my understanding" were opened by the Holy Spirit to see the wicked abominations of American slavery, and I stood in the ranks of the despised and persecuted Abolitionists when the church and the nation joined hands with that "sum of all villainies." The ravages of intemperance and the terrible havoc made by the curse of "strong drink" fills me now, as it has for years, with horror, and I could only keep a conscience void of offence toward God and man by giving my voice, my influence and my vote for its total abolition.

I cannot recall the time when I was not opposed to secret organizations; and when I became a Christian my earlier impressions deepened into the most radical conviction that they were from beneath, and not from above. I have carefully studied the system as explained by its most distinguished advocates and authors, and after comparing it with God's Word, and its teachings and practices with the teachings and life of Christ and his apostles, I am fully persuaded that it is a device of the evil one to rob Christ and his bride, the church, of men, of means, of talent, time and effort that is sorely needed in "spreading Gospel holiness over all lands."

While admitting that many upright men of honorable intentions have been drawn into these secret nets, I can but hold the system itself in abhorrence as an enemy of the state, the family, the church, and the progress and highest attainments of the human race. For holding and advocating views aversive to these and other popular evils, I have at times suffered the censure of brethren and been branded as a disturber of the community and the peace of Zion; but I can say truly that I harbor no ill-will towards any one, and I shall finish my record and go to my final account without a feeling of bitterness or hatred toward a single human being.

Looking back from the very threshold of eternity, my regret is, not that I have been true to my convictions, but rather that I have not been more faithful, and more persistently insisted that the "body of Christ" should have no fellowship with the "unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." It is my earnest desire that my own dear children and my beloved brethren and sisters in Christ who survive me may be more faithful in opposing popular sins than I have been, and more diligent in keeping my Master's bride "unspotted from the world."

To the Judge of all the earth, and to his grace do I commend you in love, intrusting my companion and children to Him who has never forsaken the widow and the fatherless. I bid adieu to the things that are seen and temporal, and go, at the Master's call, to join that company who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Beloved in Christ, farewell until we meet beyond the river.

An orphan and homeless boy, yet never without friends, the early life of Bro. Graves was a constant struggle, under serious difficulties, but undaunted, he toiled on until his efforts were rewarded with a competency which he won with the reputation of being a thoroughly honest man. That which he gained he consecrated to Christ in the maintenance of his household and the promotion of his principles.

His companion and four surviving children did everything possible in watching and waiting and ministering to his every want during his weeks of painful sickness, and fully shared his views and seconded his efforts on all questions of reform. May they receive richly the blessing promised to the "widow and the fatherless," until each shall hear, as their beloved has heard, the "well-done," "it is enough;" "Come up higher."
JAMES P. STODDARD.

RIFLES AS A MEANS OF GRACE.

OBERLIN, Ohio, Oct. 1, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In a recent number of the Willimantic (Conn.) Chronicle was an abstract of a sermon by the pastor of the Congregational church of that city, on "Boys' Brigades," a part of which is as follows:

"They are equipped in the uniform and drilled in the tactics of the United States Army. They have breech-loading Springfield rifles and are as well furnished as the State militia. Every Sunday they march into their Bible class to receive religious instruction and are under strict military discipline. Every boy pledges himself to attend the weekly drill and Bible class. If he is willfully absent two consecutive weeks without reasonable excuse, he is dishonorably discharged from the company. Boys are appointed to the offices for proficiency in drill and in Bible lessons. Each boy furnishes his own uniform, costing about five dollars. If a boy is unable to do this, the church will provide him one. The guns are owned by the church. Only boys who attend this church or who have no other church connection are admitted. Great care will be taken not to encroach upon other denominations. With these qualifications the company is open to any boy between the ages of 12 and 21. To buy the guns and provide for incidental expenses we shall need two hundred and fifty dollars. Next Sunday we shall take a collection for this purpose and we are confident you will contribute the amount needed."

This is not peculiar to Willimantic, but like innovations are found elsewhere. Even in Oberlin they have a boys' brigade, duly armed and drilled. Possibly they do not drill on the Lord's day.

There are serious objections to all such performances:

1. They present an unworthy motive as a reason for attending divine worship and the study of the Bible. All persons should be taught that attendance on public worship and Bible study is both a duty and a privilege. The character of the worship and the worshipers ought to be such as to make it attractive in the best sense of the word. At least, it ought to impress its importance on all as something to be loved and valued for its own sake. Boys that are hired to go to Sunday-school, or who go there for military drill and the chance of promotion to a military office, may possibly learn something useful, but they are quite sure to get false notions of the nature of Christian worship, and to regard it as a grand frolic or a farce.

2. I object, because it is "doing evil that good may come." It was once thought necessary that all able-bodied citizens should be armed and drilled; but it was found that this was not only entirely useless but promotive of violence and drunkenness. It was wisely put away about half a century ago. We cannot afford to repeat the experiment on our boys.

3. I object, because it is an un-Christian method of keeping the Lord's day. If our Christian Sabbath is to be kept according to the spirit of the Fourth Commandment; if each ought to refrain "from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and shalt honor him, not doing thine own way, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words" (Isaiah 58:13), then surely we ought not to engage in military drill or parades, nor to teach others to do so. United States military drill, with breech-loading rifles, is not a good way to keep the Sabbath.

4. The proposed investment of the church in breech-loading Springfield rifles, is quite out of harmony with the spirit of the Gospel. Christ is the Prince of Peace. He nowhere countenanced the use of carnal weapons. He said to Peter: "Put up thy sword. They that take the sword shall perish by the sword."

Some years ago, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, purchased a lot of Sharp's rifles and shipped them to Kansas, to be used in the border war. It did not commend the cause of Christ, nor tend to promote peace to Kansas or to the nation. Churches now have less excuse than they had then.

5. I object, mainly, because it will foster the spirit and practice of war, and tend to cheapen human life. When boys of twelve years old are taught to value military drill and associate the use of breech-loading rifles with religion, we may be quite sure that they will grow up to be lovers of war, and ready on any occasion to engage in it.

Considering that under some possible circumstances war may be justified (and this is more than I would concede), still the spirit and practice of war are the curse of the world. The Christian nations are groaning under war taxes and standing armies, and filled with fear of the opening of the dreadful drama of crime and blood. We cannot afford to countenance the war spirit. It is bad enough when secular societies, such as Patriarchs Militant and Knights of Pythias, have arms and military drills over which the government has no control; but when boys are taken into the church to be drilled in the use of murderous instruments, then such a church becomes a corrupter of youth and an enemy of Christ.

GEO. W. CLARK'S LETTER.

(Concluded from last week.)

* 76 WEST MONTCALM STREET, }
DETROIT, Mich., Sept., 1892. }

Before I close this letter, permit me to suggest that you seem still as thoroughly devoted to and "stuck" in the meshes of the Republican party, as in the folds of the Masonic fraternity. Why should you be? These organizations have long since ceased to be means to the ends designed, or to any great, useful and ennobling end—the Masons to perfect and protect their trade—their craft; the Republicans to secure and protect the Territories from slavery and to secure just and righteous laws! Now the parties have become the end, the objective point of their efforts and displays, and their coxcombry shows seem made to secure power and supremacy for our "fraternities," "our party." Not for what they can do for humanity, for their country; not for just laws and a righteous administration of the government; not for the prohibition of the great liquor curse; not for the preservation of the sacred Sabbath; nor for any great reform—or for the glory of God; but for selfish and mercenary purposes—for "the loaves and the fishes." There is no great moral, civic or political issue between the old political parties to-day,—"six of one, and half a dozen of the other." One prates "Tariff for protection;" the other prates "Tariff for revenue." Both prate "tariff reform;" but both alike bow the knee and do homage to Baal! Both seem irredeemably sold out—body, soul and breeches—to the liquor power! In two things, however, they seem agreed. One is, to license the pauper, crime and misery-breeding, home-destroying and Sabbath-desecrating saloons all over the country. In this crime of crimes they are one. They also agree in the tremendous, the herculean struggle in which they will spend millions of words and millions of money; viz., the ins to stay there, and the outs to get there. Momentous issues!

Your superlative praise of the Republican party seems to me to be extremely fulsome! Not even in ante-bellum days did it ever go for the abolition of slavery, but simply for its "non-extension," and opposed the Abolitionists. Now it does not even go for the non-extension of the greater curse than was ever chattel slavery—the liquor traffic, but fights the protectionists, and actually legalizes and protects the liquor crime, and is, therefore, a particeps criminis in its most atrocious crimes and miseries. For the good the Republican party did do, even in opposing the extension of slavery and in aiding the suppression of the slaveholders rebellion—I supported it. But for the bad it now does—and the good it refuses to do—I disown, abandon and condemn it. Not for what it once was, but for what it now is. There was once a good loyal angel, but he fell from grace, rebelled, and became a devil. It doesn't answer to tell us what a good angel he once was, and how much good he once did; and that he was the brightest and best angel in all the heavens. He is a devil now, and I can't support him. As the old Whig party was corrupted and yielded to the slave power, and so lost the confidence and support of the moral sense, the anti-slavery and the Christian sentiments of the country, and consequently went down, and out, so the Republican party, corrupted by the liquor interest, dominated by its gross and unhallowed demands, and pandering to the base and devilish saloon element, invites, and deserves, and is in a sure way (unless it repents) of inheriting the doom of its "illustrious predecessor," the old Whig party!

The fruit trees in my old orchard, once flourishing and productive of choice fruit, have become worm-eaten and rotten, and ceased to bear good fruit. I cannot live on its rotten or its by-gone productions. I must rear a new orchard of young, vigorous, good fruit-bearing trees, and in due time I "shall reap if I faint not." Come, my cousin, and help us rear this new orchard. Don't eat rotten fruit any longer. Come and help us, that we and our country may taste and realize the golden fruits of prohibition. Thy loving cousin,

LITERATURE.

We had occasion, in this department, in the Cynosure of Sept. 22, to call especial attention to the character of the anti-Romanist tracts published by the Arnold Publishing Association at Boston, Mass., and the object of their publication. In addition to what was then said in reference to these tracts, we are enabled to make the following offer by the publishers in their desire to give a wider circulation to the series of booklets above mentioned. They consist of twelve patriotic addresses on vital topics raised by the Roman hierarchy, bearing the following titles: 1. National Danger in Romanism; or, Religion and the Nation. 2. Columbus and the Discovery of America; or, Papal Claims and Historic Fact. 3. English Protestantism and Spanish Romanism on the Western Continent Contrasted. 4. Despotism in Church and State the Principle of Romanism. 5. Rome's Despotism Intolerance of Free Opinion. 6. The Inquisition an Essential Part of Papal Power. 7. Persecution and Property: Rome's "Death to Heretics," and her Purposes of Plunder. 8. Papal Greed of Money and Vast Accumulations of Wealth. 9. Governments Compelled to Confiscate the Property Seized by the Papal Church. 10. The Taxation of Church Property as a check upon Ecclesiasticism. 11. Church and State: Their True Relations. 12. Rome's Avowed Purpose to Control the State. Her Success in Great Cities. The ordinary price of these tracts is ten cents each, but any reader of the Cynosure who will send a silver dime to the Arnold Publishing Association, Boston, Mass., will receive any three numbers desired. This is a very liberal offer. For those who wish to obtain other purchasers of these tracts, especially among Roman Catholics, the publishers will send necessary blanks and special copies of three tracts entitled: "The Parochial School," an open letter to Bishop Keane, by an Irish Catholic layman; "The Public Schools," by Father McGlynn, and "The Pope in Politics," by the same. These three are to be used in canvassing both Protestants and Catholics, to bring them to that knowledge of great truths of which this country now stands in need.

The October issue of the Century closes an exceptionally fine volume of this favorite magazine. W. J. Stillman concludes his excellent series of "Italian Old Masters," with a sketch and full-page copy of Correggio and his celebrated "Madonna and Child." The Chosen Valley, by Mary Hallock Foote; A Mountain Europa, by John Fox, Jr.; Nature and Elements of Poetry (The Faculty Divine), by E. C. Stedman, and The Chatelaine of La Trinity, by Henry B. Fuller, most illustrated, are also concluded. Continuations, with engravings, are given of Pioneer Packhorses in Alaska, by E. J. Glave; Architecture at the World's Columbian Exposition, by Henry Van Brunt, and Christopher Columbus, by Emilio Castelar. Other papers and authors are as follows: The Lotto Portrait of Columbus (with a full-page copy), by John C. Van Dyke; What I saw of the Paris Commune, by Archibald Forbes, with his portrait; The Whist-players, by Mary E. Wilkins; Dare-the-Wind, by Alice W. Brotherton; Picturesque Plant-Life of California, illustrated, by Chas. H. Shinn; The Man with a Violin (Portrait of T. Cole), by Wyatt Eaton; Doggett's last Migration, illustrated, by Hayden Carruth; "For Bravery on the Field of Battle," by T. B. Aldrich; Pavement Pictures, by Edgar Fawcett; Poet and Lark, by Mary A. De Vere; Thalassa, by W. J. Henderson; The Village Alien, by Viola Roseboro; Kensal Green, by A. W. Drake, and Money in Practical Politics, by Jeremiah W. Jenks. The editorial departments are replete with varied and pleasant topics. New York: The Century Co.

"Im Netz der Loge" (In the Net of the Lodge), is the title of a 'story from life,' written by Rev. G. Berner, pastor of the Evangelical Friedens (Peace) church, Buffalo, N. Y. It is an interesting narrative of a young German joiner, who leaves his home in Wurtemberg to seek his fortune in America. He lands in New York, and finds work and a home, but, unfortunately, does not find a church home, and forgets the pious counsels of his parents and pastor. He joins a singing club, where singing and drinking beer are practiced with equal zeal. After a time he goes to Baltimore, where he is inveigled into the Odd-fellow and Masonic orders, and becomes thoroughly alienated from the church. The death of a beloved child finally arrests him in his course, and the prayers and exhortations of a loving wife and faithful pastor bring him back to his Saviour and God. The anti-Christian character of the lodge is clearly shown by quotations from their rituals, and in other ways. Incidentally, other evils, in and out of the church, are re-proved. The book will do good wherever it is read. It can be secured from the Pilger-Buchhandlung, Reading, Penn., at $1 a copy.

The Review of Reviews for October contains a group of articles under the generic title, "Religious Co operation, Local, National and International," which includes eight brief papers: one by Dr. Strong, of the Evangelical Alliance, on Co-operation in Practical Church Work; Rev. Dr. Dana on Competition in Home Missions; Dr. Washington Gladden on the Municipal Idea of the Church; Rev. Hugh Price Hughes on National Christianity; Count D'Alviella on the World's Parliament of Religions at Chicago; one summing up the progress or the "Civic Centre" movement in England; one describing the progress of the "Brotherhood of Christian Unity" movement in America; and, finally, one reviewing the recent English religious conferences on the reunion of churches, held at Grindelwald in Switzerland. Numerous portraits accompany these articles. Taken as a whole, they show in a most remarkable way how strongly the movement is setting in toward a minimizing of denominational disagreements and the growth of broad Christian co-operation.

Readers of the Cottage Hearth for October will find it a very acceptable number in all respects. Columbus literature is given timely space and possesses interest. The list of contents, mostly illustrated articles, include Columbus and His True Greatness; Second Class Travel in America; Columbus Day, and How to Celebrate It; Will A. Dromgoole, with portrait; The World's Progress; The Vagabonds, by Miss Dromgoole; Cecilia's Mistake; Massacio; Memories of Como, and the usual Sabbath, Home Dress-making, Domestic Science, Household Chats, Girls and their Doings, and Home Garden departments, etc., will well repay perusal. Boston: W. A. Wilde & Co. $1.50 per annum.

The American Legion of Honor has declared its second dividend. It divided $164,000 among 47,000 members—those who had been members five years or over. It amounted to about two assessments for each person. This society has a guarantee fund of half a million.

Some wise man writing in the interest of endowment societies wants two insurance commissioners appointed in each State. He thinks that one man cannot do justice to the old line companies and fraternal societies. As far as the Knights of Honor is concerned we do not care how many insurance commissioners are appointed, provided they are honest men. Any society that conducts its business in a straightforward legal manner need not fear insurance commissioners.—K. of H. Reporter.

In connection with the celebration of the nineteenth anniversary of the order in Louisville, Ky., a pamphlet was issued containing the names of members in that city who have died, the amount they paid in and the amount of benefits received by their families. The list contained 615 names, and the benefits paid amounted to $1,228,525.05. With such an exhibition the order ought to increase its membership in Louisville.—Ibid.

It is very often said by the member who probably attends two or three times a year, that the lodge is run by a ring or clique. The "clique" are those members who attend every meeting, are there when the meeting opens and remain until it closes, do committee work, fill the offices, and visit the sick, and do what they conscientiously think is for the welfare of their lodge in particular and the order in general. Now, who is the growler? He is the member who comes to the meeting when he doesn't know where else to go, or comes to see an acquaintance have the rank conferred on him, and as soon as the rank work is completed they retire.—The Artisan.

An exchange says that the committee appointed by the mayor of New Orleans to investigate the Mafia and similar organizations have brought to light some startling facts. Before Chief of Police Hennessey was murdered, evidence was traced of ninety-four assassinations by Sicilians or Italians, which went unpunished because of the secrecy which accompanied each act. They found the Mafia had gained a strong foothold, and terrorized the Italian population of the city, levying tribute at pleasure under the threat of death. They had even attempted to poison the Italian consul. Several remedies were proposed by the committee, the most radical of which was the absolute exclusion in future of Sicilians and Southern Italians—classifying them with Chinese as an undesirable and prohibited class.

CYNOSURE PREMIUM LIST.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET & BROWN'S COMMENTARY.

We present this work to our Christian readers with the conviction that it will be welcomed as a most valuable addition to the Biblical literature of the day, and will be found to possess

ADVANTAGES OVER ANY OTHER SIMILAR WORK, IN THE FOLLOWING IMPORTANT PARTICULARS:

1st. Its Thoroughness. This Commentary is not written by one writer only, as is the case with Clark, Henry, Scott, and others, but by three of the ablest scholars of the present day, and these have quoted extensively from the works of no less than one hundred and fifty of the most eminent Biblical writers of the present and the past.

2d. Its Modernness. New light is continually being thrown upon the Scriptures by the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shone, by investigation in science, the expository labors of scholars and critics, and the discovery and deciphering of ancient inscriptions, monuments, and manuscripts, thus rendering the commentaries of former days comparatively useless.

3d. Its Compactness. The text and the comments are not printed in separate parts, as is usually the case, but are intermingled, so as to form one continuous history. There are no blank spaces, nor is the book filled up with unnecessary portions of the text. It is what it purports to be—a Commentary—not a Bible. "It is literally packed," says Bishop Wiley, "full of good things."

4th. Its Brevity. Dr. Smith, editor Chicago Standard, says: "I have, in several instances, seen a sermon in a sentence."

5th. Its Liberal Spirit. It is more unsectarian than any other Commentary. "The names of the authors are a sufficient guaranty against any denominational traits in it." These authors are each of a different denomination. The hearty recommendation of the leading men of all denominations gives this still greater emphasis.

6th. Its Scripture References. These are more numerous than will be found in any Commentary extant. Parallel passages are given wherever they are needed. Scripture is thus explained by Scripture, and the Commentary will thus be found to answer the purpose of a Concordance to a very great extent.

7th. Its Illustrations and Maps. These are sufficiently numerous to decidedly enhance its value and attractiveness; while the great majority of Commentaries have no illustrations.

8th. Its Cheapness. No Commentary of its size and merit was ever sold for anything like the price.

TESTIMONIALS.

Rev. Joseph F. Tuttle, D. D., President Wabash College.

It is a noble work that ought to be placed on a hundred thousand shelves in this country.

Rev. Stuart Robinson, D. D., Louisville, Kentucky.

Having for more than twenty years been myself engaged in the popular exposition of the Scriptures from the pulpit, every Sabbath evening—and, of course, availing myself of all the aids within my reach—I have met with none among them which so well accomplishes the great end of a popular exposition—viz.: to show the people, in the fewest words, how to read the Bible for themselves—as the very comprehensive Commentary of Jamieson, Fausset & Brown.

Rev. James B. Angell, D. D., LL. D., Pres. Univ. of Mich.

I am acquainted with no Commentary of such conciseness which is so likely to prove satisfactory and helpful to American Christians.

Prof. Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D. Pres. Dartmouth College.

An admirable companion for the Sabbath-school teacher, for heads of families, and for daily readers of the Bible and inferior to no work of the kind and compass with which I am acquainted.

The present edition of this excellent work deserves, and undoubtedly will receive, a large circulation among families and students of the Scriptures who wish to learn what God has revealed and taught. Aside from the Bible itself, they can go to no better source of instruction.—Interior, Chicago.

The unqualified commendations of this Commentary, from the highest sources, together with its already extensive and rapidly increasing sale, have given it a position in the religious world superior to that of any similar work, and prove conclusively that it will soon be universally adopted by Sabbath-school teachers and Bible readers generally, to whom its uses has now become indispensable.

Address, NAT'L CHRISTIAN ASS'N.,
221 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill

CHARLES P. SUMNER, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1892.

Fidelity to God, and to the souls of men, requires that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.—CHAS. G. FINNEY.

MISSIONS AND MASONRY.

We have a letter from a ministerial friend in California, who not long since preached a sermon to his people on the subject of Freemasonry, seeking to keep the young men of his congregation out of that and other similar secret orders. Not long after he preached this sermon, an Associational meeting was held in his town, at which Rev. H. D. Wiard, who now represents the American Home Missionary Society, was present. In the congregation of our brother there was a certain family in which there were three grown sons who had been influenced by the sermon of their pastor, so that they had declared their purpose never to unite with the Masonic lodge. Bro. Wiard, in this family, took pains to deny the statements made by the pastor of these young people, and apparently sought to influence them in favor of Freemasonry. He is reported to have said, First: That the Masons themselves do not regard their oaths as binding. Second: That the Masonry of Finney, as declared in his book, is not the Masonry of to-day. Third: That he had taken the Royal Arch degree, and that the Royal Arch Mason does not swear to keep the secrets of a companion, "murder and treason not excepted."

Respecting these statements, we have to say: First: That if Bro. Wiard, whom we knew years ago, and loved much as a Christian brother, is on the Pacific coast for the purpose of persuading young men to unite with the Masonic lodge, he ought to draw his salary from the Masons and not from the members of Congregational churches. There are plenty of Masons in California to pay for such service. The male membership of our churches is small already, and will be still further diminished if the lodges increase, so that it is entirely unjust to tax them to support Masonic propagandists. Second: If Bro. Wiard's statement is true, that the Masons themselves do not regard their oaths as binding, it certainly is little to the credit of the Masons that they adhere to an order the oaths of which they disavow. Of course the fact is, that some good Masons do not consider their oaths binding, but that the great mass of the lodge-men do. The second statement, that the Masonry of Finney is not the Masonry of to-day, is simple falsehood. Of course, we are depending on information; possibly Bro. Wiard did not say this. If he did, he either never read Finney or has never been initiated in a lawful lodge, or he said what he knew was untrue. We do not doubt that there are certain unimportant modifications in phrasing. We know that multitudes of masters of lodges are so ignorant that they cannot repeat the ritual of the lodge with accuracy; but that the Masonry of Finney is the essential Masonry of to-day every honest Mason knows, and no honest Mason denies. Third: His statement that the words "murder and treason not excepted" are not in the Royal Arch obligation, may be true so far as his knowledge is concerned. The obligation is administered sometimes with the words as above stated, "murder and treason not excepted," and sometimes the words are: "I will keep all the secrets of a companion Royal Arch Mason;" sometimes they are: "I will keep all the secrets of a companion Royal Arch Mason without exception." The substance of the oath is the same in any case. The purpose of the oath is evident.

We commend this report from California to the attention of the officers of the Home Missionary Society. Of course, where local churches choose to support professed ministers of Jesus Christ who are connected with the Christless, religious organization known as Freemasonry, we cannot help it. The local churches are free, and if they choose to pay men for attending Masonic lodges and coaxing young men to join Masonic organizations, that is a matter for which they are responsible. But no mission society has any right to use the funds of Christian churches in the support of men who feel free to perform such service. As intimated above, we write on information received. Possibly an injustice has been done Bro. Wiard in this report. We sincerely trust that it is so; and if further information is received respecting this matter, it will be fully laid before our readers. Our columns are open to our brother himself or any of his friends.

THE "A. P. A."

The Catholic Review thus pays its respects to the secret anti-Catholic organization called the "American Protective Association": "Its branches are everywhere. Its members are active, aggressive, persistent and unscrupulous. Where they cannot find a fact to allege against us, they fabricate a falsehood or utter a forgery. They have sworn to vote against every Catholic candidate for public office, regardless of party, and against every Protestant who is friendly toward us. They will boycott us in business. They will injure us in every possible way. Their foremost leaders are Protestant ministers who appear to be working in the interests of one of the political parties, and expect to carry Missouri and other States on the Know-Nothing issue. They are preparing for a conflict with us and predicting that the next war in this country will be between the Catholics and the Protestants. There will be no such war, but we may have to suffer much from this latest of religious persecutions before our fellow citizens put down the A. P. A."

Rebold's "History of Freemasonry in Europe"—a standard Masonic authority—page 152, makes this statement: "The Catholic clergy of Spain exhibited themselves at a very early period the bitter enemy of Freemasonry. The better to enable them to discover the members of the fraternity, and the secret practices and doctrines of the institution, the monk of Joseph Torrubia, censor of the holy office of the Inquisition at Madrid, was ordered, in 1750, to assume a false name, pass himself as a layman, and be initiated into a Masonic lodge. For this purpose he received from the Pope's legate the dispensations necessary to relieve him from the obligations of the oaths he should have to take upon being made a Freemason."

Among intelligent anti-secretists, it is understood that the Roman Catholic church is to-day, through latent espionage and the confessional, in full possession of all the rituals and operations of the A. P. A., as well as of the Masonic fraternity. Thus forewarned, the church will be forearmed. Hence "there will be no such war." The church is very crafty, and strategy, with it, is better than conflict. The plea of "persecution" is an ecclesiastical hoodwink.

MASONRY AS A LAW UNTO ITSELF.

"Bro." Josiah H. Drummond, Chairman of Maine's Committee on Ancient Craft Masonry, explicitly lays down the law of Masonry, in these terms: "Masons, and those intending to be Masons, should understand that THE LAW OF THE GRAND LODGE IS THE LAW OF MASONRY, and that if they cannot obey that law, whether it seems to them right or wrong, reasonable or unreasonable, they had better get out of the institution as soon as possible, as they certainly do not belong in it." He should have added, what has long been known and is ever manifest to every investigator of Freemasonry, as exposed by members of that fraternity, that the law of the Grand Lodge is inimical to all the civil institutions of our country, simply because it is the law of Masonry. Take the following clause from the obligation of a Master Mason: "I promise and swear that I will vote for a brother or companion Mason, and promote his election to office, in preference to any other candidate of equal qualifications." Then take this part of the Royal Arch Mason's oath: "I furthermore promise and swear that I will keep all the secrets of a companion Royal Arch Mason, when communicated to me as such, without exception." Sometimes the phraseology is changed, but it always covers, or comprehends, murder and treason; sometimes it is expressed "murder and treason not excepted." In another clause of the same obligation the candidate is sworn to "assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, when engaged in any difficulty, and will espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, whether he be right or wrong." This oath he takes after having pledged himself to "stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of any chapter of Royal Arch Masons of which I may become a member; the constitution and laws of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter under whose jurisdiction the same may work; together with the constitution, laws and edicts of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States of America, so far as they shall come to my knowledge." The inference to be drawn from Drummond's decision, in connection with these obligations, is, that when the Grand Lodge and the General Grand Chapter unite to overthrow the Constitution and civil government, including all the horrors of murder and treason, every loyal member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter must obey them, "without mental reservation or evasion of any kind." It is well to have these conclusions widely and distinctly understood. The laws of Masonry not only promote assassination but high treason.

COLUMBUS-DAY AND THE SCHOOLS.

The National Educational Association, assisted by the G. A. R., have prepared a program for a general celebration by all the school children of the United States in honor of the landing of Columbus. The event will form an auxiliary to the dedication ceremonies of the Columbian Exposition on the 21st of October.

The principal features of the occasion, as outlined by those in charge of the school celebration, are as follows:

The schools everywhere are to assemble at the usual hour on the morning of October 21. A detail of veterans is expected to arrive soon after, and all will repair to the yard. The exercises will begin with reading of the proclamation. Then the flag will be raised by the veterans, and saluted by all pupils in a brief exercise, terminating in the song "My Country 'tis of Thee." After divine acknowledgments, the Song of Columbus Day, an original hymn for the occasion and set to the old tune of "Lyons," will be sung by all. Following, will be a declamation of the Address for Columbus Day, and a reading of the Ode for Columbus Day, both original productions for the occasion.

Opportunity will then be given for whatever additional features local enterprise may provide; and the morning observance will end with short addresses by citizens, and national songs.

For the afternoon a Public School Review is suggested; or, if there is a civic parade, it is urged that the schools, escorted by the veterans, be made the prominent feature. In the mass meeting of citizens, with which many places will conclude the day, it is proposed that among the speeches ample recognition be given to the American system of free, universal education as a source of American progress and the hope of the future.

SUNDAY AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The unprincipled secular press of Chicago and other cities, encouraged by the multitudes of persons who have no respect for the Lord or his day, including the saloon interests of the World's Fair city, are moving to the extent of their power to abrogate and set aside the provision of Congress that the gates of the Columbian Exposition must be closed on Sunday. So strong are their efforts in this unhallowed scheme that every Christian and lover of the Christian Sabbath is under obligations to watch and pray continually against it. The design of the enemies of the Sabbath is to influence Congress to rescind its former action, and to coerce, if possible, the managers of the Fair into submission to their will. We trust there will be no compromises on the part of the Christians of the Union, under any circumstances.

The question of closing or opening the Exposition on Sunday rests with the National Commission. If, in defiance of the Congressional provision, for which the Fair is to receive $2,500,000, equivalent now to double that sum, they shall decide to open its gates on the Christian Sabbath, their position in the eyes of all God-fearing persons will be treason alike to God and the government—a position so despicable and surprising that it will redound to their everlasting disgrace.

Petitions against such a dastardly decision should be signed by all who respect the Sabbath, and sent promptly to the Commission, which is to meet in Chicago on the 18th of October. Let us have our rest-day piously honored.

—Rev. Sam'l F. Porter, the College agent, preached on Sabbath, October 2, at Grafton, North Dakota, and expects to attend the National Council of the Congregationalists at Minneapolis, Minn., on his way South.

—Rev. Dr. Meloy, of the First U. P. Church in this city, returned a few days since from a three-months' tour in Europe. The journey was pleasant and profitable, but even more so seem the pastoral duties which he again takes up.

—The Chicago Secular Union having challenged the State Sabbath Association to debate the Sabbath question with one of their champions, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, at the request of the Association, accepted the gage of battle.

—President Lowe, of Columbia College, New York, recently made a requisition upon the city police department for officers to prevent sophomores interfering with freshmen when assembled for entrance examination. He intends to break up "rushing" and all the ordinary unmanly forms of hazing. The example is worthy of a wide following.

—Heresy trials are among the events of the times. That of Dr. Briggs will occupy the deliberations of the New York Presbytery, and on the 5th instant the Cincinnati Presbytery began consideration of the case of Rev. Henry P. Smith, of Lane Seminary, for a similar offence. The results, rather than the dull details of these investigations, will interest the average reader. It is the individual, not the truth, who is on trial.

—Rev. E. D. Bailey, a reformer well-known to Cynosure readers, residing at Washington, D. C., where he has for many years been actively engaged in mission work, we regret to learn, is at present suffering from physical prostration resulting from overwork in his vocation. We trust, however, that this affliction is only temporary and that, having the prayers and sympathy of all our readers, he may soon be restored to health and usefulness.

—Rev. B. H. Cartwright, of Oregon, Ill., is a cousin, not a brother, as we are now told, of the famous Peter Cartwright of early Methodism in the West. A year and a half ago the Cynosure published an account of a great debate in the Rock River M. E. Conference on secret societies, in which Barton Cartwright was a leader. He is now 82 years old. Last Wednesday he attended the Conference at Sterling, Ill., and told of founding the first Methodist church in that city.

—F. W. Somerby, the chief manipulator of the notorious "Iron Hall" fiasco, who is charged with being responsible for the wrecking of that fraternal order, was in Chicago, last week, with a plan by which the membership of that institution "will be enabled to recover the face value of certificates." He also stated that he could clear himself of all blame for the disasters of the order and place the responsibility where it belongs. The order is to be revived, if possible.

—Rev. L. N. Stratton, of Waukegan, Ill., formerly for years the well-known editor of the American Wesleyan, has just returned from a trip to Europe. When he landed in Paris, a good Providence threw him against Rev. G. H. Gregorian, an Armenian brother, who was educated at Wheaton, and who has for several years been laboring among his own people at Yozgat, Asia Minor. The two renewed old acquaintance, and were several weeks together as brethren in travel as well as in Christ. Bro. Stratton is now removing to South Haven, Mich.

—Miss Frances E. Willard has issued a long circular letter, asking every interested or disinterested person to send a dollar to Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Chicago, to be applied toward the purchase of stock in the Woman's Temple, which stock is now held by outside parties. With the entire stock at its disposal, the Union would have, not only adequate housing for its benevolent enterprises, but a handsome income with which to extend the work. The request is so reasonable, and the individual amount named so small, that it should meet with a prompt and cheerful response.

—The West Kansas Conference of the Free Methodist church has recently had the "woman question" prominently under discussion. The quarterly conference of the Macksville district refused to renew the license of Maggie Cook, on the ground of its being illegal to grant a local preacher's license to a woman. An appeal was made to the annual conference, when General Superintendent B. T. Roberts ruled that "sex in itself is not, according to our Discipline and usage, a sufficient reason for withholding a local preacher's license. From an early period of our denomination, women, from time to time and in different conferences, have been licensed as local preachers. No change in the Discipline unfavorable to such a license being granted has been made since then. Therefore, it was a violation of our Discipline and usages to refuse to renew the license of the sister in question, solely because she is a woman." The Free Methodist church, happily, does not favor secret societies, but sets a capital example to other denominations. It seems reasonable that if the men desert the church for the lodge, the women should receive every encouragement to perform church work. The decision is in the interest of righteousness.

—A note from Rev. Robert A. Paden, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Sumner, Iowa, and engaged in our reform work, informs us that he recently delivered an address on "Home Missions," in the M. E. church at Littleton. In the course of his remarks he strongly spoke against secret societies and their evils. His fellow-presbyters who were present received his strictures with apparent favor. One of them, Mr. Paden learned, had taken the first degree in Masonry, but it sickened him, and he has since then been quietly working against the order. A letter from a gentleman at Littleton, says: "Your remarks on Odd-fellowship, Masonry, and the Knights of Pythias, have caused quite a jangle here. One man said that you was a fool, and didn't know what you were talking about. I told him to take his 'medicine' like a man, and if the shoe pinched, throw it away. . . . The pastor of the M. E. church, Rev. Mr. Goodsell, you will remember, pronounced the benediction. He had just taken the second degree of the K. of P., at Fairbanks, on the Saturday evening previous; he was as limp as a rag the next morning, and had nothing to say. I agree with you that 'too little' is said on the subject from the pulpit, the press, and the platform."

admit secretists, and no longer have a testimony against them. The conservatives remain upon the old platform. I need not say that the good people of Roscoe belong to the conservatives. There is need of ventilation right along this line. These conservatives give no uncertain sound upon the question of secretism. The liberals have removed this from the old creed of the U. B. church, and have made other changes in the way of new declarations, and the liberals are seeking to gain possession of the property belonging to the U. B. church. Strange to say, they are gaining decisions in their favor in many of our courts of justice. Does secretism have anything to do with these decisions? Is there a secret bias? It will be well for us to keep our eyes upon this very contest in our courts of justice now and turn on the light.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Oct. 7.—I am now on my way to Albany, Mo., to spend the Sabbath among our good Wesleyan Methodist brethren. At the first of the week I shall join Bro. Gault, at Blanchard.

On Wednesday evening Bro. Thos. M. Chalmers, of the U. P. church, and myself addressed the Kansas R. P. Presbytery in a popular meeting at Winchester, Kans. We occupied the time from 8 to 10. We certainly had an interesting and appreciative audience. Our Covenanter brethren give no uncertain sound on this question of secretism, or on any question of desirable

Christian reform. This particular congregation is not fed upon bladeless cornstalks on questions of reform by Dr. D. H. Coulter, their earnest pastor. I enjoyed the hospitality of friends Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds. When one gets into the atmosphere of a Covenanter church meeting he gets into one very strongly charged with the electricity of reform. If you don't want to be struck you had best leave your fur coat of liberal ease on the outside.

I do not need to introduce Bro. Chalmers to Cynosure readers. His name has already appeared in the Cynosure, either in original articles for the Cynosure or in selections for the Christian Instructor. Bro. Chalmers has written for the readers of the Christian Instructor a very able continued article on "The Essential Blasphemy of Freemasonry." These articles touch the heart of this question and deserve a wide reading. When Bro. Chalmers gets upon the floor he goes directly to the center of the question and deals heavy blows for Christ's cause and kingdom. Bro. Chalmers is now preaching, for a few weeks or months, for the U. P. brethren of Winchester, holding himself ready to give addresses on questions of reform. If you want to listen to an address that will unflinchingly go to the core of things and make you think hard and deep, send for Bro. Chalmers.

I went from among this people feeling that it was "good to be there." The encouragement given will sustain for many days. Substantial help was given in way of donations and subscriptions.

REFORM NOTES IN NEBRASKA.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Oct. 4, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I addressed six meetings in Richardson county, Neb., last week. The roads and moonlight were par-excellence, and the audience and interest unusually good.

The first meeting was at Verdon; then at Silver Creek and Salem, and three at Dawson. Bro. S. W. Patterson, pastor of the Evangelical church at Verdon and Dawson, worked up these meetings, taking me in his carriage from point to point. It is seldom I meet a pastor so consecrated to the Lord's work. He preaches three times on Sabbath, besides conducting Bible-schools three evenings in the week. His method is to take up a Bible theme, such as the personality of the Holy Spirit, arranging the points analytically and proving each with a text. His pupils, composed mostly of young people, take notes, and are afterwards examined on the subject of the lecture. He is a teacher of long experience, and his method of storing the minds of his young people with Bible truth, is a pattern for pastors everywhere.

The people of Nebraska are much absorbed in politics, and the better class are pushing the Prohibition party agitation with great energy. Politically, we are in the cyclone belt. The two old parties are fighting desperately for existence. Every year an increasing number are realizing that the old parties have no issue to divide them, and might better move into the same house and save rent. The Prohibition platform includes most of the moral issues of the day and marks the highest stage reached politically in moral reform. Yet we cannot forget how Frances E. Willard labored at the last National Convention, till twelve at night, with the platform committee of that party, to induce them to recognize the moral Governor of nations, the Lord Jesus; but they entirely ignored him. We do not doubt but that secret lodge influence was the head and front of that opposition—the same anti-Christ that attempted to rule Christ out of the French government at the close of the last century; the same anti-Christ that ruled him out of our national Constitution, and that prevents President Harrison from recognizing him in his Thanksgiving Proclamation.

On my way home, last Monday, I called upon Harris Johnson, at Nebraska City, who is a most devoted worker in our reform. He and his wife have passed their seventieth birthday, and last week they celebrated their golden wedding, the Presbyterian pastor, Bro. J. K. Hunter, and a circle of friends joining with them in their expressions of thanksgiving and praise to God. Father Johnson will try to arrange a meeting at Nebraska City, previous to our Wahoo Convention.

THE HOME.

BE PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

Dear friends, when you and I are gone
Beyond earth's weary labor;
When small our need of help or love
From comrade or from neighbor,
Past all the strife, the toil, the care,
Past all the sorrows, grief and sighing
What do we gain, what do we lose,
Alas! by simply dying?

Then lips too chary for their praise
Will tell our merits over.
And eyes too blind our faults to see
Shall no defect discover.
Then hands that would not lift a stone,
When stones were thick to cumber,
Upon our graves will scatter flowers
When we unconscious slumber.

Dear friends, perchance both you and I,
Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
"Be patient with the living."
To-day's repressed rebuke may save,
Our blinding tears to-morrow.
Then patience, e'en when keenest edged,
May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when Death's silence shames our clamor;
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glamour:
But wise it were for you and me
Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
"Be patient with the living."

LIFE IN THE HOME.

The only way to make the world a better place to live in is for each individual to make himself a better person to live with. How to live with others is, therefore, the great question for the decision of every human being. In its answer is involved the solution of the problems which vex the social philosophers, and to enable them to settle it is the prime object of Christianity.

If we begin with the application of the rule to simplest routine of daily existence, the extension of it into all the rules of life will become easier. The most trying place in which to start is the home, the family itself; and yet the home is the great school of manners and for the education of the heart. The very certainty of responsive family affection may easily develop disregard for the restraints and requirement of the wholesome rule. It is using a dangerous license that because this affection is natural, and is tolerant, forgiving and charitable, it cannot be abused; and that a carelessness in the treatment of others which would be intolerant and impossible elsewhere, is permissible and defensible in the family circle.

If in the narrower relations of the family, of marriage and fraternity, people scrupulously and sensitively regard each other, they will acquire a habit which will enable them to live with all other people, however they may encounter them and wherever.—The Baptist Layman.

FAMILY DEVOTIONS.

It is strange that fathers do not perceive that their children do not understand or enjoy long prayers, in which the language is above their comprehension. Now, family prayer is a home prayer, and the wants of the home circle should constitute the principal part of the petition. Not that selfishness should be encouraged any more in our worship than in our acts, but that all present should feel that the prayer is for them—that they may be truly obedient to God, faithful at home, at school, or in business—kind, truthful, generous; that they have personally a work to do for the poor and for the rich, and all done for God, out of love to Jesus. Is it not better that the language should be simple, so that the child of four years can understand, than that it should be so lofty that none under fourteen can comprehend it?

We now think of a family where the morning and evening worship seems to be enjoyed by all, and all have a part in it. A portion of Scripture is read, and then any one present asks questions upon it. The children inquire about anything they do not understand, and the parents ask the children to ascertain if they have been attentive.

Then they sing a short hymn, or a Sabbath-school song, and the father offers a short prayer that is simple, earnest, and perfectly understood by children and servants, and the latter are remembered in the petitions, and seem to feel that they are part of the family. They often close the morning prayer by all joining with the father in repeating the Lord's Prayer aloud.

We fear that still in many families the worship of God is considered a burden and a hindrance. Now, let parents think of this, and ask themselves if the fault does not lie partly with themselves? Make it a cheerful service—not long and prosy; but let your children see that your heart is in it; that you love to pray with and for them.—Christian Worker.

THE YEW OF COWHURST.

A party of friends in England gave a very interesting account of a trip made to Cowhurst church, in the yard of which stands the oldest yew-tree in the country. It is the one mentioned by Aubrey in the reign of Charles I., as measuring at that time ten yards in circumference at a height of five feet from the ground. Its present girth is about thirty-three feet, and it is stated on the authority of Decandolle to be 1450 years old. The church was built in 1304, and the tree was an old, old one then. It had seen the days of Alfred the Good, of Canute the Great, of Harold the Bold, of the Norman William, of the Lion Heart, of John Lackland, from whose weak reign grew up the Magna Charta,—had seen these rulers all rise, play their parts and disappear like phantoms, before the first stone of the foundation was laid; and the five hundred years that afterward hung their weight upon its branches scarce impaired its vigor. The sun has shown on it in peace, and the rain wept on it in war; men have slept under it in life; and in death they have laid beneath it; and if an old cannon ball, found in its heart in 1820, when it was being hollowed out, could only speak, it would doubtless tell fine tales. But what time has dealt with so gently, man has been less kind to, for the covering around it was fired in 1650; then, too, in 1825—the beginning of its fifteenth century—the great wind-storm that swept that part of England, snapped off its bright branches; but there is life in the old tree yet, and it bids fair to live years more. There is a door fitted to it, and twelve persons can sit comfortably within its trunk. Our friends, for the novelty of it, lunched under the protection of its friendly bark.—Hospital Review.

OLD MAJOR'S SERMON.

Deacon Hartley and his family were always faithful at the Sabbath services, and they were always in their places in time. Mr. Hartley's father had brought him up in this strict old way. "Never go late to service, James," he was wont to say. "Make it part of your religion never to disturb the religion of others." And the pastor always knew that he could rely upon Deacon Hartley and his family. If the choir was a little late about getting there, Mr. Hartley would start the hymns, and the Hartley children would sing with a force that would make itself felt.

Regularly every Sabbath morning at 10 o'clock old Major, the horse, would draw up to the church door, while the deacon would unload the heavy carryall, and afterward go unguided to the church shed, built for his special use. Rain or shine they were always there. Deacon Hartley was no dry-weather Christian. Years before, when the deacon married, he and Mrs. Hartley formed the resolution never to stay home from service unless kept by the hand of God. And they had always followed the plan.

Religion in the deacon's household was a very simple thing. To be a Christian was to be like Christ. And their lives in the church were useful and happy because they kept themselves in the warm atmosphere of God's love.

But there came at last a Sunday when even Deacon Hartley hesitated. At day-break a cold east storm set in, and the rain fell in heavy gusts, which sent a chill through the frame. As the day advanced the storm increased, while the deacon shivered as he viewed the weather from the kitchen window.

"What about it, wife?" he said; "we would be under the cover of the carryall, but old Major would have to breast it, and 'a righteous man regardeth the life of his beast.'"

The result was that Deacon Hartley's family composed themselves for a quiet Sabbath at home.

"Father," said James, "old Major has broken his halter, and I cannot find him anywhere."

This was about 12 o'clock, just as Mrs. Hartley was preparing the noon meal. The deacon donned his gum-coat, and a search was instituted; but no Major could be found, and the dismayed family met in consultation as to what should be done.

"Here he comes," cried Harry. And sure enough old Major came trotting into the yard, halted a moment at the gate, and then went on his way and entered the open stable door.

"Bless my heart," cried the deacon, "if I don't believe the old veteran has been to the church, in spite of everything." And sure enough, at just five minutes to 10, as the pastor entered the church path, grasping with both hands an umbrella, old Major passed him, paused at the door, and then went on to his shed, with head down, and the water dripping off his shaggy coat.

"Well," said the deacon, "I never had a sermon to strike home like that preached by old Major. Hereafter, let the weather be what it may, it shall always find me seated in the house of God. Wife, this is the first and last time old Major shall attend Sabbath service alone."—Sallie V. DuBois, in the Christian Observer.

TALENTS.

"There is nothing I can do," said Mr. R—, when asked why he did nothing for Christ.

"Surely, my friend, God has entrusted to you at least one talent to use in his service."

"I do not know. If he has, I can not tell where, or what it is."

"Laid away in a napkin, perhaps."

"It may be," he replied indifferently; "but it can be no very definite talent, else it would have manifested itself long ago."

"Have you ever given it an opportunity to do so? Have you ever sought to know how and where you could serve the Lord Jesus? Have you ever tried to use your talents, and to make gain thereon for him who lent you them?"

"I cannot say that I have. To be frank with you, I never thought of those things at all. I like to hear a good sermon, and I am willing to help the pastor; but as for anything else, I leave that to the preachers. It is their business."

"But, Mr. R—, it is our duty to share our pastor's burdens. God has given every soul capabilities and powers for doing good. No soul in the universe is so poor, so humble, so ignorant that he does not possess at least one God-given talent, for the use or misuse of which he must one day give a strict account; and because God has not given ten talents, he will not excuse the neglect of the one."

"You say I possess more than one talent. Will you tell me what they are?"

"God's blessing rests abundantly upon your daily labors. You have money; and many worthy objects, as our educational and charitable institutions, and missions, plead to you for assistance. Money lent unto the Lord brings in a surer and safer reward than any other, though in this life you may not know its full measure. Then I notice you have great influence among your associates. Do you ever speak a word for Jesus to them?"

"I am not a preacher."

"No; but none of us are without influence upon others, by his every word and act, and God will hold us responsible for the direction of that influence. 'He that is not with me is against me.' He will judge us, too, by the talents with which he has endowed us, for 'Of him to whom much is given shall much be required,' and every circumstance that increases our influence, increases our responsibility. Your influence is great, therefore your responsibility is also great. Nor can you withhold your influence from the cause of Christ without guilt."

"Well, have I any other talent?"

"You have the gift of talking with the pen, of putting thought into clear, forcible, yet beautiful language. If you would use this gift in the interests of Christianity, as you do in politics, who can measure the good you might do?"

"Is that the sum of my talents?"

"These are your special talents as I have noticed them; but if you were to associate yourself with your pastor, and the active members of the church, in the various forms of work that claim their time and attention, you would find abundance of work for which you are fitted, perhaps in a special manner. The ability is there; it is only the will that is lacking. Will you not use your talents in the Master's service?"

"I do not know. I will think of it."

"Ah, if you only will think of it, earnestly and prayerfully, I think you will work with Christ, and not against him."

How many, like Mr. R.—, are letting their talents rust in idleness, or are devoting them to the world instead of Christ—nominal Christians, who bear his name, but do not fulfill his commands, and who imagine that because they do not openly and intentionally work against him, they are therefore upon his side. "He that will not deny himself, take up his cross and follow me, is not worthy of me," says the Master. There is no such thing as neutrality. We must either serve God or Satan. If we are Christians, if we do believe the precious truths of the Bible, why not use all our powers in the interests of the religion we profess? Our one talent, or five, may grow into a hundred by diligent use. McLeod has well said, "I feel assured that every one has given him, of God, much more than he has any idea of; and that he can help on the world's work more than he knows of. What we want is the single eye that will see what our work is, the humility to accept it, the faith to do it for God, and the perseverance to go on unto death." And another writer has expressed a similar thought in a beautiful manner:

"In each life, however lowly,
There are seeds of mighty good;
Still we shrink from all appealing
With a timid 'if we could,'
But God who knoweth all things, Knows the truth is 'if we would.'"

—Minnie A. Grenier, in Lutheran Chimes.

ROBERT MOFFAT.

Robert Moffat was a famous missionary in Africa. Speaking of his conversion and the devotion of his life to missionary work, he himself says:

"I will tell you how it was: When I was leaving home for Warrington, where I was going to work as a gardener, my mother asked me to give her a promise. I wanted to know what I was to promise, but she would not tell me and still urged that I should promise. I was quite loth to give my word to do a thing which I did not know about, but I loved and trusted my mother, and so at length gave the promise she wished.

"Well," she said, "I want you to read a portion of the New Testament every day, and wherever you may be."

"I kept my promise to my mother, and it was some time after that, that I was brought to the knowledge of Christ."

"And did you then devote yourself to the missionary work?" some one asked.

"No," he replied; "that was later; I had gone in from the place where I was working to the town of Warrington on a Saturday night to buy a book, when I saw a placard about a missionary meeting. It was an old placard, and the meeting was past, but it fixed my thoughts on the subject; and so I went to the minister whose name was on the placard, and after I had knocked at his door, I would gladly have run away, but it was too late. So I saw him and talked with him, and afterwards he introduced me to the London Missionary Society, by which, two years later, in 1822, I was sent out to Africa."

When Moffat had come to Africa, an African chief came with twelve spearmen to command him to leave the country on pain of death, but Moffat calmly replied, "You may shed my blood, you may burn my dwelling, but my decision is made—I do not leave your country." With a calm courage, which nothing could daunt, the missionary for many years labored faithfully among his "beloved Africans." On Aug. 9, 1883, the "good and faithful" entered into the joy of his Lord.

What wonderful changes have taken place in Africa since Moffat entered that country in the year 1822! Changes that have been brought about also by the work of that faithful missionary! Over the harvests that have been gathered from the deserts of Africa that godly mother also rejoiced, who trained her boy in the fear of the Lord and made him promise to read the New Testament every day.—Little Missionary.

AT LAST.

When on my day of life the night is falling,
And, in the winds from unsunned spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown,

Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;
O love divine, O Helper ever present,
Be thou my strength and stay!

Be near me when all else is from me drifting—
Earth, sky, home's picture, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to my own uplifting,
The love which answers mine.

I have but thee, O Father! Let thy Spirit
Be with me then to comfort and uphold;
No gate of pearl, no branch of palm I merit,
No street of shining gold.

Suffice it if, my good and ill unreckoned,
And both forgiven through thy abounding grace,
I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place.

Some humble door among thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,
And flows forever through heaven's green expansions
The river of thy peace.

There, from the music round about me stealing
I fain would learn the new and holy song,
And find at last beneath the trees of healing
The life for which I long.

—J. G. Whittier.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN IOWA.

A year ago the Presbytery of Iowa City passed a resolution endorsing the Republican party, with only one dissenting vote. Last week this same body met and by a like vote passed a series of resolutions upon the subject of temperance; one of which we quote as follows:

"That while it is not the province of the church to dictate to any man how he shall vote, yet this presbytery declares that no political party has the right to expect the support of Christian men so long as that party stands committed to the license policy, or refuses to put itself on record against the saloon."

These are almost exactly the words of the resolution passed by the General Conference of the Methodist church. Last year the Republican party of Iowa stood upon resolutions favoring the enforcement of the prohibitory law. This year it has placed a license law advocate at the head of its electoral ticket. Whether this change in policy caused a change in the tone of the Presbyterian resolutions, can be figured out by yourself; also what effect it is likely to have upon the vote of that State.—Geneva (Ill.) Patrol.

ILLINOIS LIQUOR-DEALERS' CONVENTION.

The Liquor Dealers' and Manufacturers' State Protective Association held its 12th annual meeting at Decatur this week, and was welcomed by the mayor in a public speech.

As Decatur, with a population of less than 20,000, has 47 saloons, this is not to be wondered at. The Association now claims a membership of 6,000. The resolutions adopted declare "undying allegiance to the constitution and laws of Illinois and the nation as far as it is possible for man to comply with the same," which leaves a very convenient loop-hole for avoiding those provisions with which it is impossible to comply and make a living at the business. The resolutions further say that "we are absolutely opposed to the sale and gift of liquors to a drunkard or a minor," and in favor of "all wholesome, fair and proper restrictions of the liquor traffic; but add that the trade should not be treated otherwise than any other business, particularly so as the liquor traffic is recognized by our state and national constitution and contributes vast sums of money to sustain our local, state and national governments in license fees and taxes."

This last statement shows where their power comes in, and gives hint of the great weakness of the license law. It is for this "recognition" by state and nation that they are willing to "contribute vast sums." "Contribute" is a very good word in this connection. Who ever heard of a man talk of contributing to the government when he paid his taxes? The saloonists do not regard this money as a legitimate tax, but as a sum exacted by force of circumstances, which any of them would be glad to avoid paying.

Touching the matter of politics, they declare that only friends and liberal persons should be supported for legislative positions. Party labels will cut no figure in this respect. Does any one think it will be a difficult task to name the men for whom the liquor-dealers will vote in this district? Are you going to vote for the same men?—Patrol.

JEREMIAH AND HIS PA.

Jeremiah [thoughtfully]—"Say, pa, if I tell Willie Smith to tell Tom Hooker to tell Jack Hades to kill my little dogs, would it be right for me to tell the p'lice and get Jack in jail?"

Rev. Elijah Wimbleton [taking a long view of his hopeful son over the rim of his steel spectacles]—Jeremiah, I have always encouraged you to ask questions and thus gain knowledge, but I have never been guilty of encouraging you in asking foolish ones. But, in order to show your responsibility, I will inform you, Jeremiah, that of the four that would be involved in the killing of the dogs, you would be the greater criminal. Now, don't ask any more questions."

[Silence for ten minutes.]

"Pa."

"Yaas, yaas, what is it now?"

"Kin Jack Jones, the s'loon-keeper, jine your church?"

"Most decidedly not!"

"Why, pa?"

"Why, because he is engaged in the diabolical business of making drunkards; turning the home of comfort and peace into a hell; taking the bread out of the mouths and shoes from off the feet of mothers and children; filling our jails, poorhouses and insane asylums with victims. No, Jeremiah, no saloon-keeper could join my church for the whole world."

"Well, pa, why do the people 'low them to sell whisky then?"

"For the reason that he has a license to carry on the hellish business."

"Who gave him his license, pa?"

"Judge Grant."

"Isn't Judge Grant a member of your church, pa?"

"Yes, he is; and one of the finest and truest of Christian men."

"If he is such a good man, how could he give a license to Jack Jones to sell whisky?"

"Judge Grant is not responsible for the law which compels him to give license, Jeremiah."

"Who makes the law?"

"The Legislature."

"What is a Legis—Legas—Le—?"

"The Legislature is composed of men elected by the people to make laws for the people. Senator Smith of our church is one of the law-makers."

"Did you vote for him, pa?"

"Most assuredly I did! He is one of the most talented men in the Senate."

"Is Senator Smith a 'Publican?"

"Yes, he is."

"Judge Grant, too?"

[Another long pause.]

Jeremiah [thoughtfully]—"Pa, if I was to blame most for killing the dogs, ain't you to blame too for voting for Sen'tor Smith to make a law that compels Judge Grant to give a license to Jack Jones to engage in a diabolical business of selling whisky? And since you and the Sen'tor and Judge belong to the church, why can't Jack Jones jine too? Ain't he doing just what the 'Publican party said he can do? And ain't you all 'Publicans? Deacon Giles is right, pa; the man that votes for a license party is worser than the s'loon-keeper and——"

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A company of inquirers.—vs. 30-33. Cornelius was not content to receive the truth alone. He wanted his kinsfolks and acquaintances to hear it. This is always the spirit of the true inquirer. When we really thirst for the truth, we long to have all others who are thirsting too come with us to the living Fountain. That is only the corpse of Christianity in which there is no spark of missionary zeal. But Cornelius seems to have picked his little company with discrimination. He selected those who he felt would be receptive to the truth; men of honest minds to whom it would not be as pearls cast before swine. This is an important point which if we fail to regard will not only be to our own loss but to the injury of the cause we are trying to serve. "Now therefore are we all here present before God." Cornelius, though a Jewish proselyte, had come so far into the light as to realize that no place or places have a monopoly of God's presence, and that where a company of sincere inquirers are gathered together there will be in the midst of them. We find here the first example of cottage or neighborhood meeting, an agency which should be more frequently used than it is. The last clause is no less impressive. "To hear all things that are commanded thee of God." They had no intention of being partial hearers of the Word; they fully realized that the message was from God, and that Peter was only his mouthpiece. When such hearers and such preachers meet, we may expect great results.

2. Peter convinced.—vs. 34, 35. To Peter and to Cornelius, the one a Jew and the other a Gentile, God had revealed his truth at one and the same time; and of this truth Peter frankly acknowledged himself convinced. There is no favoritism with God. Neither race, rank, nor ecclesiastical condition counts for anything in his sight. There are many Christians to-day who need to learn this lesson, that the Holy Spirit will not confine his gracious work to the narrow bounds of any sect or church line.

3. The Gospel message.—vs. 36-43. "That word . . . ye know." The life of Jesus and the wonderful events attending his death and resurrection were well-known facts. As Peter said, on a previous occasion, "these things were not done in a corner." Cornelius and his little company had doubtless heard of Jesus of Nazareth, but not in a way to make any impression on their minds. What little they knew about him was doubtless colored by Jewish hate and bigotry. Peter's preaching of Jesus as the Anointed One was something entirely new to them, and many things in Peter's sermon must have sounded new even to himself. "The word of peace by Jesus Christ" was indeed given to Israel first, but would it have been what its name imports, the Gospel, the good news, if it had stopped there? "He is Lord of all;"—this parenthetical outburst sounds as if forced from Peter as his answer to this question. It must follow, as a natural consequence, that being Lord of all, his salvation is for all, whosoever believeth on him. But only "through his name." It is worse than useless to come in any other. And yet how many are pinning their hope of salvation on their faithful fulfillment of their lodge duties, while the churches, by fellowshiping the professors of this rival religion, practically tell them that they are right.

4. The Holy Ghost given.—vs. 44-48. While Peter was yet speaking, the Holy Ghost came upon them. This was because they had received the truth into their hearts and were ready to obey it. The Spirit will not come where there is no open door. That the disciples who accompanied Peter were astonished to see the outpouring at Pentecost repeated in the case of these Gentile converts shows how little they understood the universal scope of the Gospel. It was as if they had taken one of its bays and creeks to be all there was of some boundless ocean. There are no limits to truth, and perhaps to-day we are making as great mistakes. Christ's teachings had been very plain on this point. The prophets had prophesied of it ages before, but their eyes were holden; and so, perhaps, ours may be to many a great and glorious revelation contained in his Word. He may have plans of grace and mercy wider and more far-reaching than any of which we have conceived. "Can any man forbid," etc. The Holy Ghost, in this case, came before baptism. This shows that while it is a seal to our covenant relations, and a type of the cleansing work of Christ, it is not, as Rome teaches, a saving ordinance. Neither did they belong to any visible church. Shall denominational lines exclude those whom God has made his? Shall we deny them the name of brethren, because they do not believe in our creed, or worship in our particular way? Let us rather learn a lesson of Christian liberality from Peter, the great apostle of the circumcision.

Do you take the Cynosure? Why not? Do you pay for it? Why don't you?

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

—The sixty-seventh annual report of the American Tract Society is an interesting document. The society has issued over 7,700 distinct publications, 1,843 of which are volumes. It publishes six periodicals, two of which are printed in German and four in English. During the past year the society issued 100 new publications, printed as follows: Forty-nine in English, one in German, ten in Spanish, one in Portuguese, eight in Italian, three in Swedish, sixteen in Bohemian, seven in Polish, one in Dakota, one in Zulu, two in Bengali, and one in Hebrew and Jargon. Thirty-six are volumes, and sixty-four tracts, booklets, or leaflets. The society's publications have been circulated in all the States and among most of the nations of the earth. The 174 colporteurs who worked for the society the past year found 10,432 families with no religious reading other than the Bible, and 6,332 families who did not have even a Bible. In the fifty-one years of its existence, the colporteurs of the society have found 698,148 Protestant families destitute of the Bible or any other religious reading. The society is undenominational, and is doing a great good. Its assistance to mission work, through its publications, is invaluable.

BAPTIST.

—On Saturday, Oct. 1, the University of Chicago took its place among the great schools of the land and the world. At the early hour of half-past eight, the professors met their classes, and work began. At half-past twelve all met in the room which serves at present for chapel, although ultimately to be employed for library purposes. The service was a purely devotional one.

—Evangelist A. P. Graves has gone to Los Angeles, Cal. He expects to spend a month in Southern California. He returns to begin meetings in Sandwich, Ill., Nov. 2, and then at the Normal Park Baptist church, Chicago, Nov. 15.

—Illinois General Association: The total number of missionaries under appointment this year will be nearly fifty. The number of baptisms has not been as large as last year, yet there has been a good degree of prosperity attending the labors of missionaries. The needs of our State are great. There are two entire counties without a Baptist church, and eighteen county seats where there is now not even an organization.

—The first abundant fruit of the centenary impulse to foreign missions, by the American Baptist Missionary Union, appear in the autumnal departures for the fields abroad. At this particular season sixty-five go. Of this number forty-five are new appointments, and twenty-nine sailed from Boston harbor Sept. 25. Services appropriate to this departure were held in the Ruggles Street Baptist church, Sept. 22.

—Dr. C. H. Parkhurst returned from Europe on Friday, Sept. 23. It is understood that part of his vacation was spent in studying the morals and municipal governments of London and Paris.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The annual session of the American Board of Missions, in this city, last week, was largely attended and distinguished for the many prominent divines which it brought together. The totals embodied in the Treasurer's report were as follows: Expenditures, cost of missions, etc., $841,568.77; receipts, $840,804.72; balance on hand Sept. 1, 1891, $764.05; total, $841,568.77. The board has a general permanent fund of $224,904.46. In addition are several endowments and scholarships, which make the society's resources about $1,000,000. The annual report of the home department shows that during the past year there have entered upon missionary work abroad or are on their way thither nine missionaries and twenty-two assistant missionaries, two of whom are physicians, a total of thirty-one. To-day the working force occupies ninety-seven stations and 1,136 outstations, numbers 183 ordained missionaries, of whom eleven are also physicians, nineteen physicians and other men not ordained, and 337 female assistant missionaries, four of them physicians, making a total from this country of 539. The native force is nearly five times that number—a total of 2,648, of whom 757 are native pastors and preachers. The native churches, 410 in number, not including the Hawaiian Islands—enroll 38,226 members, of which over 3,000 were received last year. These 38,226 members of native churches are distributed as follows: Papal Islands, 1,200; Africa, 1,200; China, 1,700; Micronesia, 4,500; India and Ceylon, 7,400; Japan, 10,100; Turkey, 12,000. These churches represent about 127,000 Christian adherents, worshipping steadily at 1,300 preaching places. The Hawaiian Islands would add several thousand more church members. The report of Secretary Judson Smith on the condition of missions in Turkey, China, Africa, and the Pacific Islands, and of Secretary Clark on the condition of Indian stations, showed that good work has been done during the year and that these fields are ripe for further effort.

—The fifty-second annual meeting of the Congregational convention of Wisconsin was held in Milwaukee. Their statistics are as follows: Churches, 216, a gain of nine over last year; fifty-one are without pastors; total membership, 17,665, of which 15,848 is resident; net gain, 1,540; pastors, 138; ministers without charge, 44; Sunday-school officers and teachers, 1,250; scholars, 22,000; Christian Endeavor societies, 104; membership, 4,883. During the year twenty-nine church buildings have been either erected, enlarged or improved. There has been expended for church improvements $181,615. The total gifts for benevolence and home expenses amounted to $225,917. The expenditures for mission work in the State the past year were $13,600, or $2,600 above the receipts. The national society spent $8,000 last year in Northern Wisconsin.

JEWS.

—The statement of Dr. Merrill, U. S. consul to Jerusalem, that there are but 42,000 Jews in Palestine, is called in question by a missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, Rev. W. Ewing, who asserts that the Hebrew calendar gives the number at 80,000, while there are well-informed persons who think that 100,000 would be nearer the actual number. It is the habit of the Jews themselves to understate their numbers, as it has a very important bearing on the amount of taxes that they pay the government.

MISSIONS.

—There are more missionary societies represented in India to-day than in any other section of the world. There are more missionaries, more schools, more churches, more communicants, a wider opportunity for every form of Christian endeavor, the use of every weapon of Christian warfare, the application of every Christian principle. And well may it be so; for the population numbers 288,000,000, and the idols worshiped, 330,000,000. Of the women 40,000,000 are shut up in Zenanas, 23,000,000 are widows, and 79,000 were widows before they were nine years of age. Only one woman in 800 is under instruction, and but one Protestant missionary is found to 500,000 of the population.

REFORMED CHURCH IN AMERICA.

—According to the statistical report of the recent meeting of the Reformed Alliance, at Toronto, Can., the delegates represented 78 branches of the Christian church, and about 30 nationalities with a grand total of 4,092,965 communicants, and 3,020,765 Sunday-school scholars. These are cared for by 23,951 ministers in 23,487 congregations. The attendance at the Alliance meetings was very large.

—Heidelberg University is to have a new additional building for museum and gymnasium, 97 by 80 feet, and 54 feet high, to cost $8,000 or $9,000. Two-thirds of the money has been secured.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Illinois Synod met at Aledo, Tuesday evening, Oct. 11. In addition to business and devotional exercises there are: Conferences—The Advance Movements in S. S. Work; The Responsibility of Laymen in Church Work; The Church, Her Sons and Daughters; Boards of the Church; Our Educational Interests; Evangelistic Preaching. Addresses—Foreign Work, Rev. Dr. Stewart, India; Looking Backward, Rev. A. S. Vincent; Loyalty and Love, Rev. Dr. Meloy; Our Educational Interests, Prof. Graham. Bible Studies, by Prof. White, of Xenia, O.—1. Jeremiah; 2. Amos; 3. Foreign Prophecies; 4. Jonah and Nahum.

—The United Presbyterian Home for the Aged, at Wilkinsburg, Pa., is now ready for occupancy, and its mission in the new location was inaugurated on Friday, Sept. 30, by a "reception," which was largely attended. The rooms have all been furnished by individuals or churches, and in the way of taste and comfort leave nothing to be desired. The building will accommodate a family of about twenty old people, and there are more than applicants enough to fill it. The cost of the property was $45,000; of this amount $15,000 has been paid, leaving the rest to be met by annual installments.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Terra cotta and white have been selected as the municipal colors in the decoration of Chicago for the Columbian Exposition. The general design is a field of terra cotta divided in three parts by broad lines of white. The tripartite division represents the three sides of the city, and the opinion of experts is that no combination of colors will so well meet the requirements of the occasion. The colors blend well with any other decoration and are easily procured. The device is simple and easily executed.

Chromatopseudopsis is the medical term for color blindness, and statistics show that men are much more chromatopseudoptically inclined than women.

Not less than 50 per cent of the people in Alaska are afflicted with chronic diseases. Two-thirds of the children born do not live, or rather do not outlive their parents.

Here's a hint for makers of prime butter. Why not keep it packed with roses and violets till ready for sale? Remember, too, that butter can hold and retain foul odors as well as sweet ones. Pack an onion with it and see.—Rural New Yorker.

The "sheepy taste" of mutton does not come from contact with the wool in skinning or from tardiness in disemboweling the animal; it is of far deeper origin. It comes from poverty, unhealthy condition, old age, and similar causes.—Texas Live Stock Journal.

Prof. Bucher, of Darmstadt, states that in the case of some old women a complete rejuvenation occurs when they have reached an advanced age, and he instances two, the Marquis de Mirabeau and Margaret Verdur, who renewed their youth, one at 65, the other at 80 years of age.

Tobacco consumption is increasing in Great Britain. For the last year it averaged one and six-tenths pounds per head of the population. In France it averages nearly two pounds. In England the consumption of tea is rapidly increasing and coffee diminishing. Cocoa has increased 34 per cent in five years.

A tool chest is a most important adjunct to a well-regulated household. Whether one lives in the country or city, it is a troublesome and expensive matter to send for a workman every time a lock is out of order, or any simple repairing is to be done. Twice as much energy is generally expended in getting the carpenter or locksmith as would have been necessary to do the work yourself. The only way to have tools handy is to have a box expressly for them, to fit it up with good serviceable tools, and to make each member of the family, guilty of not restoring one of them to its proper receptacle, liable to a fine.

RECIPES.

Egg Broth—Beat an egg very light and pour on it gradually half a pint of boiling water, very slowly at first, and stirring the mixture vigorously to prevent curdling. Sugar or salt to taste.

Drop Soup—Beat well together two or three eggs, a pinch of salt and flour enough to make it drop slowly from a spoon. When your beef soup is quite well done, season to taste and drop in the batter in spoonfuls.

Baked Tomatoes—Select fresh, ripe tomatoes of equal size, wipe and cut out the hard core; place them in an earthen pie dish, and put a little sugar, salt and butter in the core of each. Bake about half an hour, covering for the first fifteen minutes.

Broiled Sardines—Place within a double broiler one dozen good sized, boneless sardines and broil for two minutes over a brisk fire. Serve on hot toast with butter and accompanied with quarters of lemon. The sauce is made by mixing a teaspoonful of very finely chopped parsley to one ounce of fine butter, and adding the juice of half a lemon. Flavor with nutmeg very slightly.

The prudent always have Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup on hand. It is invaluable.

Mrs. William Lohr

Of Freeport, Ill., began to fail rapidly, lost all appetite and got into a serious condition from Dyspepsia. She could not eat vegetables or meat, and even toast distressed her. Had to give up housework. In a week after taking

Hood's Sarsaparilla

FARM NOTES.

(From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

AGRICULTURAL.

North Dakota boasts a pumpkin vine sixty feet long.

The French wheat crop is officially reported at 300,000,000 bushels, or 15,000,000 bushels in excess of the latest previous estimate of the Government.

The Delaware, N. J., subscriber who has a slate farm with thin soil and wishes to sow something to pasture and then plow under, had better use peas instead of alfalfa as suggested.

Build up a reputation for shipping none but the best. It will pay in the end. But remember, to succeed we must know and obey the law that governs our business. Guesses and haphazard work will not do; we must know.

Any readers who are interested enough in Oxford Down sheep to wish an official list of the Registered Oxford Down flocks in the United Kingdom can obtain one free of charge by addressing the secretary, R. Henry Rew, Norfolk House, Norfolk street, London, W. C., Eng.

A subscriber in Boone county, Neb., sends word that corn will probably average thirty-three bushels in that county; that grain is yielding from thresher, oats 35 to 52; winter wheat, 33 to 35; spring wheat, 15 to 25 bushels. He says, "there will be a larger amount of winter wheat sown than usual."

Advices from a number of sources several days ago indicated that in Central Illinois one-quarter of the corn crop was beyond damage by frost, half of it would require fifteen days to put it beyond the danger line. The remaining 25 per cent will not be out of the way before Oct. 20. Under the most favorable conditions, it is not probable that over 75 per cent of a crop will be harvested.

W. J. Workman, Kansas, sends the following in reply to an inquiry from Wisconsin for a substance to put in the holes of wild animals to kill them. "The people here have used successfully bisulphide of carbon. It is a very offensive and volatile liquid which destroys all kinds of animal life when compelled to inhale the fumes of the drug. It is best used by pouring a small quantity on a short section of corn cob, drop into the hole and close the hole with a piece of sod."

BEES.

Bee-keepers of Utah will hold their convention at Salt Lake City, Utah, Oct. 7, 1892. John C. Swamer, Secretary, Salt Lake City, Utah.

It is said that there is a colony of bees in the Statue of Liberty on the dome of the capitol at Austin, Texas. This statue is over 17 feet in height, and stands over 300 feet from the ground.

The Southern and Texas bee-keepers will meet in special session on Oct. 27th, during the Dallas, Texas, Fair and Exposition. It is hoped that there may be a general attendance of the bee-keepers of the South.

A. F. Goldsborough thinks it a bad plan to educate chicks to catch drones. He says: "I do not suppose these 'drone-traps' would make any distinction between drones and queens. Besides this objection, I want to say that the larvae of moths make a nice morsel for chicks, but drones will scour the old birds and kill the young ones."

HORTICULTURAL.

Select single sorts of tulip for pot culture.

The old orchard will respond to a good dressing of manure.

Watch the weeds; their seeds will ripen in October if unmolested.

Clean out grass and weeds from near the base of trees—if you don't wish to house vermin or rabbits.

It is generally conceded that the finest fruit may be grown from fall-set strawberry plants. Did you set any out?

Nearly 1,200 bunches of grapes ripened this season on the great vine at Hampton Court. They were sent to Queen Victoria. This vine is the largest in England, and is about 125 years old.

To get good blooms from potted bulbs keep them in a cool, dark place for six weeks, while they are getting rooted.

In Michigan the prospects are that winter apples will be less than half of last year's crop, and peaches 61 per cent for the State.

The tomato season may be often prolonged for weeks by covering the plants at time of first frosts. There are usually several weeks of fine weather after the first nip.

If you have a young orchard, shade the bodies of the trees from the ground to the branches with lath woven together with wire, or boards. Do this before freezing weather.

Our good wife has most of the plants re-potted ready for winter. She thinks it best to take time by the forelock and be ready when the cold weather comes. Another gain is they get nicely rooted in their new homes in the outdoor air; one other gain is, it does not have to be done in a rush some cold, raw afternoon, when you "expect a frost to-night."

Leaves its mark—every one of the painful disorders that prey upon women. They fade the face, waste the figure, ruin the temper, wither you up, make you old before your time.

Get well: That's the way to look well. Cure the troubles and ailments that beset you, with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It's a guaranteed remedy for all the delicate weaknesses, derangements, and diseases peculiar to women.

It regulates and promotes all the proper functions, improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, melancholy and nervousness, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and strength. It's a powerful general, as well as uterine, tonic and nerve, imparting vigor and strength to the entire system. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to derange digestion.

It's a legitimate medicine—not a beverage—and the only one for woman's ailments, so certain in its effects that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

CURED

"About seven or eight months ago I was attacked by a cough, and at once began to take a medicine much advertised as an expectorant, and continued using it until I had taken about six bottles. Instead of giving me relief, it only made me worse. I tried several other remedies, but all in vain, and I don't think I had three whole nights' rest during my illness. I began to think that had laid hold of me, and my hopes of recovery were all gone. I was a mere skeleton, but a friend of mine, who had been some time away, called to see me. He recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and kindly sending me a bottle, I took it, but with little hopes of recovery. I am thankful, however, to say that it cured me, and I am to-day enjoying the best of health."—J. Wilnot Payne, Monrovia, Liberia.

The annual State meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, auxiliary to the N. C. A., is called to meet at Marengo, Iowa county, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 15th and 16th, beginning at 1:30 Tuesday afternoon, assembling in the Wesleyan Methodist church. The completed program of exercises is not yet received, but we learn that it will include addresses from Pres. Blanchard, Rev. M. A. Gault, Rev. W. C. Paden, and others.

A note from Rev. W. B. Stoddard, October 14, desires us to mention that he is busy arranging for the New York State Anti-secrecy Convention at Walton, and he exhorts all friends of the cause in that State to attend it. He can be addressed at Walton. Rev. S. R. Wallace, of Syracuse, is to speak on "Secret Societies and the Labor Question; or, What is the Matter at Homestead?" An effort will be made to secure an address from the venerable ex-Pres. Nathan Callender, of Montdale, Penn. Rev. W. H. Clark, of Binghamton, will have charge of the conference meeting on the morning of the second day. Rev. Henry H. Lipse, pastor of the Presbyterian church at East Springfield, if possible, will deliver an address. There will be five sessions, the first at 2 o'clock Thursday p. m., October 27, the convention closing on Friday evening. There is promise of abundant entertainment for all who will attend.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, was held in the Congregational church, at Canterbury, October 6-9. Up to the present writing we are without a report of the proceedings, which we hope soon to receive.

The remains of Alfred Tennyson, poet-laureate of Great Britain, were interred in Westminster Abbey, beside those of Browning, last week, with solemn rites. The queen sent appropriate tokens of her esteem to grace his burial; and he now takes his place among the lamented and famous British poets on whom all civilized nations delight to bestow the honor which their genius merits.

The "Supreme Justice" (Somerby) and six other "supreme" officials of the defunct "benevolent" order of the Iron Hall, were indicted, on Thursday last, in the Marion county (Ind.) court first for the embezzlement of $200,000 of the order's funds which they converted to their own use. The second count charges them with converting to their own use $200,000 by using it in Somerby's bank at Philadelphia. Arrests and heavy bailbonds followed. If it means the extinction of the order and a satisfactory punishment of the guilty persons, all honest men should rejoice.

The death of Ernest Renan, the other day, removed one who, several years ago, was the most notable deist living. He was also a scholar of high attainments, and this fact, in that day and in France, enabled him to wield an influence in opposition to Christianity more powerful and dangerous than is accorded to most of his enemies. But a change came over the spirit of the French people, and Renan and the philosophy of Comte fell into disrepute. His influence melted away, and as one expresses it, he became a corpse, only awaiting burial. His failure is an interesting corollary on the pretensions of "higher criticism" to reform the religion of the Bible.

Kansas has again been the scene of crime and bloodshed of an aggravated sort. The attempt of "the Dalton gang," five heavily-armed and desperate outlaws, who have long made life a burden in that State, to rob a bank at Coffeyville, was resisted by armed citizens. Four of the latter were killed in the fight, but four-fifths of the gang were also shot down. But one of the Daltons survives, and his capture is only a question of time. The affair naturally created intense excitement; and while the loss of life is deplorable, there is a sense of gratification and increased security in the community, arising from the destruction of the murderous highwaymen.

Those who have any curiosity to see the stuff which the Roman Catholic church treasures up as "sacred relics" will have an opportunity at the Columbian Exposition; but few, we imagine, will view them with the enthusiasm with which the Western Catholic News welcomes the coming of these antiques from the Vatican: "To Christians they will be the most attractive exhibit of the Fair, because it will bring them in close contact with the sacred and undisputed evidence of the apostolicity of the church." The great mass of true Christians will find little in these relics to shake their faith in the errors of Romish worship, the truth of the Protestant Bible, and the necessity for the Lutheran Reformation.

In the trial of D. B. Monroe, at Knoxville, Tenn., for the murder of Frank Smith, a member of the State militia, during the recent mining troubles in that State, the prosecution attempted to show the existence of an oath-bound, secret organization among the revolting miners. On the 7th inst., "James DeGruchy, a young Englishman, testified that there was such a society, that he himself had been initiated into it, that Monroe was the head of the society and had administered the oath to all the members. The oath was a horrible one, and the obligation bound the signers not only to absolute secrecy but to kill any one who revealed the secrets of the order. Monroe, who has exhibited great firmness during the course of the trial, flinched at DeGruchy's fatal testimony, but soon recovered himself." The testimony in the Homestead riot cases is very similar and quite as condemnatory.

The initiatory exercises by which the new University of Chicago (Baptist), in this city, was opened for the reception of students, occurred on the 1st inst., with devotional exercises. Another feature, of especial interest to Cynosure readers, was the organization of a chapter of the "Beta Theta Pi" (Greek-letter) secret society for the University. Students desirous of uniting with the order went to the Northwestern University, at Evanston, and there, "duly and truly prepared," were authorized to form a new chapter. It is understood that President Harper, of the new University, was formerly a member of the United Presbyterian church, which denounces secret societies, but the institution is controlled by a denomination which tolerates the affiliation of its members with the lodge. The Greek-letter annex to the University, so early in its history, is no addition to its character or usefulness.

The Chicago Press Club is composed mainly of men connected, in various capacities, with the daily newspapers of this city—men of whom much is expected, as of those who aspire to control public manners, morals and opinions. Hence when the Chicago Press Club engages Robert G. Ingersoll, the notorious infidel, to deliver one of his pernicious diatribes against Christianity before an audience of 5,000 persons, for the sake of sharing the proceeds with him, the Christian people of the Union have a right to form a very low estimate of the moral and religious character, not only of the club but also of the newspapers which they represent. Most of these papers, it is well-known, print mammoth Sunday issues of a demoralizing character, which are scattered far and wide and leave their evil impress wherever they circulate. In view of these facts, those who speak feelingly of "the Satanic press" are not chargeable with slander of this powerful "lever that moves the world."

THE STATE AND ROMANISM.

SERMON BY REV. J. M. FOSTER, DELIVERED IN MUSIC HALL, BOSTON, SABBATH AFTER-NOON, OCTOBER 2, 1892.

TEXT: "Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil."—Rom. 13:3.

There are only two theories of civil government: the infidel theory, viz., that it is only a wise human institution; and the Christian theory, viz., that it is an ordinance of God.

The infidel theory is generally based upon the social compact. This idea originated in the mind of the atheist Hobbes, of Malmesbury. Denying the existence of any fixed standard of right and, consequently, that there can be any such thing as virtue or vice, this speculative philosopher resolved all law into one—the will of the legislature. Here he found "the staff of authority," and Locke saw in this "the shield of liberty." With Kant and Grotius of Germany, it was the jus naturale. But its clearest assertion was in France and its highest development was in the Contract Social of Rousseau. The form of the theory, as maintained by Locke, is apparent in the political writings of Adams, while in those of Jefferson the theory of Rousseau is dominant. In our day it appears in the demands of Liberalism. They demand the abrogation of our Sabbath laws, the abolition of the oath from our courts, the expulsion of the Bible from our public schools, and that the government be administered on a purely secular basis. The indictment of this theory may be briefly written. It is unhistorical, for it predicates a pre-social state, out of which the social order was evolved. But of that pre-social state history gives us no account. It is unphilosophical, for it postulates a contractual law upon which exit is made from the pre-social to the social state.

But this law does not exist. It is suicidal. France adopted it for a day and an hour. The French Senate voted: "There is no God." Over the entrance to their cemetery they wrote: "Death is an eternal sleep." A strumpet graced their triumphal march through the city of Paris. And in a moment the Reign of Terror burst upon the nation. The fairest monuments of literature and art were given to the flames. The streets ran red with blood, and the river Seine was gorged with bodies. France was glad to abandon that theory, and adopt the only true theory, namely, that civil government is an ordinance of God; that settled order of things that is manifestly in harmony with the divine will, having its necessity in the constitution of our nature and its authority in God's Word: "The powers that be are ordained of God;" that it is clothed with authority and power which transcend all human institutions, and so becomes the heaven-ordained and heaven-commissioned agent representing the divine authority among men.

The Jewish nation was a theocracy. God was their King. The Ten Commandments were their constitution. John Calvin and the Reformers set up the Genevan Republic. All the material was found at Mt. Sinai. William the Silent and the Reformers of Holland set up the Dutch Republic. Every stone in that temple was taken from Sinai. Ever since the Barons, on the meadows of Runnymede, with drawn swords, compelled King John, on June 5, 1215, to sign the Magna Charta, England has been a constitutional government. And when Pope Innocent III. ordered them to destroy the Great Charter, the Barons replied: "It was not the Pope's business to meddle with temporal affairs." Pym, Hampden, Sidney, Cromwell, and the Puritans gave England civil and religious liberty. The National Covenant of Scotland, sworn and subscribed at Grayfriar's Church, Feb. 28, 1638, was the constitution of Scotland. Knox, Melville, Henderson and the Covenanters gave Scotland civil and religious liberty.

In 1620 the Pilgrim Fathers brought the Magna Charta to America. Before landing on Plymouth Rock, while in the cabin of the Mayflower, they drafted a constitution which began: "In the name of God, amen. For the glory of God and the maintenance of the Christian faith," etc. Hume said: "The Puritans shipped themselves off to America, and laid there the foundations of a government which possessed all the liberty, civil and religious, of which they found themselves bereaved in their native country." All the colonial charters and compacts contained the principle embodied in the famous ordinance of 1787, which gave rise to the settlement of the Northwestern Territory, in these words: "Religion, morality and knowledge are essential to good government." Bancroft identifies the Declaration of Independence with the Christian Institutes of John Calvin. John Knox carried the Institutes from Geneva to Scotland. The Scotch Covenanters brought them to North Carolina. In 1774 they incorporated their principles in the famous Mecklenburg Declaration. In 1776 Jefferson recast the Mecklenburg Declaration and called it the Declaration of Independence. Our Declaration is the grandchild of Calvin's Institutes. The constitutions of the thirteen original States "invoked a religious sanction and the authority of God upon their civil enactments." In all the inaugural addresses of our Presidents there has been a recognition of the responsibility of all nations in general, and of ours in particular, to "the Governor among the nations." In forty-two out of forty-four State constitutions God and his law are recognized. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in 1824, declared that Christianity is the common law of this land. The Supreme Court of the United States, last May, in a decision delivered by Judge Brewer, declared: "This is a Christian nation." The chaplaincies in our army and navy, in congressional and legislative halls, the Bible in our public schools, the oath in our courts of justice, the oath of office, our marriage laws, our laws guarding the Christian Sabbath, our laws making blasphemy and profanity punishable, etc., these are but the details of the great leading fact, that Christianity is the common law in our land; i. e., this is a Christian nation. Writers distinguish between the nation and its government. The nation is the creature of God, born in his providence, maintained by his bounty, and responsible to him for its character and conduct. The government is the agent set up by the nation to carry out its will. Now, a Christian nation ought to have a Christian government.

I. Because the character of the nation is ultimately determined by the character of the government; and if the nation be morally above its government, either the nation must bring the government up to its level at the first, or else the government will bring the nation down to its level at the last. In the book of Kings it is stated twenty-three times that "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, made Israel to sin," in worshipping idols. The nation was confirmed in idolatry; and in the days of the later kings she was so steeped in idolatry that God carried the people captive to Babylon and placed them in the furnace of slavery, and kept them there for seventy years, until the dross of idolatry was taken away, and they never fell into that sin to this day.

In the year 800, when Charlemagne had the iron crown placed upon his head by Pope Leo III., France became, and was ever after, recognized as "the eldest son of the church." In 1598 Henry IV. issued that famous decree—the Edict of Nantes. Under it the Huguenots flourished. But in 1685, Louis XIV., after a series of detestable dragonnades, signed its revocation. Then 400,000 Protestants—the best and bravest—quit France. That nation has ever since been tossed in the trough of the waves of infidelity and Romish superstition. "The greatest outbreak of atheism in modern times," says one, "was in France shortly before the French Revolution. Now the Protestants had been extirpated by Louis XIV., the Huguenots were driven out of France, and it was left purely Catholic. In two generations the whole intellect of the country had gone over into atheism. Dr. Priestly says almost the only men of eminence not atheists were Voltaire and Rousseau. Rousseau was brought up in Geneva; Voltaire was a great student of English Protestant writers, like Locke, Newton, etc. As soon as free thought broke out of the Catholic church, it went directly into atheism. There was no stopping-place. Blanco White testifies the same about Spain. Protestantism was rooted out of Spain by the Inquisition. The same thing was true of Italy. Protestantism is the safety-valve for free thought. The Roman church fastens it down, and the result is an explosion." Philip II. of Spain was a rank papist. In 1588 he built the Invincible Armada, to destroy Protestantism in England and make the papal tiara supreme in Europe. But God destroyed the fleet by a storm at sea. Spain is today a Catholic country, and that means civil liberty has disappeared. Garibaldi described Rome as a "cancer," "an imposture," as a "formidable enemy, because it exists among the ignorant classes, and is everywhere the foe of education, of enlightenment, and of progress. It rules by falsehood, because it is sacrilegiously covered with the cloak of religion. Its smile is the smile of Satan; its embrace is the embrace of death."

On the 3d of August, 1492, Columbus sailed from Spain to discover the new world. Had he kept the course pursued for the greater part of the voyage he would have landed on the coast of Florida. But by the flight of birds he was led southward and entered the mouth of the Orinoco. He set up a Roman government, and all the South American republics are now Romanized. In 1518 Cortes made the conquest of Mexico for Spain. He burned the ships behind him and played the game of war with human lives for dice. The most shocking barbarities were practiced. Robertson records the fact that fifty nobles who bore food to the Spaniards with friendly intentions, were seized, their hands cut off, and they, with their bleeding stumps, were sent back to their fellows. At last, crazed by fear and shocked by the inhuman cruelties practiced towards them, the Indians sent a delegation, saying: "If you are divinities of a cruel and savage nature, we present you five slaves that you may drink their blood and eat their flesh. If you are men, here is meat, bread and fruit to nourish you. If you are mild deities, accept our offering of incense and variegated plumes." Mexico is a magnificent country, abounding in agricultural and mineral wealth, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, over territories stretching 1,500 miles east and west, and 600 north and south. But Mexico was overshadowed by the night of Rome-rule. The priests overran the country and left poverty, ignorance and tyranny everywhere. Hon. Thomas Corwin, a minister to Mexico, said: "The great want of the people is that public opinion which is so omnipotent in the United States; and this, again, arises from the want of education. Hence, in the last fifty years, Mexico has passed through thirty-six different forms of government, and has had seventy-three presidents. The cause of causes that itself originates and gives force to all other causes, and which has destroyed public opinion, is Romanism." Rome takes the Bible from the people, keeps them in ignorance, oppresses and robs them. In 1860 it cost Mexico $8,000,000 to sustain her clergy, while the estimated value of her church property was $300,000,000; about one-third of the valuation of the whole country, and the income of which is about $20,000,000."

Philip II. established Spanish rule in India, and in the Southern part of our country. But England wrested the Indian possessions through the great warrior-statesman, Clive, and set up in British India a Protestant government; and Louis XIV. took possession of the Louisiana Territory, including the United States territory west of the Mississippi. He also pre-empted the northern lakes and the St. Lawrence. Rome seems now to have had North America in her grasp. But no. On the 13th of September, 1759, Gen. Wolfe leads his army to the Heights of Abraham, "the French fly," Quebec, capitulates, and Canada is an English possession. In 1776 the American colonists declared their independence. In 1803 the Louisiana Territory was purchased by the United States government for $15,000,000 from Napoleon I., the emperor remarking as he signed the contract: "I have made a nation." Lord Baltimore established the Maryland colony in 1628 for Rome. They sided with the Tories in the Revolution and opposed the free government. Their hand was with the Southern Confederacy, and to day they are assailing our free institutions. But this has been a Protestant nation. How did our Christian nation prepare to rule a territory greater than ever Cæsar ruled over?—In 1789 she adopted our present national Constitution. It is in many respects an admirable instrument. We regard it as a monument to the wisdom and greatness of the fathers who framed it. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, England's Premier, in a note to the Centennial Committee at Philadelphia, in 1887, said: "I regard the Constitution of the United States as the grandest instrument that has been struck off by the human mind in modern times in its relation to politics." To this we say, Amen. But morally speaking, it is secular. It does not contain the name of God. It is as silent as the grave respecting the King of kings. The words Bible and Christianity are not in it. It is a compact of political atheism. Being the supreme law in the land, it determines the character of our government. And now for more than a century it has been exerting its secularizing influence upon our Christian nation; and what with intemperance, Sabbath desecration, speedy and easy divorce, and political corruption, we are rapidly becoming a secularized nation. More than half of the people never darken a church door. Out of 7,000,000 young men 5,000,000 never go to church. It is a fact that 75 per cent of our young men attend no church, 95 per cent are not members, and 97 per cent do no work and bear no cross for Christ. There are 2,000,000 Sabbath toilers, compelled to break the Sabbath on pain of losing their positions. In the past twenty years 328,000 divorces have been granted. The liquor traffic costs our nation annually, in direct and consequential expenses, $2,000,000,000, maintains a standing army of 600,000 drunkards, and sends 60,000 men to a drunkard's grave every year. The two great political parties find their time chiefly occupied in exposing each other's political frauds. Neither the Republican nor the Democratic National Convention would entertain the proposal to acknowledge Christ in their platform. No President ever recognized Christ in his Thanksgiving proclamation. Our secular Constitution has taught our nation to ignore the "higher law." Shall this secularizing influence go on to completion, or shall we remove the fatal leaven? Goethe said: "Plant an oak in a vase, and either the vase must burst, or the oak will die." We have planted the tree of our civil and religious liberty in the vase of a secular Constitution. Shall the vase give way, or the tree perish? Save our Christian nation and amend the Constitution. Charles Sumner contended that the Constitution was anti-slavery. But after the war the 14th and 15th amendments were adopted, recognizing the rights of the black man. Let us have a 16th amendment, recognizing the right of our Saviour King.

II. Because the powers of the state come from God. The state wields tremendous powers. It has power to levy taxes, to institute a tariff, and to regulate that mighty factor in our commercial affairs—the currency. It has power to organize schools, to enter the home, take the children and educate them, without asking leave of the parents. It unites husband and wife in marriage and severs those bonds at will. It has power to draw out all the physical, intellectual and moral forces of the nation in self-defense, just as a sword is drawn from its sheath. It has the power of life and death. This power does not reside in the individual. No man has a right to take away his own life, much less to employ another to take it for him. No association of men, whether bank, railroad corporation, or syndicate, has a right to execute the criminal. Sixty-five millions of people have not the right to take the life of the most brutal murderer. That is mob law. And yet the state is every day exercising a power which does not reside in the individual or the mass. Where did it obtain this power? The only answer is, Power comes from Almighty God. As the Saviour said to Pilate: "Thou couldst have no power over me at all except it were given thee from above." In the 82nd Psalm, rulers are called "gods," because they represent God. In the 13th chapter of Romans, rulers are called "ministers of God." They receive their authority from him. God communicates this authority through the suffrage of the people. God indicates his choice in prescribing the qualifications of officers—good, upright and true. The people manifest their choice in electing such men. So it is: "Whom God and his people choose." Civil government is the arm of Jehovah, administering the affairs of his government among men. Obedience to just and legal authority is obedience to God. Rebellion against just and legal authority is rebellion against God. Patriotism is not mere political sentiment; it is a duty to God. Rebellion is not mere mistaken political sentiment; it is treason against God. "And they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation."

But the Pope claims supremacy. Louis the Pious, son of Charlemagne, submitted the division of his empire to the confirmation of the Pope. When Lothaire, King of Lorraine, died, Pope Adrian II., a married man, recognized Louis, his brother, as king. But Charles the Bald seized the government. The Pope wrote: "Impious king, we order thee to retire from the kingdom of Lorraine and to surrender it to the Emperor Louis. If thou refusest submission to our will, we will ourselves go into France to excommunicate thee and drive thee from thy wicked throne." But he went not. Charles was unmoved. Then the Pope caught him by guile. He wrote to Charles: "We retract our former decisions. We declare you king. We, however, beseech you to keep this letter a secret from your nephew Louis." Charles bowed and went to Rome. As the Pope placed the crown on his brow, he said: "Do not forget, prince, that the popes have the right to create emperors." In 1164 Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor of Germany, was at war with Pope Alexander III. The Pope triumphed. Frederick went to Venice to meet Alexander and beg absolution and forgiveness. "When the emperor arrived in the presence of the Pope, he laid aside his imperial mantle, and knelt on both knees, with his breast on the earth. Alexander advanced and placed his foot on his neck, while the cardinals thundered forth in loud tones, 'Thou shalt tread upon the cockatrice, and crush the lion and the dragon.' Frederick exclaimed: 'Pontiff, this prediction was made of St. Peter, and not of thee.' 'Thou liest,' replied Alexander; 'it is written of the apostle and of me;' and, bearing all the weight of his body on the neck of the prince, he compelled him to silence. He then permitted him to rise, and gave him his blessing; after which the whole assembly thundered forth the 'Te Deum.'" The next day Frederick kissed the feet of Alexander, and, on foot, led his horse by the bridle as he returned from solemn mass to the pontifical palace. Pope Boniface IV. wrote to King Athelbert of England: "If any king succeeding, or any bishop, clergyman, or laic, shall essay to infringe the decrees of the popes, he shall incur the anathema of Peter and his all successors." Pope Innocent III. wrote to Otho of Saxony: "By the authority which God has given us in the person of St. Peter, we declare you king, and we order the people to render you, in this capacity, homage and obedience. We, however, shall expect you to subscribe to all our desires as a return for the imperial crown." But the German crown was taken from Otho by Philip. Then the Pope recognized Philip as Emperor. "When Pope Adrian IV. granted Ireland to Henry II. and authorized him to subjugate the Irish people, he did so expressly upon the ground that it 'belonged to the Holy See' by a divine right, and that he could dispose of it as seemed good to him; asserting, at the same time, the right in all the popes to dispose of every country where Christianity has been received. Innocent III. declared that his power came directly from heaven, and was based 'on a divine ordinance;' and that the authority of princes was derived from him; wherefore he gave away crowns, disposed of governments, and transferred people from one allegiance to another, in the name of God and the church. And Boniface VIII, in his bull Unum Sanctum—which remains a part of the canon law—sets forth the doctrine that temporal governments should be conducted 'for the church,' and 'that for every human being subjection to the Pope was necessary for salvation;' deriving the tremendous power he asserted directly from God alone." When the Austrian government, in 1855, abolished the Concordat, allowing liberty of all opinions—liberty of the press, of faith, and of instructions in the schools—the Pope characterized the act as inimical to the church, as "in flagrant contradiction with the doctrines of the Catholic religion;" and by virtue of the power which he claimed to have derived directly from Christ, he declared all the acts and decrees in that respect "null and powerless in themselves and in effect, both as regards the present and the future." In 1870 the French troops were withdrawn from Rome. Prussia humbled France, and the German Empire is unified. The Pope stormed in the Vatican. Bismarck passed the Falk laws. But the Pope's bull was too powerful. The laws were nullified.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

BY REV. H. A. FISCHER.

The Executive Committee of Wheaton College have requested me to act as financial agent for the year, for the two-fold purpose of soliciting donations for the current expenses of the year and also raising one hundred thousand dollars before the first of October, 1893. The work seems a large one; and yet the silver and the gold and the cattle on a thousand hills are all the Lord's, and with him nothing is impossible. As I enter upon this work I wish, first, to ask the prayers of all the readers of the Cynosure that whatever may be accomplished may be for God's glory; second, to enlist their co-operation.

I have been acquainted with the work of this institution for over a quarter of a century and feel entirely warranted in recommending it to all the friends of Christian education, especially to those who are in favor of various Christian reforms. Of the one hundred and sixteen young men graduated in the past, forty-four per cent have entered upon or are preparing for the Christian ministry, as well as two of the young women. They have been faithful and successful in their work. At present a large number of the students are looking forward to the ministry or to missionary service. The need of an educated ministry need not be dwelt on at length. Paul, the chief apostle to the Gentiles, was the one who sat at the feet of Gamaliel; Luther, the great reformer of the sixteenth century, was a professor in a university; the Wesleys were university students; so, also, was Clarkson, who began the anti-slavery reform in England. While it is true that no amount of education will be of any special service to the world unless it is sanctified, it is also true that the Holy Spirit can make use of all the powers of men—physical, intellectual and spiritual—and the more thoroughly the young men and young women of the present age can be trained intellectually, if at the same time their spiritual natures are not neglected, the better it will be for our country and for the world.

In addition to this, I feel that Wheaton College has a special claim on all who are interested in the Anti-masonic reform. When a preliminary meeting was held at Aurora, Ill., for the organization of the National Christian Association, Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, then president of Wheaton College, as most of the Cynosure readers doubtless remember, took a prominent part in the proceedings, and seven young men, students of Wheaton College, distributed hand-bills through the streets of the city, calling attention to the meeting. From that day to this, teachers, graduates and students of the College have been thoroughly and actively interested in this reform.

Among the graduates whose names are familiar in this connection, are Rev. J. P. Stoddard, agent of the New England Association; Mrs. E. A. Cook, Recording Secretary; H. L. Kellogg, Corresponding Secretary; C. A. Blanchard, E. R. Worrell and Edgar Wylie, Directors of the National Christian Association; A. R. Dodd, President of the New York State Association; W. L. Enlow, Treasurer of the Iowa State Association, and E. D. Bailey, formerly Secretary of the New England Association. The above, together with the pastors of churches who are graduates of the College, and who have, without exception, as far as I know, remained outside of all secret societies, have constituted a powerful factor in this reform. In addition, a number of persons might be mentioned who were students at the College, but did not complete their courses; among them W. B. Stoddard, who has so successfully carried forward the work in and about Washington, D. C. There are no members of secret societies on the Board of Trustees or in the Faculty, and neither are students permitted to attend such societies. It therefore seems proper to call on all the friends of this reform to do what they can to provide means needed by the institution.

There are in and about the city of Chicago five institutions known as colleges or universities. Of these, Wheaton has the smallest endowment funds, but in spite of this, our attendance has been increasing of late years, so that the term that has just opened is the most fully attended fall term, as far as I am aware, in the record of the institution. In order to teach successfully the two hundred or more young people who are here now, and the hundreds who are, as we trust, coming, we need more appliances in the way of buildings, apparatus and libraries, as well as an increased teaching force. During the last four or five years the members of the Faculty have received their salaries nearly in full; but this has only been made possible by a great deal of hard outside work on the part of President Blanchard, which has taxed his strength to the utmost, and which the increased duties within the institution make it impossible for him to render this year.

Will not, therefore, all who have been helpers of the College in the past, and all other readers of the Cynosure, make this a matter of earnest prayer, and then render such assistance as may be in their power? It may be that there are some whose attention will be called to this article who are nearing the bounds of this life, and who would like to build for themselves a monument better than those that can be erected of marble or granite. We shall be very glad to learn of any such, who may be moved to make some provision for the institution in their wills. Possibly some may prefer to give what they would like to bestow in this way, now, on condition that they be permitted to retain a life-interest in the property thus left to the institution. Plans could doubtless be devised, on consultation, which would be satisfactory to the friends making the donation, and would at the same time be of material assistance in securing the whole sum which we desire to secure before October first, 1893.

Let me hear from you. If practicable, I shall be glad to call on all those, within a reasonable distance, who would like to have a personal conference with me as to the best way in which they can serve God and their fellow-men in connection with Wheaton College.

The work of the College has been heartily commended by many whom Christians delight to honor for their work's sake; among them D. L. Moody, Joseph Cook, Dr. E. P. Goodwin, Dr. Joseph E. Roy, Miss Frances E. Willard, F. G. Ensign and Pres. W. G. Ballantine, of Oberlin College. It gives me great pleasure to close this article with a letter recently received from the last-named co-laborer in the work of Christian education:

"OBERLIN, O., October 3, 1892.

"Mr. H. A. Fischer, Wheaton, Illinois:

"DEAR SIR:—In reply to your letter of the 29th ult., I would say that the Wheaton College graduates who have entered Oberlin Seminary have taken a very high rank. They have commanded the respect of their teachers and classmates by their scholarship and character. What is best of all, they have shown a moral earnestness, which in these days is very rare. I do not remember one who was not an honor to his Alma Mater. Very cordially yours,

W. G. BALLANTINE."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The endowment orders and Governor Russell.—Young people's societies and the lodge.—An antiquarian treasure.—Mt. Holyoke girls and prohibition.—The Sunday papers.—Sensational journalism.—Rev. J. M. Foster at Music Hall.

The most quiet of all presidential campaigns is the present one, nor is the gubernatorial contest in Massachusetts very exciting. The abolition of the poll-tax may give the Democrats a few more votes, but one of the chief agents which will help forward the re-election of their candidate, Gov. Russell, is the endowment orders, who will be likely to remember how he stooped to curry favor with them last winter. Massachusetts, however, rarely goes Democratic the second year, and to do so the third consecutive time would be an unprecedented happening in Bay State politics.

The Epworth League, which has just closed a grand meeting at Worcester, brought out some interesting speeches as well as much enthusiasm. "Make your league interesting to young men," was the gist of one made by a Connecticut pastor. "Keep them from the saloon and give them something to do." If the speaker had but added, "Keep them from the lodge;" that subtle foe which is throttling the grand old church of the Wesleys, and feeding the saloon with multitudes of the children of her members who have learned to smoke and drink in its secret precincts. These Epworth leagues and Christian Endeavor societies need to have the light turned on.

There are plenty of silly women who are unable to see beyond the fuss and feathers of a Knight Templar's parade and actually believe that it is a modern resurrection of olden chivalry. I was struck, the other day, with this passage from Dr. Arnold, in which the great, clear-thinking Englishman says: "If I were called upon to name what spirit of evil predominately deserved the name of anti-Christ, I should name the spirit of chivalry—the more detestable for the very guise of archangel ruined which has made it so seductive to the most generous spirits . . . essentially Celtic and barbarian;—incompatible with the highest virtue of which man is capable, and the last at which he arrives—a sense of justice, it sets up the personal allegiance to the chief above all allegiance to God and law." This trenchant paragraph puts Knight Templarism precisely in the place it ought to occupy in the mind of every thinking Christian, as not only a sham based on a sham, but the modern development of that spirit of anti-Christ, the distinguishing and essential principle of which is to set itself above all law, human or divine.

An antiquarian treasure was found in an old barn in Hartford, Conn., a few months ago—no less than some ancient chests filled to the brim with old colonial records and papers; among them the pay and muster rolls of the Connecticut troops in the French and Indian war. The fact that the owners had not the slightest idea of their great interest and value suggests the thought that there may be other antiquarian "finds," perhaps as valuable, hid away, dusty and neglected, which might shed light on many dim passages in our colonial history. Those were grim times, when the farmer had to work with his gun by his side, and his good wife had to do her spinning and her churning by the light from windows that were mere slits in the walls, made purposely as high as one's head to keep the hostile Indians from looking in and spying out the weakness of the household garrison. A popular calendar engraving, entitled, "A Scene in King Philip's War," gives one a vivid idea of the constant fear and unrest in which these early settlers must have lived. A woman, young and fair, dressed in quaint Puritan garb, is going home from church through a dense wood. There is a gray wintry sky overhead; the ground is covered with snow; you can almost hear the chill sough of the wind through the branches. She pauses in startled terror, while her male companion grasps his trusty fire-lock, for both have caught a glimpse of the treacherous savage lurking behind the trees. Talk of those times being slow, when men and women lived ages in a moment with only a step between them and the horrors of Indian captivity and a torturing death! Apropos to this, Connecticut papers lately chronicled the death of the last of the powerful Narragansett tribe, killed by that worst foe of his race, American firewater. If it was of the same kind as that sold to his red brothers farther west, and which when recently analyzed was found to contain chiefly fusil oil, chloroform and ether, no wonder it killed him.

Mt. Holyoke girls are wide awake to the needs of the hour. They have organized a Prohibition Club, and held two enthusiastic prohibition rallies. This is in agreeable and refreshing contrast with the manner in which some collegiate students of the other sex spend their idle time, as illustrated by a New Haven item in to-day's paper, which relates how two local prize-fighters fought thirty-nine rounds before a crowd of Yale men for a purse of $200. What good can the higher education do such young men? It can overlay, like coarse veneering, their natural brutishness, but not hide it. These sons of rich men, from whom their money has seemed to eliminate all brains, decency or moral sense, are the scandal and disgrace of Harvard and Yale.

Mr. Carpenter, of the Advertiser, when addressing the Methodist preachers at Wesleyan Hall, on a recent Monday, gave them a hit which I fear some popular preachers in other denominations might well take to themselves. After picturing the hard life led by a newspaper reporter from early Monday morning till late Saturday night, he quietly asked the audience if they did not think that after such a day of hard labor he had well-earned a day of rest. Hearty responses of "Yes, yes," came from all parts of the hall, when Mr. Carpenter, stepping to the edge of the platform, put this unexpected query: "Tell me, then, why some of you go to the newspaper offices on Saturday afternoon and ask to have a reporter sent the next day to report your sermons?"

Sensational journalism has outdone itself and added another chapter of shameful outrage to those already heaped on the unfortunate and cruelly persecuted Miss Borden. The Boston Globe, with its Irish Catholic affinities, caught eagerly at the clumsy fiction which not only pretended to give proof of her guilt, but assailed her honor as a woman. Evidences are continually multiplying in the eyes of thoughtful observers that Romanism has somehow a hidden hand in the business. I for one am heartily glad that the Globe has had to go down on its knees, metaphorically speaking, and "eat humble pie," and only wish that the lesson might be clinched by some heavy suits for libel brought by the family of Miss Borden. If such an outrage is allowed to go unpunished, where is the home whose sanctity may not be invaded? Where is the man or woman, however pure and innocent, that can escape the slimy coils of reportorial scandal mongers? The whole affair is a shame to American journalism. It is a pity that some of the best features of the Parisian journals could not be imported along with the Paris fashions;—such, for instance, as the custom of signing the writer's name to every article, even to the reporters and interviewers, thus making them personally responsible for their printed words. The Traveller, almost alone among the Boston dailies, refused to publish the atrocious piece of fiction;—not the first time that it has nobly stood like a breakwater against the stream of impurity and scandal which make so much of our daily press really nothing but a vast moral sewer.

A fine picture of J. M. Foster appears in the last British American, together with a full report of his grand sermon in Music Hall on "The State and Romanism." Never has this burning topic been more ably or exhaustively handled, or the law of God in all its naked majesty set in more vivid contrast to the lying traditions of Rome. "Shall the Tiber flow into the Potomac, or the Potomac flow into the Tiber?" Verily, this is a question which in the near future will demand both thought and action if we are to continue a free people.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12, 1892.

In no branch of religious and moral reform work at the national capital has there been more rapid progress than in those conducted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and by the association known as the Central Union Mission. Both have branches in various sections of the city, and while there is no connection between them they are in no sense rivals. The former has just leased and thrown open to needy and unfortunate women and girls what is to be known as the "W. C. T. U. Industrial Building," which is to be conducted solely with the idea of aiding and comforting any woman in need of either. A dressmaking establishment and laundry are to be conducted on the premises, and an employment agency will be maintained to procure employment for women; those having no homes will be taken care of until work is found for them, and women whose wages are small will be provided with comfortable rooms and good board at very low prices. The ladies of the Hope and Help Mission, who are in immediate charge of the industrial features, believe that the building will be nearly if not quite self-sustaining.

The Central Union Mission has also just secured a new and larger building than the one it has occupied for several years for its main headquarters, and as soon as it is ready for them they will occupy it. This mission does for men what the W. C. T. U. does for women, and is generally recognized as a powerful factor for good in the community. It will hold its eighth anniversary meeting next Sunday, and among those who will speak at the meeting are Hon. J. W. Foster, Secretary of State, and Justice Brewer, of the U. S. Supreme Court.

That "honesty is the best policy" is constantly being shown to all who do not shut their eyes and refuse to see. For instance, a young man came from Idaho during the late encampment, with the intention of enlisting in the United States navy. He was surprised and very much disappointed when he arrived in Washington and learned that he could not enlist until he was of age. "Swear you are old enough," said a man to the boy. "No," replied the lad; "I am two years under the age, and to swear differently would not be honest; I will wait." While walking around near the Washington monument the boy found a pocket-book containing $20. Although he had not sufficient money to pay for a bed to sleep in, the boy did not think of keeping what he had found, but turned it over to the first policeman he saw, who left it with the custodian of the Washington monument. That night the boy slept on a bench in one of the parks, and a policeman arrested him as a vagrant. The next morning when his case was called in the police court he told his story, but it seemed so improbable that the judge was not supposed to believe it and said that he must furnish bonds or be sent to workhouse. Fortunately there was a kind-hearted policeman in court who knew that the boy's story was true; he told the judge that he would become bondsman for the lad and would find him employment. This led to investigation; the judge released the lad without requiring bond, and the prosecuting attorney procured him a situation. The custodian of the monument still has the pocket-book and the money, and if its owner does not call for it within thirty days it will be turned over to the lad who found it, and whose honesty would not allow him to keep it without making an effort to find the owner, notwithstanding his urgent need. Who wouldn't be proud to be the mother or father of that boy?

Up to yesterday afternoon, President Harrison thought he might be able to go to New York for the purpose of reviewing the Columbus Day parade, but after consulting Mrs. Harrison's physician he abandoned the idea. All of the members of the Cabinet are in New York; also Chief Justice Fuller, who could not sit in the Chicago lake front cases which are being argued to-day before the Supreme Court.

This week the case involving the constitutionality of the Michigan law providing for the election of Presidential electors by Congressional districts was argued before the Supreme Court, and it is expected that a decision will be handed down before election.

It is the intention of all the Justices of the Supreme Court, except Justices Field and Lamar, who are both in bad health, to attend the dedication of the World's Fair buildings on the 21st inst. President Harrison will also go if Mrs. Harrison's condition will permit, which is extremely doubtful, as she is perceptibly weakening.

Among the distinguished ministers who came from the Episcopal convention in Baltimore to occupy Washington pulpits, last Sunday, were Bishop Leonard, of Ohio; Bishop Coleman, of Del.; Ass't Bishop Hale, of Ill.; Bishop Nicholson, of Milwaukee; Ass't Bishop Jackson, of Ala.; Canon Mills, of Canada; Archdeacon Oliver, of Neb., and Dr. Huntington of N. Y. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

Boston, Oct. 10, 1892.

It was my good fortune to listen to a part of Rev. J. M. Foster's very able address in Music Hall yesterday. He is a Christian warrior who wields the sword of the Spirit with power. He speaks as one conscious of being in the immediate presence of God, and unawed by men, institutions or the powers of darkness, and yet he is neither presumptuous, assuming or dictatorial in his manner, but tells the plain, straightforward truth, which he enforces with a wonderful array of facts. His third lecture on Romanism was fairly well attended, and many of his points evoked hearty approval from the appreciative audience. In deference to his convictions, the organ was silent and Psalms only were sung in the praise service. I was glad of an opportunity to hand to each one who wished in the retiring audience a 48-page pamphlet, containing three of the speaker's addresses on reforms, among them one entitled "The Church and Secret Societies," which provoked no little criticism at the time it was delivered, in March last. These documents will be carefully read by some of the most independent thinkers and actors in Boston, and as they are "brimful" of facts they cannot fail to accomplish great good.

This Boston lecture course on the evils and dangers of Romanism has already done a great work in Boston, and far beyond the narrow "rim of the Hub" by encouraging others; and its projector and most indefatigable supporter, B. F. Bradbury, is deserving of the gratitude of every true American. But few know what a burden this man has carried on his heart, on his mind, and on his pocket-book, while taking the responsibility and going forward when many who are equally interested in the preservation of our free schools and civil liberties have either criticised or treated the movement with silent indifference. It is much easier to criticise than to step to the front and shoulder the responsibility, and it is much easier to sit down in a spacious auditorium, cozy and cheerful, with good music, on a Sabbath afternoon and listen for an hour to the best platform talent in America, than it is to pay the bills. Romanism is marshaled under the shrewdest, most unscrupulous leadership that ever planned a campaign for the conquest of America, and her army is drunk (if not yet with the blood of the saints in America) yet with that bitter religious enthusiasm which made the slaughter of St. Bartholomew a "gold day" for fiends in human form. To sleep in the face of such a foe to human liberty is infamous and suicidal to all that is dear to the heart of a Christian patriot.

I may be pardoned for a single suggestion as to how those very valuable services may be continued, with increased influence, for good. Let the discussion proceed upon the principle underlying the whole infamous structure, and attack it in whatever form, or under whatever name, it appears. To condemn cunning, craft and priestism in the Society of Jesuits, and to ignore or approve, by silence, cunning, craft and priestism in Masonry or the system of secret societies is neither consistent or Christian. The danger from Romanism, or from the Society of Jesuits, is not in the name but in the detestable principles which inspire their actions; and the same principles are equally odious and repugnant to Christian patriotism under the name of Freemasonry, or any other title. I trust the day is not distant when the management at Music Hall will recognize and act upon this broad, consistent Christian basis and give the trumpet no uncertain sound in the conflict against craft, cunning, priestism and the enemies of our free institutions, wherever found.

I spoke, last evening, to a very intelligent and appreciative audience in the Baptist church at Jamaica Plains, on Temperance. The cause has evidently warm friends in this delightful suburb of Boston, and the Prohibitionists intend to be counted at the polls in the approaching election. One Republican Prohibitionist got very much excited, and so I inferred that my efforts had not been entirely void of results. If people can only be induced to investigate and think, there will be but one opinion, and there will be entire unanimity of talk and voting on this burning question of the hour. As usual, in the support of any cause that requires "grit and grace," the women were about three to one man present.

Boston, Oct. 12.—Bro. E. T. McIntire, saved from twenty-one decrees of Masonry by the power of God, reports a most excellent and real Holy Ghost meeting of the New Hampshire Association, at Canterbury, on the 6th to 9th. It is estimated that some twenty-five lost ones were led to Christ. The interest was so great that Bro. and Sister Pearson remained, at the earnest solicitation of God's children, to protract the meeting. The seed so faithfully and prayerfully sown by Bro. S. C. Kimball on this field is bearing fruit, to the great joy of his heart in the glory of his dear Lord. The illness of Mrs. Stoddard prevented us from attending, but we rejoice and give thanks to God for victory.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN NEW YORK.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, N. Y., Oct. 7, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am reminded that another week has gone, and I should report.

For the third year I visit Schuyler's Lake. I do not wonder that those here who are enlightened very much desire to have the truth, as opposed to the falsity of the lodge, presented to their neighbors.

Since the lodge has had control, this town has been noted as a "hard place." I find little change for the better this year. It is supposed there is as much liquor sold as usual, and general "wickedness in high places" continues as heretofore.

The Baptist pastor has moved away during the past year. The Methodists still have a shepherd, but their condition is anything but harmonious. Rev. Mr. Tisdell, the M. E. pastor, expressed his continued dislike for Masonry when I called, but said he could not welcome me to speak in any of his churches because of the after-effect of my lectures. He found that not only were the Masons "down" on the church for letting in an anti-secrecy lecture, but their friends, also, were alienated. I suggested that he would hardly reason in this way regarding opposition to other evils. If he did, he would not say anything about the liquor traffic for fear of alienating, etc. He has been active in securing members for the Good Templars' lodge during the past year, and thus, it is thought by some, is trying to work into favor with the Masonic element.

We believe he is anxious to see people converted and added to the church, but how shortsighted the policy that thinks to win them in this way!

There are some hopeful features of our work here. So far as I can learn, since we have begun the annual distribution of tracts from house to house, there have been but two accessions to the lodge, and one of these was the saloon-keeper.

Last Sabbath I spoke twice to good audiences in the Lutheran church, at Hartwick Seminary. Last year I lectured to the students in the seminary. I was glad to learn that since the question has been discussed in their literary societies, many have expressed themselves on the right side.

Prof. Kistler and his estimable wife made me more than welcome to their home. I have invited the professor to address us at our State Convention, but he was not sure that he could accept, owing to college and other duties. We shall hope he may arrange to be with us. Bro. Angell and wife, and others from this county, will attend if possible.

I hope soon to visit friends nearer the place of our gathering. Let all who can come and bring their neighbors. Let those who cannot come pray for God's blessing to attend this meeting. Send any contribution you may have to the State work to Lucius Woodruff, Binghamton, N. Y., Treasurer. W. B. STODDARD.

A ROUSING ANTI-SECRECY CONFERENCE IN KANSAS.

WINCHESTER, Kan., Oct. 8, 1892.

The Covenanter Presbytery of Kansas met in Winchester, Kan., in the evening of Oct. 4. A program had been arranged for Conference meetings to be held during its sessions. The evening of the 5th was to be devoted to the discussion of secret societies, and Rev. Messrs. Gault and Paden had been invited to make the leading addresses. Word was received that Bro. Gault had just returned home for a little very much needed rest after his exhaustive labors in the field, and that expectation of his presence was vain.

When the hour arrived, a large audience had gathered, consisting of the large Kansas Presbytery, the large Covenanter congregation of Winchester, and others from the town and vicinity.

Bro. Paden was on hand.

Bro. Chalmers, of the U. P. church, was supplying the vacant U. P. pulpit in Winchester, and was present, both by personal interest and by invitation.

The evening was occupied by these brethren with speeches of unusual originality and power. They lost no time on irrelevant issues, but went straight to the mark, with a calm dignity that commanded admiration, with a force of logic that was irresistible, and with a spirit of Christian candor and sincerity that disarmed criticism. It is not often the privilege, even of Covenanters, to hear such radical reform sentiments avowed in such a superior manner, with such an admirable mixture of clearness, force, absolute fearlessness, and kindness. It was the most invigorating tonic, moral, mental, and even physical, that the writer has received in many a day. All were delighted.

A ringing vote was passed, thanking these brethren for their able and satisfactory addresses, heartily endorsing the views expressed, and assuring them of our sympathy with the reform they so earnestly advocated.

These brethren are both young men. The former has been in the field only for a short time, but has already proved his fitness for the work. The latter, by the address above referred to, al-

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANTI-SECRECY WORK FAITHFULLY PERFORMED.

582 Toledano St., (Near St. Dennis St.) }
NEW ORLEANS, La., Oct., 6, '92. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since the receipt of the first installment of tracts a year ago, to date, I have distributed them as means would permit in every village, town and city in the United States and Canada, and have extended their circulation to England, the West Indies, the Bermudas, Hayti, Africa, and to persons in any part of the world where secretism has made any encroachment or is likely to. Besides occasional purchases of various periodicals, I subscribe for six different papers, religious and secular, and am thus able to keep well-informed as to persons and events all over the world. I usually address two or three different tracts to a minister, teacher or promising student and others in any place to where my attention may be directed by any circumstance whatever.

God, in his wisdom—praise his holy name!—will not permit me to see the result of this work which I try to do, with lips to dust; but it is impossible for me to restrain the feeling, every now and then, that some one is praying for me as I scatter precious seed beside the King's thoroughfares.

Engaged in secular work, my time and money are both severely restricted to imperious demands; hence my work is slow but sure. Nothing is wasted. Our little messages are never sent at random, but to living, thinking persons of whose identity there can be no question. Both first and third-class postage are used, as may be required. I am at present sending out about 200 tracts weekly. Deeply impressed with the sense of the ravages made upon the Christian church and civilization by this arrogant, audacious and monstrous foe, and viewing with no little apprehension the unconcern of my beloved brethren as regards this evil, I am impelled to have recourse to frequent prayer, to study and the most active application, in the hope that the Christ, our precious Redeemer, may use the humble means employed to the purging, to the unifying of his dearest love, his own members, his blood-bought church.

I wish I could recount to you personal reminiscences illustrative of the foregoing subject, but time will not permit; however, I cannot refrain from mentioning one of many pleasing incidents noticed as a sequence to the work I have laid out to do ere the Master calls me. Within the last two or three weeks there appeared in our church paper, the Christian Recorder, of 631 Pine street, Philadelphia, an editorial remarkable for its unprecedented position against societies in general, and its vigor in denunciation. Its editor, an able and learned man, represents a church wherein about 60 per cent of its members are, or have been, connected with secret societies, including bishops, general officers, elders, and both male and female laity. To their credit be it said, secessions are being made from these rivals of the church, though seldom openly declared.

Some time ago I sent a tract to a pastor in one of the largest M. E. churches in a metropolitan city, and attending services at said church. The following Sunday I was gratified to hear him advise his members against the danger of secret societies and wittily held them up to ridicule. There was a sensation, and I was surprised at his courage. He still holds the fort. To God be the glory, through Jesus his beloved Son and our precious Intercessor, forever and forever! Your brother,

THOS. R. GRIFFIN.

ANTI-SECRECY WORK IN INDIA.

BOMBAY, India, Sept. 9, 1892.

We have been dispatching those excellent pamphlets, "Stories of the Gods," and "Are Secret Societies a Blessing or a Curse?" Going out to many hundreds of missionaries and mission-workers, these will prove highly awakening and educative. I am sure they will do a vast amount of good. If it were the Lord's will, I would rejoice to have a large stock of anti-secrecy literature to advertise for sale. As it is, the small means of our Watchman repository only allow us to order small lots, as we get in small sums of money from our sales. It has been deeply impressed upon my heart that the Lord is going to enlarge our work in some manner—I know not in what direction. I am simply looking to him for guidance.

MODERN WOODMEN.

CHICAGO, October 10, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The following facts concerning this secret order are taken from the official documents of the order as they are recorded in the "History and Proceedings, Head Camp, Modern Woodmen of America," 1880-1886:

It is a secret society, organized in 1882, for improvement and benefit, with insurance features. It calls itself a benevolent and benefit society. It has realistic ceremonies, which teach the Roman mysteries of woodcraft (whatever that may be). (See page 3.)

Its only religious ceremonies are funeral and burial services; and its doors are thus left open to the Jew and Gentile, the Catholic and the Protestant, the Agnostic and the Atheist. Men of whatever nationality or belief can unite, says the history of this fraternity, 1880-1886.

The authorized record says that the history of the order is found in the history of its Head Consul, J. C. Root, of Lyons, of Iowa, he being the author of the ritual and work of the Modern Woodmen. The history of the order states that previous to his organization of Modern Woodmen, as well as now, he was an active member of the Masonic, Odd-Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Legion of Honor and of the V. A. S. fraternities; and that he "brings to the M. W. A. a ripe experience which has added much to its progress." (Page 19.)

Of its ritual, this history says: "Its original and pleasing ritual, based upon ancient usage, but entirely different from any secret work now in use, is pronounced by thirty-second-degree Masons as creditable to the author and fit to rank with the sublimest conceptions of ritual writers." (Page 18.)

LITERATURE.

ASSASSINATION OF LINCOLN: A History of the Great Conspiracy; the Trial of the Conspirators by a Military Commission, and a Review of the Trial of John H. Surratt. By T. M. Harris, Late Brigadier-General U. S. V., and Major-General by Brevet—A Member of the Commission. One Vol. 8 vo., pp. 419. Boston, Mass.: American Citizen Company, 7 Bromfield street. 1892.

The story of this fine volume is not new to those who had attained to years of discretion when the war of the Southern Rebellion closed, twenty-seven years ago; but as few works for popular reading have entered into the details attending the capture, trial and punishment of those operations of secret societies that led to the assassination of President Lincoln, while at the same time they should be familiar to every student, it is proper that the scenes of those terrible days should be recalled and reviewed by one who participated, as did the author of this book, in the official investigation of the crime. The conspiracy of which he writes was that which resorted to the policy of assassination as a means to give aid to the rebellion. To unveil the story and reduce it to a connected narrative Mr. Harris does not trust alone to his own memory of the trial, but properly avails himself of the government records of the testimony given at the trial.

One point, however, of the narration will have special interest for the readers of the Cynosure, and that is the direct connection of the conspiracy and its bloody work with the secret oath-bound societies which were formed for its instigation, under the names of the "Knights of the Golden Circle" and "The Order of American Knights." These institutions, it is evident, "had their origin in the South, preparatory to secession and war; but" (says Mr. Harris) "after the war commenced, it was chiefly in the North that they were useful to the Rebel cause; and it was through these that the assassination of the President-elect was to have been accomplished at Baltimore when on his way to the capital in 1861," in order to prevent his inauguration. "By these secret organizations the enemies of the government, wherever they might be, possessed the means of a secret recognition amongst their members; and under whatever circumstances they might be placed, the obligations of their oaths afforded them confidence and security. They constituted a brotherhood, and by their secret grips, signs, passwords, etc., they had a guarantee of unity of sentiment, and of purpose, and of faithfulness to each other and to the obligations of their oaths. These organizations were regarded as allies by the Rebel government, and were counted on as a valuable factor to secure the success of its arms." This element in the North kept itself in constant communication with the Rebel government and the Rebel armies, and thus, in a large degree, filled the place of spies in giving information." To further assist in this work, the Rebel government posted Southern citizens in Canada, whom Mr. Harris designates as "Davis's Canada Cabinet," and these had others aiding them in subordinate positions. At the trial for the extradition of the St. Albans (Vt.) raiders, this "cabinet" claimed, under oath, to be acting as agents of the Rebel government. With these secret societies originated the assassination of Lincoln and the attempted murder of Mr. Seward. The ringleaders suffered the ignominious death which they merited, and their aiders and abettors were banished and imprisoned.

Mr. Harris' book is a welcome addition to the history of the times in which we live.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Arena for October will attract thoughtful readers by its variety and ability. Thos. E. Watson, who created considerable furor in the House of Representatives by his charge of drunkenness among Congressmen, appears in a timely paper on the Negro Question in the South. He does not believe in federal interference, but shows that the only solution of the problem is a division of the vote among white and black. Congressman Brosius discusses the plan of limiting the number of federal representatives. Rev. Thomas P. Hughes, D.D., answers Ibn Ishak in a contribution entitled, Has Islam a Future? Under the title, The True Character of Christopher Columbus, A. P. Dunlop gives a severe arraignment of the man, quoting numerous authorities. One of the most notable features of this issue is the closing of the symposium on woman's dress, prepared under the auspices of the National Council of Women of America. The papers in this issue are by Lady Harborton, of England, Octavia W. Bates, Ph. D., Grace Greenwood and Mrs. E. M. King. The editor also supplements this symposium with a striking editorial entitled, The Next Forward Step for Women. This paper is illustrated. Among other leading features of this issue should be mentioned the illustrated sketch of Edward Hugh Sothorn, the young American actor; the continuation of the Bacon-Shakespeare discussion; a striking paper on astrology, by Edgar Lee, of London, and a paper by Sylvester Baxter on The Social and Economic Influences of the Bicycle. Boston: Arena Publishing Co.

The October issue of the Cosmopolitan concludes the thirteenth volume of this enterprising monthly, and fully sustains its good reputation. There is a copiousness of illustration in the popular high-art that distinguishes the embellishment of this periodical, and a variety of topics, ably handled, that will attract attention and repay perusal. Among them are the following: Munich as an Art Center, with many copies of notable paintings, by Chas. DeKay; An Old Southern School, introducing several portraits of well-known persons educated therein, by Nathaniel T. Taylor; Totokcmila and Lisayæ (poem), illustrated, by John V. Cheney; A Persian's Praise of Persian Ladies, illustrated, by Ruel B. Karib; The Great Railway Systems of the United States—the South Atlantic Railways, illustrated, by Pres. H. B. Plant, the Southern railway magnate; Three Forms, by Jonathan Sturges, illustrated; Liberal Tendencies in Europe, by Murat Halstead; At Midsummer (poem), by Louise Chandler Moulton; Some Phases of Contemporary Journalism, by John A. Cockerill, illustrated; Mr. Taswell Langdon in Seville, by Marrion Wilcox; As to Certain Accepted Heroes, by Henry Cabot Lodge; To Dante (poem), by Edgar Fawcett; New Mexican Folk Songs, by Chas. F. Lummis; The Discontinuance of the Guide-board, by Thos. Wentworth Higginson; Social Strugglers, illustrated, by H. H. Boyesen; The Human Eye as Affected by Civilization, illustrated, by D. B. St. John Roosa. Published in New York City.

Our Day for October presents a fine photogravure of Whittier for a frontispiece, accompanied by his autobiography. W. F. Crafts contributes another paper on the Closing of the World's Fair on Sunday. No man better understands the obligation of keeping the Christian Sabbath holy. Facts and Fancies of the Higher Criticism form Joseph Cook's Boston Monday Lecture, which will be sure to find interested readers. Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D.D., explains the Failure of Catholic Public Schools; Ex-Pres. Cyrus Hamlin treats of the Latest Andover Attack on the American Board. Vital Points of Expert Opinion embrace Senator Hoar on the Presidential Campaign; The Growth of Afro-American Population in the United States; Compulsory Voting; The Truth about the Salvation Army; Industrial Progress in the South, and President Harrison's Letter of Acceptance. In Questions to Specialists, Rev. W. F. Crafts dwells on the Causes of Lawlessness in the Homestead Labor Riots; and Book Notices and the editors' department contain much of interest, with passing comment. Published at 28 Beacon street, Boston, Mass.

The Social Economist for October, as its title indicates, discusses several questions of interest, and of more or less importance, touching the public welfare. It may be well to state, in introducing this periodical to Cynosure readers, that it favors the Republican policy of protection to home industries and the advancement of the people in social and economic doctrines. The list of subjects treated, and their authors, is as follows: Rights of Employers, by H. F. Henry, Jr.; The Hub of Social Evolution (Boston); Is Personal Liberty Desirable? by Joel Benton; Temperance Saloons ("Holly-Tree-Inns," etc.), G. T. Ferris; Edward Atkinson and His Economic Methods—a Review; Democracy, Past and Present, by Theodore Cox; Current Economic Discussion, by "Free Lance"; The Editorial Crucible—notes and comments,—and Book Reviews. Published monthly at 34 Union Square, East, New York, by the College of Social Economics. $2.00 per annum.

American Gardening for October is an excellent number. The illustrated papers are: A New Agave; Cherries Under Glass; A Home-made Dibber; Among the Flowers and Vegetables; And Old City Garden; Gardening in New Orleans; Double and Early Flowering Gladiolas; The Golden-Rods; A Hoop-iron Hoe; A City Lily-Tank; Cultivated Mulleins; A Study of the Native Plum; A Nursery in the Far South; Peach-trees in Pots; Pine-apple Growing in Florida; Ronunculus Colt; Taste and Tact in Arranging Ornamental Grounds—continued; Traps to Catch Winter Sunbeams; Under the Trees; Trellis for Tender Grapes, and Water-Lily Houses at Kew. There are also numerous other articles of timely and comprehensive character relating to horticulture, gardening, etc., with the usually well-filled departments that make this periodical justly a favorite visitor. LODGE NOTES.

(From Secret Society Journals.)

Bro. C. G. McMillen, mayor of Dayton, Ohio, is a "jiner." His card contains a list of twenty-five orders and societies of which he is a member. He can be interviewed by those who have new orders to introduce.

At the close of 1891 the Order of I. O. O. F. numbered 721,146 brothers, and in including the sisters of the Rebekah branch, 802,881. The aggregate revenue of the lodges and encampments of the order in 1891 amounted to $7,726,242, an increase of $183,000 over the previous year.

"I see they have started another lodge of the improved Order of Red Men in your village."

"Yes, my husband has joined it. But that's not the kind of order needed in our midst."

"No?"

"No, what is wanted is an improved order of white men."

The Illinois Odd-fellows' Orphans' Home, at Lincoln, was dedicated with appropriate ceremony, by the Grand Master of Illinois and a Provisional Grand Lodge, August 21st. The dedication ceremonies were preceded by a procession, participated in by Major General Crocker, of Chicago, and staff, eight cantons, P. M., and about seventy lodges of the subordinate and Rebekah branches of the order.

A member of a lodge in New Mexico was tried by his lodge for un-Masonic conduct in writing the following, and was acquitted: "I believe the Holy Bible to be a dangerous book, one that has been directly the cause of more outrages upon innocence and helplessness than any other cause in the history of mankind. It should be taken from the altars of Masonry as a maligner to the glorious architect of the universe, the God of nature." The Grand Lodge reversed the decision and expelled him.

They have a new kind of Masonic tramp "down East." The Times and Messenger describes them thus: "They are not the common tramp, but well-dressed gentlemen who have been at Saratoga, Coney Island, or elsewhere, and have lost their pocket-book with ticket, or had their pockets picked, and want a personal loan of $5.00 or $10.00, to be returned in a day or two when they reach home. They do not like to write home or to their lodge for fear they would be the laughing-stock of the community where they reside. If you have not a five with you, $2.00 would enable them to reach some place where they have a friend who would loan them money. It is said that by this means these gentry can travel, live in first-class style, and save a thousand dollars a year."

A new order for Scotchmen has been introduced into this country by two Scotchmen, James MacCash and John Bruce. It is for Scotchmen, their sons and grandsons. The objects of the order as laid down in the constitution are: 1. To unite Scotchmen, sons of Scotchmen, and their immediate descendants of good moral character, and possessed of some known reputable means of support, who are over eighteen years of age. 2. To establish a fund for the relief of sick members, and to ameliorate their condition in every reasonable manner. 3. To provide or establish a bequeathment fund, from which on satisfactory evidence of the death of a member, a sum not exceeding two thousand dollars shall be paid as provided by the constitution and laws of the Order of Scottish Clans relative to bequeathments and bequeathment funds. 4. To cultivate fond recollections of Scotland, its customs and amusements. 5. The Clans shall at all times be free from all political and theological sectarianism, and be subject only to the laws of God and of the land in which they respectively exist.

THE SITUATION AT HOMESTEAD.

The arrest of several members of the advisory committee of the striking union iron-workers at Homestead, Pa., resulted in their indictment by the grand jury for treason against the State of Pennsylvania. The charge is conspiring to oppose the legal authorities with force and arms and resist the laws. The effect of the conspiracy included injury to the lives and property of the Carnegie company. The progress of the case will be watched with interest in its relations to the overbearing tyranny of the secret labor societies.

The character of these unions is thus ably defined by the New York Tribune's special commissioner to Homestead, Pa., sent there during the late trouble to investigate matters there and report what he saw and learned. Here is a part of his statement: "There are saloons on or near almost every prominent corner in Homestead, perhaps forty in all, and their owners are growing rich. One of the saloon-keepers wears diamonds, is regarded as a 'high roller' in one of Pittsburgh's expensive sporting clubs, and owns much property. He is a brawny fellow, and I asked him if he had ever worked in the mills. 'Not I,' said he; 'why should I? I have over three thousand of Carnegie's men working for me.' His meaning was plain,"—the unions support the saloons.

According to the hand-book of the Federation of Labor the strength of some of the leading national unions is as follows: The Carpenters' Brotherhood leads with 65,000 members; Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, 60,000; Iron Molders' Union of North America, 41,000; International Bricklayers and Stonemasons' union, 35,000; Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, 30,000; International Typographical union, 28,000; Cigar-Makers' International union, 27,000; Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, 23,000; Union Mineworkers, 20,000; Granite Cutters' National union, 20,000; Journeymen Baker's National union, 17,500; Journeymen Tailors' union, 17,000, and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Brothers of Painters and Decorators each with 17,000.

The tyranny of these secret societies is well-illustrated in the case of a British ship which sailed into Boston to make some repairs. While the carpenters were getting ready to do the work, the captain ordered the sailors to remove some wedges from the mast to hasten the preparation. The boss carpenter told the captain if the sailors worked his men would pack up their tools and quit at noon. The captain replied that they need not wait till noon but might get right off his ship. He weighed anchor and sailed to Halifax to get his work done. It was a $3,000 job. The sailors did not belong to the carpenters' secret lodge, and hence must not work even on their own ship.

Are not these good reasons for opposing the lodges and emancipating their victims from the slavery thus enforced upon them?

The Homestead indictments have more than a local importance. They affect every city in the United States.

DEDICATION OF THE COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

Chicago is, this week, ablaze with brilliancy in decorations, music, parades, fireworks, and throngs of curious and admiring people from nearly all parts of the Union. The dedication ceremonies occur to-morrow, Friday, in the Manufacturers' Building, where seats have been provided for 62,000 guests. There will be present distinguished men and women, the Supreme Judges and other officers of the United States, State officials, and others of equal notability. The daily press has made the event and its details familiar to all readers. The civic and military parade, today, is designed to surpass all other similar demonstrations ever witnessed in this city.

The following particulars concerning the Exposition proper, which is to be opened on May 1, 1893, and remain open for several months, may not be devoid of interest to our readers:

The site selected is in Jackson Park, on the shores of Lake Michigan, and about seven miles from the centre of the city. It is readily reached by elevated and cable railways and by water. Jackson Park covers about one square mile of surface, with a water front of about a mile and a half on Lake Michigan.

In front of the Park a pier has been built extending 1,500 feet into the lake to provide a landing-place for water craft, as well as a delightful promenade. The surface of the Park has been excavated so as to form a series of lagoons with connecting canals, around which the buildings will be grouped. Twenty large buildings with hundreds of smaller structures are in course of erection or about completed. The twenty large buildings and their dimensions are as follows: Administration, 260x260 feet; Machinery, 850x500; Machinery Annex, 550x420; Agricultural, 800x500; Transportation, 960x250; Transportation Annex, nine acres; Horticultural, 1,000x230; Electrical, 700x345; Fisheries, 363x163; Mining, 700x350; Manufactures, 1,688x788; Women's, 400x200; United States, 420x350; Fine Arts, 500x320; Live Stock —; Illinois State, 450x160; Casino, 300x175; Forestry, 500x200; Dairy, 200x95; Saw-mill, 200x130. It is designed to make the Exposition the largest and grandest of any that the world has yet seen.

THE SOUTHERN NEGRO DISFRANCHISED.

The new State constitution of Mississippi, which is now in effect, is surely disfranchising the Negroes. This result, whether so intended or not, is found in the clause which forbids the registration of illiterate citizens, and also those who are too poor to pay the heavy poll-tax imposed upon all voters, either black or white. The Negroes, however, form by far the largest proportion of the proscribed classes.

The first registration under the new law reduced the number of voters in the State from 250,000 to 76,000. Of the colored men only 8,000 were registered, it is said, although three-fourths of all can both read and write, because of their inability to pay the onerous tax required of them. The new constitution seems to have been concocted and adopted for this very purpose.

The effect upon the State, according to the Constitution of the United States, should be to reduce its representation in Congress in proportion to the number of male citizens thus disfranchised. This reduction may be made by Congress upon proper evidence of its equity.

The Baptist Vanguard, published at Little Rock, Ark., in its issue of Sept. 16, thus refers to the operation of the newly-adopted Australian system of voting in that State: "The election scheme now known in the State as the 'Australian ballot system' has met every expectation of its designers. It is the very thing to disgust the uneducated and drive them from the polls. It intimidates without bulldozing; it counts out without bearing the stigma; it is the very thing for high-toned fraud." Again, it says: "A very large per cent of the Negro vote was unpolled last week, because of the technicality and worry of the new election law. Of course, as they could not read, rather than be humiliated by worry and exposure, hundreds and hundreds everywhere refused to vote."

The probability is that both Mississippi and Arkansas will suffer loss in their congressional representations by the adoption of these oppressive measures.

The "Dorch" version of the Australian ballot system, referred to above, as adopted in Arkansas, has the form of the original Australian law, but it has all the tickets mixed up on the same ballot and in such a way that the voter must not only be able to read, but to know a good deal of law as well, to have his ballot counted. The law prohibits the judges of election from in any manner assisting the voter in preparing his ticket, except on the condition of physical disability, such as being unable to use a pen or pencil. For them to assist a voter who is unable to read is a criminal offense. If this law applied to the whole State it would cut down the total vote about one-half; but the Democrats had an eye to their own majorities in enacting such a law and they made it apply only to counties of more than 50,000 population. It therefore applies only to the four counties of Knox, Hamilton, Davidson and Shelby, or to the cities of Knoxville, Chattanooga, Nashville and Memphis. The first three cities are Republican, and Memphis is very evenly divided between the two parties, and was before this law went into effect. Knoxville, Chattanooga and Nashville have had wonderful prosperity since the war, and all are manufacturing cities with large laboring populations. These are Republican, and this new law was passed to make voting for them as difficult as possible and next to impossible. By means of it the Democrats were able to count out the Republicans in South Chattanooga and Nashville, and to swell their majorities in the country.

—Several of the recent annual conferences of the Free Methodists, Radical United Brethren in Christ, and Friends have spoken in unmistakable opposition to the secret lodges and their damaging influences. We propose to print them in full ere long.

—The Faculty of the new Chicago University (Baptist), last week, discussed permission to the students to form Greek-letter and other secret fraternities. President Harper, it is understood, is opposed to these societies, but a large number of the Faculty is said to be fraternity men, whose influence will no doubt be cast in favor of these baneful institutions. The "Beta Theta Pi" fraternity has already been organized.

—The types made nonsense of one sentence of Geo. W. Clark's pungent letter, printed last week, by making him say (page 6, column 2, second paragraph) that the Republican party "does not even go for the non-extension of the greater curse than was ever chattel slavery—the liquor traffic, but fights the protectionists." For "protectionists" read "prohibitionists." Catch the Republicans "fighting protectionists," indeed—the very class from whom it draws its vital breath!

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Miss Flagg, in their respective letters printed in this issue, speak highly of the recent address of Rev. J. M. Foster on "The State and Romanism," and of its good effect upon those who had the pleasure of hearing it. We begin the publication of it in the Cynosure to-day, and feel that no one can carefully read it through without being convinced of its importance and the excellence with which the subject is presented by our faithful co-worker.

—A correspondent of the Christian Conservator, who participated in the proceedings of the recent Oregon Anti-secrecy Convention, at Canby, relates the following incident: "Samuel Terry, of Canby (Treasurer of the State Association), is a seceding Mason, and during the convention, in a most kindly spirit, gave the Masons present and Masonry the sharpest rebuke it has ever been my privilege to listen to. Among other things he said: 'Brethren of the order, my life is in your hands. You know that, according to the literal rendering of our oath, you are bound to kill me; yet I am fearless, for God is with me, and I will die for the truth rather than be bound by such an institution.' " "Of the thirty-three ministers who signed the constitution," adds the correspondent, "thirty-one were present. The signatures footed up more than four hundred. We have thus laid the foundation for future work on these lines of reform. The fight is on us, and we must not, we dare not, retreat."

—The U. P. Christian Instructor, of Philadelphia, copies from the Cynosure a mass of testimony of prominent dead and living ministers against secret societies, and adds: "It should be noted that all of these testimonials are from ministers outside of our church, and with one exception, they are from ministers whose churches do not testify against secret orders. This indicates that there are not a few excellent men in these churches who are with us in principle on the question of secret oath-bound societies. Steady along the line." Is it not the duty of all Christian churches to testify against the lodge? Is it right for any church to glorify its sect and despise unpopular reforms? If it is better to wreck the spirituality of the church by sectarian exclusiveness and indifference—wreck it; but if by weeding out the lodge and all other obstacles to spirituality the church can be purified and exalted in the Spirit and fellowship of Christ, the issue is in the hands of the church, and God will honor those who honor him.

though delivered on short notice, in the judgment of many intelligent hearers, manifested such a fitness for the work as ought soon to lead to his being called into the field for his full time. He is a reformer from scalp to sole, within and without, through and through, and altogether too good and too able a "crank" to be otherwise engaged, when greatly needed reforms are crying aloud for just such men to come forward and voice their claims.

D. H. COULTER.

In this connection we are impelled to print the following, from a well-known W. C. T. U. worker in Nebraska:

"One old man, who heard Bro. Gault speak at the Pleasant Plain convention, said he would go fifty miles to hear him speak again. We feel that the N. C. A. is highly favored in securing such an earnest worker as Bro. Gault. I believe no other man is better fitted for the work in Nebraska than is he. He spent a week lecturing in one county, last April; spoke twice at Pleasant Plain church for our Union. His work was highly appreciated in every place where he spoke. We rejoice that Nebraska is going to have an Anti-Secret State Convention. Our prayers go up daily for God's especial blessing on this gathering of true reformers. My husband expects to attend if possible. I would love to be there, too, but both cannot leave."

NORTH BRANCH, Kan., Oct. 10, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On the evenings of Sept. 27, 28, Bro. W. C. Paden gave two interesting talks on secrecy. His earnest words made a deep impression on the students of the Academy at this place. There is a good opening for work in adjoining localities.

Courage to all in this heroic work,

GREAT CHICAGO MEETINGS.

DEAR CYNOSURE READERS:—The week closing October 8th was a busy one, but largely spent in or near Chicago. On the 29th ult. the German Baptist General Conference met in the First church on Paulina street, Rev. J. L. Meier, pastor. It was a large and influential meeting. Pastors and delegates numbering into the hundreds were present from all parts of the country, from New England to the Pacific Coast. It is a triennial meeting and this was the tenth. When first held in Chicago there was but one small church to welcome them. Now the churches number four and the membership thousands. Pastor Meier's church is a large and well-appointed brick structure, convenient and commodious.

On Sabbath afternoon a large union meeting of the different churches was held, and a dozen or more members of the conference made brief speeches, some of them arousing much enthusiasm; but as the German language was used, no truthful report can be given of them by the writer. By invitation of Pastor Meier a place was given on the program for the cause we are called to maintain, and the opportunity and the honor were thankfully accepted, and I trust not extended in vain.

But not until Tuesday, the last day, was I able to present to the conference itself the work of our N. C. A. in any detail. Through Prof. Keyser of Rochester University, chairman of the business committee, a brief space was given on the last and busiest day. These brethren are with us in this great contest, and among them God has a host who testify for him against the lodge.

Tuesday afternoon one of the greatest missionary anniversaries or the year assembled in Dr. E. P. Goodwin's church, the First Congregational,—The American Board of Commissioners for foreign missions. It is not now the place to speak of the interesting features of this great meeting, which at times crowded this church and the Union Park church to their utmost. It was my duty to help men see that the lodge paganism at home needed attention. Private conference with a number was encouraging,—for anything more could not well be undertaken—only some hundreds of copies of the new edition of Dr. Carradine's sermon were distributed. Joseph Cook was active in the meeting and cordial toward President Blanchard and myself. Dr. Pentecost, who seemed to have come over from London to speak, gave a grand address Wednesday evening. He returns immediately to England. A few words with him were most encouraging. He realized much of the difficulty of our work, and will follow it henceforth with deeper interest. He heartily approved of the effort to TAKE THE REFORM TO THE CHURCHES.

On Thursday I had the privilege of visiting the Free Methodist Illinois Conference at Elgin.

It need not be said that the good work we urge was most cordially received and delegates appointed to the co-operative conference in connection with the N. C. A. annual meeting. In the evening the church was crowded to hear Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's illustrated lecture, explaining the identity of the modern and ancient lodge worship, the latter now called pagan, why not the other? By a few facts I helped to show how these systems, together with Romanism, had the same birthplace, and were all demon worship. Rev. B. T. Roberts presided at the conference. He travels widely among these fall meetings accompanied by Mrs. Roberts, whose tender aid and sympathy help him to bear up physically under the severe strain of constant speaking and journeying.

I must not forget one of the most interesting of meetings on Sabbath evening, Oct. 2, in Immanuel Norwegian Lutheran church on Powell St., Chicago, of which Rev. J. J. Breidablik is pastor. My reception was most cordial, the attention of the best, and the immediate effect good, as the collection and testimony of individuals proved. One young man said he had been a member of two secret societies, but now he would stand for God; and it will be difficult for any others who listen to Bro. Breidablik to get past their convictions into a lodge.

On the 11th the German Lutheran pastors of Northern Illinois met in conference at Oak Park. Several invitations had been given me to be present, and a very sincere welcome was extended. Rev. A. Reinke of Chicago introduced me, and by vote a request to speak was given. I was thankful for the opportunity. The president responded by desire of the body, expressing warm sympathy with our work. The German Lutherans regard the lodge system a work of the devil by which he would subvert the church and destroy men. With Dr. Colver they hold it to be "Satan's masterpiece," and rigidly separate it from their communion.

On the same day the United Presbyterian Synod of Illinois opened at Aledo. I shall endeavor to reach it.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

WORK IN IOWA AND NEBRASKA.

ON THE TRAIN, Oct. 12, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Last evening Rev. W. C. Paden and I addressed a model meeting at the North Prairie school-house, near Blanchard, Ia. The house was full, with some standing, and good order prevailed. It was Bro. Paden's first work in this part of the State. He spoke for one hour, in a calm, clear, logical and convincing style, holding the close attention of his audience. He has a striking and original style of presenting his argument, in which illustration, humor, plausibility and sarcasm are admirably blended. His address was an answer to the most common objections to the anti-secret agitation, such as "You know nothing about Masonry," "It is none of your business," "It is so ancient," "So many good men in it," "No right to discuss it," etc. Bro. Paden is thoroughly devoted to the work, and convinces his audience that the Lord has called him to the work.

After our Wahoo Convention, we expect to hold meetings together at Tabor, College Springs, Tarkio, Blanchard, Coin and Clarinda; after which he goes to Eastern Iowa. We expect to address meetings this week at Mead, Swedeburg and Malmo, towns near Wahoo, Neb.

The prospects for the State convention, next week, are very encouraging. With favorable weather and the presence of the Holy Spirit, it cannot fail to be a great inspiration to the cause in Nebraska. Will the friends everywhere not fail to pray earnestly that God will manifest his Spirit and power in this the first Nebraska State convention?

Last Sabbath I spent a pleasant day with Elder

J. W. Dake, now pastor of the Free Methodist church at Bingham, Ia. His is the only church in town. He has been district chairman for many years; but now, with his faithful companion, who has often journeyed with him, and been a devoted co-worker in his meetings, he has settled down to the pastorate at Bingham and Coin. These congregations are to be congratulated on having the services of these experienced servants of God.

Bro. Dake's son, Rev. Vivian Dake, died last winter on shipboard, at Sierra Leone, Africa. He was returning home from superintending their missions there when he was stricken down with the dire yellow fever, and went to a home more glorious than any earthly home. His wife, who had remained in America, was much in his thoughts in his last moments, and among his last words were "O my precious Ida." In his death the church lost one of its most efficient workers, for he was the author of some of its best hymnology. His father and mother feel sorely bereaved, but manifest a true resignation to the Lord's will.

I spent two nights at the hospitable home of one of Bro. Dake's leading members, Bro. Drake, at Bingham, where anti-secret reformers always find a warm welcome.

M. A. GAULT.

REV. W. C. PADEN IN MISSOURI.

DARLINGTON, Mo., Oct. 10, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have just been up to Albany, Mo., to look after the Missouri State Anti-secrecy Convention, and shall report results soon. I was kindly entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Gilbert.

I found my way out to Mr. Geo. W. Needels', six and a half miles north of Albany. Mr. Needels is just now confined close to the house and his chair because of a severe cut that he gave his foot with the corn-cutter on the 8th. But he is cheerful and will doubtless soon be well, though he will not swallow any medicine to heal his foot. Bro. Needels is one of the pioneers in this reform, having done stalwart service as editor of the American Freeman.

From Bro. Needels and others I learned of the exercises attending the laying of the corner-stones of two colleges in this town of Albany. The Southern Methodist Episcopal brethren and the Campbellite brethren are each establishing a college here. The M. E. brethren laid the corner-stone of their college first, and, strange to say, they had the Masonic fraternity to perform this interesting service for them. The corner-stone of a Christian institution of learning laid by a heathenish institution, with its foolish mummeries and incantations! Then a gentleman from St. Louis makes the big speech of the occasion, expending most of his energy, as is usual at such Masonic displays, not in speaking of this institution in process of erection, not of its Christian character, not of learning, but in endeavoring to stay up, or boost, the institution of Masonry! This is a spectacle to astonish angels and men. The churches of our Lord Jesus have been padding palms with the harlot of secretism all too long. Masons lay the corner-stone of this college; but will its halls be open to the discussion of secretism, so that these young men and women who tread those halls may be warned and deliver their souls from her sorceries?

But a more cheering report comes from the other college. Her corner-stone is laid under different auspices. No secret organization steps in to usurp the church's prerogative. The corner-stone was laid by the church, amid songs of praise and thanksgiving, and with appropriate addresses. It was laid in the name of Jesus Christ, for the advancement of Christian learning. Assuredly God's blessing will rest upon such honorable endeavor.

I had the pleasure of conversing with a brother in the Cumberland Presbyterian church. I am sorry to learn that secretism in this church is very strongly entrenched. He assured me that the most of the members of this Presbytery are members of the Masonic lodge. He assured me, however, that such were not his views nor sympathies.

Can the devout follower of Jesus Christ properly take the cup of our Lord Jesus from hands polluted by secretism? Can such a course be helpful to his spiritual life? Yours in Christ,

W. C. PADEN.

THE HOME.

A FRIENDS' MEETING.

There were only two or three of us
Who came to that place of prayer;
Came in the teeth of a driving storm,
But for that we did not care;
Since as we waited upon the Lord,
Though never a word was said,
We felt the Master present there,
And he gave us Living Bread.

His Spirit stirred our longing hearts,
And prayer and praise set free!
We felt his touch as our souls were bowed;
We heard his "Come to Me!"
Nobody saw him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But "Peace" was his token to each of us,
And why should we ask for more?

Each of us felt the load of sin
From the weary shoulders fall;
Each of us dropped the load of care,
And the grief that was like a pall;
And over our spirits a blessed calm
Swept in from the Jasper Sea,
And strength was ours for toil and strife,
In the days that were thence to be.

We were only a handful gathered in
To that little place of prayer:
No word was said, no hymns were sung,
But the Lord himself was there:
He came to redeem the pledge he gave,
Wherever his loved ones be;
To stand himself in the midst of them,
Though they count but "two or three."
Then forth we went in the pouring rain,
But our hearts had grown so warm,
It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers
And not the crash of a storm.
"What a time renewing of strength we have had
From the Lord's right hand!" we said;
As we thought how Jesus himself had come To feed us with Living Bread.

—British Friend.

THE REV. B. FAY MILLS'S SPIRITUAL BIRTHPLACE.

At the close of the last of the afternoon meetings in the First Congregational Church, San Francisco, Mr. Mills laid his hand on my arm, saying:

"Now I am going to visit my birthplace."

Mrs. Mills joined us at the door and we walked to the house, No. 7 Mason street, only a few blocks from the church. This was the spot where, seventeen years ago, he gave his heart to God. The talk on the way was reminiscent.

"With an aching heart," said he, "I often walked this street, wishing that some one would speak to me about my soul. I attended church, but no one in this city ever said a word to me on the subject of my salvation."

As we approached the house near Market street, he said:

"I'm going to bring my old friend in and introduce him to you," addressing both Mrs. Mills and myself; "or," he added with a smile, "shall I take you into his saloon and introduce you there?"

The saloon-keeper with whom Mr. Mills associated as a boon companion in those days of sin is still in business "at the old stand," next door to the house where Mr. Mills had his room. Mr. Mills called upon him soon after coming to the city in July, to invite him to the meetings and to urge him to give his heart to God; and, indeed, he did attend many of the meetings, but without further result so far as is known. True to his word, Mr. Mills left us at the step, went into the saloon, and in a minute reappeared leading the saloon-keeper, Mr. Hough, by the arm, whom he introduced as:

"My old friend of whom I have told you. We were often together seventeen years ago, and now I want him to give his heart to God." Mr. Hough smilingly said:

"Yes, we were often together. I never expected in those days that you would be a preacher."

The lady of the house welcomed us, and for a little time we chatted in the parlor. Then upon learning Mr. Mills's desire to revisit the room where he gave his heart to God, she cheerfully assented, and permitted him to lead the way. We found it to be a very small bedroom at the front end of the hall, on the second floor. There was just room for us, but there was not room for chairs at all, and Mr. Mills chose to sit on the bed, remarking:

"This is the most sacred spot on earth to me," he turned with tender entreaty to his former companion to give his heart to God, saying:

"Come, John, this also may be the place of your birth into the kingdom." It was a scene not soon to be forgotten, as the evangelist of world-wide fame and vast successes sat there pleading with one whom he had known in sin to surrender to God. But the saloon had been left without any one to care for it, and presently the owner hastily arose and excused himself, saying that there was "no one to look after the business."

Then Mr. Mills told us the story of his conversion, in the room where it occurred. He had been gambling and had won a large sum of money—"enough to pay all my debts and some over"—and had started for the door with the intention of leaving the place while he could carry his winnings away with him. While his hand was on the latch, someone called to him and asked the loan of a small sum. Mr. Mills consented, handed him the money and turned back to watch the new game. He soon became interested, took a hand himself, and in a short time had lost every cent. This time, as he rose to go, no one called him back. He had nothing that he could lend. Utterly hopeless and dejected, he sought his room, determined to end his life by his own hand.

To such depths did our heavenly Father permit this elect spirit to descend, that he might in him the more fully illustrate the riches of his grace. Ah! it means something when B. Fay Mills says, "God saved me, my brother, and he can save you." Arriving at his room, he did not immediately set about the execution of his purpose, but flung himself upon his bed in utter despair. As he did so, the head of the bed was jarred, and shook a bookshelf which was just above it, and a book fell from it upon Mr. Mills's head. In anger he seized the book and threw it into the farthest corner of the room. But even in the darkness he recognized the volume, in touching it, as a book of Psalms which had been given him by his brother. Chiding himself for having so abused the gift of brotherly affection, he arose and felt for the book until he found it. It was open, and retaining the place, he was seized with a strong desire to see what he could find on the open page. He lighted the gas, and found his thumb at this verse of the 42d Psalm: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted in me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance."

Trembling with emotion as though God had spoken the words especially to him, he said aloud: "Can this be for me? Shall I yet praise God?" Then there rose before him the vision of the praying mother who was more than three thousand miles away; but in such hours distance is nothing. Memory claimed its own. The godly training of his childhood massed all its forces in that great decisive moment of a great soul, and swept over him with tidal power. With a mingled cry of "O mother! O God! shall it ever be that I shall yet praise thee? My soul is cast down and disquieted in me, thou knowest. May I yet hope in God? Is there hope for me? Then I will begin to hope now, and I will praise thee now and here." Suiting the action to the word, he fell upon his knees by the bed and began to pour out his soul to God. Before he rose from that prayer "the work was done."

It was an experience to kneel with this chosen servant of God at the bedside, on the very spot where he was translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. The substance, and much of the exact wording of his prayer, I shall remember always. As constituting part of a most valuable chapter in the spiritual history of one whom God has so greatly honored in the salvation of thousands, I wrote out the prayer immediately after we separated. I had not at that time any expectation of giving it to the public for some time to come, if ever. But the sensational newspaper account of this incident which has already appeared, would seem to justify its publication as the best possible illustration of the spirit and intention of what actually transpired, when, after the lapse of seventeen years, Mr. Mills re-visited the scene of his spiritual birth. It is not without the hope that God may use the incident and the words of the touching prayer, that I have consented, in response to the request of the editor of The Pacific, to give them publicity. Here is the prayer:

"O God, I thank thee for the privilege of coming back to this sacred place, where I gave my life to thee, and where thy mercy was revealed in washing away my sins. When I was on the verge of despair, looking into the very blackness of darkness, thou didst reach out thy hand and save me. I might have been a lost soul in hell to-day, but for thy saving mercy; and how I thank thee that thou didst spare me, and that I am permitted to come back here having all that can be dear to the heart of man! Thou hast forgiven my sins and I will not ask thee again to forgive them, but I will thank thee to all eternity that thou hast forgiven them. Bless our friend who has received us with such kind hospitality, and my old friend of the former years who was just here. Touch his heart, if it be possible, Lord, that he may give it to thee, and may give up that miserable business. Bless all those whom my life in sin here used to touch, and cause, as far as possible, that no evil influence of mine may prevail or be remembered to the injury of any soul. O God, I have given myself to thee. I can do no more, except to renew the gift; and I do here and now, Almighty God, to the last drop of my blood, give myself, soul and body, to thee, to be used in thy service. Do with me whatsoever pleaseth thee. I thank thee for a Christian mother whose influence from afar reached me in this sacred place. Eternity will be too short, O God, to praise thee for all thy mercies to me. May I go forth from this place, and may these who bow with me go forth newly baptized of the Holy Ghost for service. In thy name, Jesus Christ, our Lord, we ask it. Amen."

When we think of the thousands who have recently given their hearts to God in this city under Mr. Mills's ministry, of the more than six thousand who have joined the evangelical churches of this coast, as a result of his labors since last March, of the many more thousands throughout the land who will thank God in eternity that they knew him, we can see why a kind Providence did not permit him to go forth that night as a successful gambler, to pay his debts with the earnings of the gaming table, and to thus take his departure from this city under such circumstances and with such impulses as would have probably led to the continuance of that kind of a life elsewhere. God had something better in store for B. Fay Mills.—Dr. J. O. Brown, in The Pacific.

CAN'T YOU TRUST GOD ABOUT AN OLD COW?

The Rev. James Spurgeon was minister of the Congregational church at Stambourne, in Essex, considerably more than fifty years. He was an earnest and faithful man, and lived to a great age, even to see his grandson in his great tabernacle, and to hear and read of him as the most popular preacher in England, or even in the world.

This venerable pastor was never rich; indeed, he was poor, for he had a large family, a small income, and no patrimony except the blessing of his father and his God. He might have had a heavier purse if he could have devoted his talents to some secular employment. But he loved his Master, and he loved his work, and no inducement would have prevailed on him to give up preaching.

He sought to help his income by the cultivation of a few acres of land, and he kept a cow to furnish milk for his many children.

One day, when he went to the cow, she was ill; she had "the staggers," and died.

When he told his wife, she was much cast down.

"James," said she, "how shall we provide for the dear children now? What shall we do for milk?"

"Mother," said he, "God has promised to provide, and I believe he will. He could send us fifty cows if he pleased."

It fell out that on that same day there was a meeting of gentlemen in London, acting as a committee for the distribution of money to poor ministers. When they had distributed different sums to the various ministers who had applied, there was left only £5. Old Mr. Spurgeon had never applied; he preferred to earn what he could for himself.

The question arose among the gentlemen, "What shall we do with this £5 remaining?"

"Well," said one, "there is a Mr. Spurgeon down at Stambourne, in Essex, a poor minister. I have no doubt he stands in need of £5."

"Oh," said another, "don't send him £5; I will put £5 to it and make it £10. I know him; he is a worthy man."

"No," said another, "don't send him £10. I will give £5 also, if some one else will make it £20."

The next morning Mr. Spurgeon received a letter, with the words stamped or written outside in large letters, "Ninepence to pay."

The old lady begrudged the ninepence, "merely for a letter," as she said. But when it was opened, she said no more about "the ninepence," for it contained a £20 note.

When the old gentleman saw its contents he said to his wife, "Now can't you trust God about an old cow?"

That money helped him to buy a better cow, and some other needful things besides. It came in answer to prayer; it came in fulfillment of God's gracious promises to hear, and help, and deliver those who call upon and trust in him.

Many such truthful stories could be told in proof of God's faithfulness to his Word, relating to the earthly needs of his children, as also his supplies of grace and strength, and comfort in the hour of temptation and trial. But we must ask at all times in submission to the will of God, in humble faith in the merits of Jesus, and confidence in the faithful love of God to his children.

And if God encourages us to ask and expect the supply of our temporal needs, when we ask humbly and in faith, much more are we encouraged to ask and expect spiritual blessings to be bestowed upon us in our unworthiness and need.

Let us therefore plead his Word, as Jacob did, when he said, "Thou saidst, 'I will surely do thee good,'" for "He is faithful that promised."

Especially in view of the needs of our soul, and seeing these free promises, gracious invitations, and rich provision, let us learn to trust him and take him at his Word.

His Word is this: "Poor sinner hear;
Believe on Me, and banish fear;
Cease from your own works, bad and good,
And wash your garments in My blood."

—Friendly Greetings.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

Since the death of Sojourner Truth, the most noted colored woman of America is Amanda Smith. Mrs. Smith is practically a preacher of the Methodist denomination, although she has never been licensed for that work. In 1879 Mrs. Smith went to England and was given a cordial welcome. She spent almost two years in England, holding evangelistic services in Liverpool, London, Newcastle, Manchester and other places. Two years later she sailed for India in company with Miss Drake, an American missionary. Mrs. Smith spent nineteen months with this lady, and they worked together. In 1881 she sailed for Liberia, and remained in Africa nine years, holding services in towns along the coast as far south as Cape Palmas. Since her return to the United States Mrs. Smith has held meetings in many places, and was a conspicuous figure at the recent general conference at Omaha. She expects to return to England this fall.—Selected.

WHAT ONE TESTAMENT DID.

A French Testament was given to a little girl of Romanist parents, who was four months at the Grand Ligne school. She went home, still a Romanist. Her father asked her if she had a Bible. She said she had. "You must give it to me, or put it away, never to take it out." She put it in the bottom of her trunk, and the treasure remained hidden for ten or twelve years. Then she was married and had more liberty. She began to read the Testament in the family; she and her husband were converted. Their zeal led them to labor for one of her brothers who was at her father's house. After many months of labor and prayer, the brother was converted. The three united in labor for a sister. She was led to Christ; and so on until the whole family were converted. A brother wrote in 1866: "Through that little Testament, given to Julia at Grand Ligne thirty-five years ago, and in answer to the prayers of Madame Feller that followed it, our families, numbering eighty-five souls, are in the light."—National Baptist.

MY CROSS.

I cannot change or choose my cross,
However hard it be;
Along life's rough and toilsome way
I bear it onward day by day
Bravely and patiently.

Did Jesus murmur at the cross
That he so meekly bore?
Ah, no, the stinging blow he took,
The angry word, the scoffing look;
The crown of thorns he wore.

And should I not for his dear sake
The cross he gives me bear,
And follow in the path he trod
Through sin and suffering up to God
My crown of joy to wear?

Oh, blessed cross I long have borne!
I would not change it now,
Or choose instead the brightest gem
That ever graced a diadem
Upon a kingly brow;

For nearer to the Father's heart
It brings me day by day,
And shows me how surpassing sweet
It is to follow Jesus' feet
Along the narrow way.

TEMPERANCE.

A RED MAN'S TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

In the dense forest along the banks of Black River, in Northern Michigan, foxes and wolves are numerous, and occasionally a bear or deer may be seen.

One day a sportsman, after a long chase, succeeded in shooting a deer, and as he was a long way up the river, he decided to call at the nearest Indian hut and borrow a boat to take his game to Sheboygan. He found an Indian working in the woods peeling birchbark, and, thinking to ingratiate himself, he drew from his pocket a flask of whisky.

"Me no drink whisky," said the Indian.

"Don't drink whisky," asked the sportsman, in astonishment; "I thought my red brothers all liked whisky."

"Yes, me like it," said the Indian.

"Like it, and don't drink it?" exclaimed the sportsman. "If you like it, why not drink?"

"Me like it, and drink little; brother drink little, he want more; bimeby, heap drunk Injun. Ugh! me no drink any," said the Indian.

The sportsman looked at the Indian, then at the whisky, and finally dashed the flask against a stone, breaking it and emptying the contents upon the ground. He stood gazing at the broken flask, while repeating: "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." I have been a brute, but the red man's lecture shall be remembered.

He then told his errand, and the Indian rolled up his bark, went to the river with the sportsman, helped to get the deer into a boat, and took them to Sheboygan.

At parting, the sportsman grasped the red man's hand, and said: "Thank you for your temperance lecture: I shall drink no more."

The Indian smiled, seated himself in the boat, and rowed back to his hut.—Nina Tripp.

APOSTROPHE TO RUM.

[Many are the scathing words written and spoken against King Alcohol; but never have we seen such an array of invectives, such a torrent of hatred and scorn as is contained in the following.—Free Methodist.]

O issue of Satan! red with the fiery wrath and curse of Jehovah, stand back and answer the indictment I bring against you. It is found on the inquest of every pure heart under the whole heaven, and is signed a true bill by God as foreman of the grand inquest. Serpent and adder, fiend and fury, enemy of God and man, move thyself aright in the cup and blush crimson with shame. But answer me: What innocence and purity have you bitten with your serpent fang?

What hearts of love and devotion have you stung to death with your foul touch? What hopes have you crushed under the loathsome pressure of your hideous and relentless coil?

Listen to the cry of the orphan whose father you have murdered by your slow, deadly poison. Listen to the heart-broken lamentation. Visit the happy homes which your loathsome and polluting presence has changed into desolation, drunkenness and despair, and hear the cry that rolls up through the sulphurous flames of hell. From every gallows tree and dungeon of darkness, from every roof tree and hearthstone, blackened and blistered by your infernal power, accusing voices come to brand you as the worst enemy of the human race.

Oh! listen to the clanking chains in the maniac's cell, the shriek of violated innocence, the dying moan of the victim of the drunken assassin to-night, and tell me, oh! tell me, in the ears of all, what reason or apology have you an hour, or a minute, or a second longer for corrupting the world with your poisonous breath or polluting presence?

Blessings wait upon all other creatures under the shining sun but you, while only curses follow you in this world and the next. Good there is in all things else but you, even in the meanest insect that crawls upon the earth, or in the smallest island builder of the sea, or the tiniest speck that floats in the illimitable and all-embracing azure fields of space all the countless worlds between; but for you, in you, from you, by you, through you, there is and there never was any good. Evil, and only evil, born of the devil, coming from the devil, leading to the devil, condemned of God, condemned of man, an evil and a curse forevermore! I curse you! I curse you! murderer and assassin, liar and villain, thief and robber, slanderer and blasphemous, seducer and vagabond, flee from the earth and resume your station in your native hell. Without you, oh, how happy this world might be! and how it would blossom again with the peace and beauty of the Eden of God.—Anonymous.

THE SHAME OF OUR NATION.

Nothing in this generation tends so much towards the failure of Christianity as the results of the drink traffic. How any really intelligent Christian, in view of all the appalling facts of the case, can consistently pray each day "Thy kingdom come" and yet remain indifferent to the further existence of the drink traffic, is puzzling.

It is not long since the Emperor of Japan sent one of his most intelligent officers to England to inquire into the propriety of making Christianity the State religion of that country; and he reported adversely because Christianity had not been able to suppress drunkenness in that country, where it has been so long established. As a matter of fact, Mohammedanism has been more successful in that respect. It is humiliating to know that drunkenness is much less known among Mohammedans to-day than among Christians. If one thing ought to rouse every Christian worker such a fact should do it.

A very suggestive and ably written article appears in this month's number of The Arena, a high-class American magazine, from an educated Mohammedan, vindicating the results of his own religion compared with ours. We have only room for the following suggestive extract, which deserves a thoughtful reading. Is it possible that these deluded people, as we consider them, may rise up in the judgment and condemn us?

In regard to England's greatest shame—and Canada's, too—the writer goes on to say: "The increase of drunkenness and the uncontrolled character of what is called by English writers 'the social evil,' is appalling. No human society can hold together amidst the surroundings of such uncontrolled vice. Here again Islam has its mission. By positively forbidding, under severe enactments, the introduction and the use of intoxicating stimulants, it enforces by law habits of temperance and sobriety. A Moslem community cannot possibly become a drunken community, and it is this very fact that has enabled regiments of Mohammedan soldiers, under the most unfavorable conditions of military organization, to hold their own against the disciplined but drunken armies of Europe. Islam makes drunkenness a criminal offence, and punishes the drunkard with an unrelenting hand. Islam regards the drunkard as a citizen whose very existence is dangerous to the best interests of the State."—Hamilton (Can.) Templar.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A band of lay-preachers. Vs. 19-21. Lay-preaching was a great power in the early church. These were independent faith-workers, sent out by no church, and relying on no missionary board for support. The dogma of "apostolic succession," which forbids any to preach Christ who have not passed through the schools and been regularly ordained to the office, was unknown until a much later period. Antioch was located on the Orontes, and contained a great number of Jews and proselytes. In the words of an eminent authority, "it was almost an Oriental Rome, in which all the forms of the civilized life of the empire found some representative; and through the two first centuries of the Christian era it was what Constantinople became afterwards, 'the Gate of the East.'" They were full of caste prejudice, and so they preached the Word "to the Jews only." But it was God's plan that his own chosen people should receive the light first, even though he foreknew that they would as a nation reject it. So we see that he made use of the very narrowness and illiberality of these early disciples to work out his own plan in his own way. Some among them, however, were Hellenized Jews—men of Cyprus and Cyrene, who were not bound so tightly by the shackles of early prejudice, and they began preaching the Lord Jesus unto the Grecians, by which term is evidently meant the uncircumcised Gentiles. This seems to have been prior to the conversion of Cornelius and his company. At least it was an independent event, which, as it must have been unknown to them, could have had no influence on their conduct. God, by his Holy Spirit, had opened their eyes to the same truth which he taught Peter in the vision on the house-top. Perhaps he did not have to take any such extraordinary way with these humble preachers that he was obliged to with Peter. In the times of the Reformation, there were many, chiefly in lowly circumstances, who had learned the way of faith through Christ alone, but had never heard of Luther, or any movement against Rome. So it is very common to-day to meet with those who have been taught by the Spirit the evils of Freemasonry, without having read anything on the subject. "And the hand of the Lord was with them." Even if the church at Jerusalem had condemned their action and refused to acknowledge their work among the Gentiles, it would have made no difference when the Lord himself had put upon it the seal of his approval.

2. Barnabas and Saul. Vs. 22-26. Cornelius and his little company were not the first Gentiles to be received into the church, but they were the first to come in on terms of perfect equality. The great principle that in Christ is neither Jew nor Gentile, was then for the first time formally recognized. They were thus prepared to welcome these new converts with open arms, as it were, by sending them one of their best men, Barnabas, to encourage them in the faith, and direct the efforts of the isolated workers who had labored among them with such rich results. "He was a good man;" that is, he was liberal-minded, large-hearted, above the narrow and petty prejudices of his race. Being himself a native of Cyprus and a Hellenized Jew, he would the more readily sympathize in the work, which so increased on his hands that he was soon obliged to seek a helper. His thoughts turned to Saul, to whom he had been the first to extend the hand of Christian fellowship, when all the rest of the brethren were inclined to be fearful and suspicious of their former persecutor. Without doubt he knew that God was intending him for a great and special work among the Gentiles, and what better occasion than the present crisis afforded to induct him into his life-labors? From this time we read very little about Barnabas. Paul was the rising luminary which eclipsed all lesser ones; but we know that it mattered not to this devoted disciple that he must decrease while the other increased, if only the work went on and his Master was glorified. Established at Antioch, the two labored together for a whole year. It is persistent, as well as concentrated, effort which tells. Here the disciples were first called Christians. They did not assume the title. It was given them by outsiders, who never thought of calling them by the name of Barnabas or Paul, which shows how completely these two sank their individuality, and preached not themselves but Christ Jesus. And it shows, too, how thoroughly these early converts had learned Christ; how they held themselves as belonging to him alone, so that even unbelievers were forced to acknowledge it in the very name they gave them. How soon all sectarian and party names would be abolished if Christians everywhere showed the same spirit!

3. Christian fellowship. Vs. 27-30. Antioch was a rich city. It was therefore a most beautiful act of Christian love, in view of the proscribed famine (there were four famines in the days of Claudius Caesar), to send relief to their poorer brethren in Judea. The latter had freely and joyfully made them partakers in their own hope and joy, and with equal gladness they now make them sharers in their carnal things, thus breaking down forever the last remnant of Jewish hate of the Gentiles in the early church.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—Of the 2,600,000 Negroes in the South who are members of churches, 1,260,000 are Baptists.

—A great gathering of the colored Baptists of the South was recently held at Savannah, Ga. The churches represented have 1,400,756 members.

—It is stated in the London Baptist that the new baptistery for which Rev. F. B. Meyer stipulated upon his resignation at Regent's Park to become the successor of Dr. Newman Hall, "is to be placed, not in the church itself, nor even in Hawkstone Hall, as was subsequently supposed, but will actually be relegated to a crypt, or cellar, beneath that hall." The ordinance is, also, to be administered, not publicly, but in private. One step more, and there will be no baptism in confession of faith at all.—Standard.

—The First Baptist church, Chelsea, Tenn., Rev. John Morgan, pastor, has decided to sell the property and divide the money among the members, after paying off the debt, thus leaving the church disorganized.

—The contributions of American Baptists for religious objects last year amounted to over $12,000,000.

—At a cost of $10,000 the Baptist Publication Society has a mission car in use in California for a missionary and his wife. It has an auditorium which is often filled. Through this means five hundred have been converted, ten churches established and eight Sunday-schools organized. It is the gift of J. D. Rockefeller and others.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

—The seventh annual convention of Christian Workers in the United States and Canada will be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, November 10th-16th. The membership has extended during the first year to England and Scotland, and it is expected that this will be the largest, most useful and practical of these annual meetings; that a number of delegates will be present from Europe, so that the convention will be in the truest sense one of universal interest. The proceedings of the Washington Convention of last year have just been published.

FRIENDS.

—The Friends in England number 22,287. They had an increase of 221 last year.

JERUSALEM.

—A missionary in Palestine writes to a Chicago friend that since the completion of the railroad from Jaffa (Ancient Joppa) into the city of Jerusalem, over three hundred buildings—residences, hotels and business houses have been erected. Real estate agents are swarming into the sacred city, and there is a life and bustle all about that is strange indeed. The Holy Land will soon be gridironed with railroads, of which Jerusalem will be the centre. The road from Jaffa to Jerusalem, which was opened for traffic Sept. 21, crosses the valley of Hinnom and passes within a few hundred yards of the pool of Bethesda. Work on the road to Joppa is progressing well and the Baron Rothschild, who intends establishing a colony of Jews on the line of this road, is building three hundred houses for their use.

JEW.

—The Jewish Tidings is constantly urging the rabbis to make Sunday the day of worship, instead of Saturday. It now says: "At present there are few Jews in this country who do not observe Sunday as a day of rest, and most of them are as busy on Saturday as on other days of the week. They do not pretend to observe Saturday. The followers of Judaism almost wholly disregard the Sabbath. They refrain from attendance at public worship. The ministers preach to empty benches, and great harm is wrought to religion. The change must come."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Rev. Dr. Crawford, of New York, states that the proportion of Methodists to citizens in Baltimore is sixty-four to 1,000, in Pittsburgh thirty-seven, Detroit twenty, Buffalo eighteen, Brooklyn eighteen, Cincinnati twenty-two, Washington forty-three, Dayton twenty, Omaha fifteen, Rochester twenty-four, Philadelphia thirty-three, Cleveland twenty-two, New York ten. Chicago has about fourteen Methodists to every thousand of population.

—Rev. Dr. Rutledge, in an article in the Western Christian Advocate, shows that the Book Committee apportioned among the annual conferences for the Episcopal fund the last four years $524,878, whereas the expenses of the bishops were: For salaries, $254,191.62; for house rent, $71,166.70; for traveling and moving expenses, $26,188.53; for printing, postage, etc., $1,287.28. Total, $352,834.23. The excess in the apportionment was necessary to provide for shortage in collections.

—The annual meeting of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society: The board of directors met at the Methodist Book Concern, Cincinnati, Wednesday, Oct. 19; the general committee, provided for by the last General Conference, will hold its first annual meeting in Harrisburg, Pa., Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 7 and 8.

—Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, a leader of British Methodism, comes out squarely for woman suffrage, declaring it to be necessary as an offset to the extended manhood suffrage.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Presbyterian board of foreign missions has issued a circular-letter in regard to the establishment of a home for the children of missionaries. One lady has offered the sum of $5,000 toward the establishment of two such homes, and the board recommended that $15,000 more be raised for the same purpose in addition to regular contributions. One is to be at Wooster, O., and the trustees of Wooster University have offered perpetual free tuition in the different departments to those who come to the home.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—Father Martin is the name of the new head of the Jesuits. He is a Spaniard, 50 years old, and of good repute in science and literature.

—The Roman Catholic church is making strenuous efforts in the United States to win the Negro race, and with skillful efforts, as well as no inconsiderable success. Thus an annual collection is called for. And on Jan. 1, 1891, 21 churches were set apart for the use of colored Catholics, with 34 priests in charge. During 1890, baptism was administered to 4,883 children and 704 adults. From the same report we learn that in 115 schools, 8,280 children were in attendance. Over 20 different sisterhoods are in charge of these schools, of whom two are composed of colored women—the Oblates, of Baltimore, and the Holy Family Sisters, of New Orleans. There are, moreover, a foundling asylum, six orphanages, three industrial schools, a guild for servant girls, an academy, and a home for the aged. The Catholic Negroes are put at 152,692.

—The report of the census of Ireland, for the decade ending with 1891, has just been issued. The decrease in population goes steadily on. In 1881 the population was 5,174,836; now it is 4,704,750, a loss of 470,086, or 9.08 per cent. Three-fourths of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. Even in Ulster there are more Catholics than Presbyterians. Then in a total population of 1,619,813 there are 744,859 Roman Catholics, 426,245 Presbyterians, and 362,791 Episcopalians.

SALVATION ARMY.

—General Booth, of the Salvation Army, has established a colony on a farm near London, for the reformation of drunkards and of the idle and vicious. The farm embraces 1,500 acres of excellent land, and there are now about 400 residents, many of whom are physically, if not morally, regenerated by their new surroundings and employment. The experiment so far gives promise of success.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—Rev. A. R. Ayers, of the Pennsylvania Liberal Conference, is the High Priest of the Knights of the Golden Eagle. So the Liberals have one High Priest in their church.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The new census will show in the United States 20,347,364 church members. That is to say, one in three of the people, including children, profess some form of religion.

—Judge Stockslager, of the Idaho District Court, has declared the test oath law, restricting the right of Mormons to vote, unconstitutional. If the decision is upheld it will increase the vote of Idaho 25,000, and introduce an unknown element into the political problem.

Doctors disagree. They have to. There are differences of opinion among the best; there will be so long as knowledge is incomplete.

But there is one subject on which all physicians are completely in accord, and that is the value of cod-liver oil in consumption and scrofula, and many other conditions in which the loss of fat is involved. And cod-liver oil has its greatest usefulness in Scott's Emulsion.

There is an interesting book on the subject; sent free.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10¢ each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HELPFUL HINTS.

Cigarette smoking causes shocking deaths.

Men become rich by what they get and by what they save.

Towels with handsome bright borders should never be boiled.

If your religion does not make you a better husband and father, what is it good for?

Egg Gruel.—Beat the yolk of an egg with a tablespoon of sugar, beating the white separately; add a teacup of boiling water to the yolk, then stir in the white, and add any seasoning; good for a cold.

An exchange states that veal, mutton, or pork will keep perfectly fresh and good for weeks without salt or ice, in warm weather, by keeping it submerged in sour milk, changing the milk when mold appears. Rinse in cold water when wanted for use.

Almond Cream.—One pint of milk boiling hot, two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, a small handful of chopped almonds, and one cupful of sugar. When quite thick, take from the fire, and pour over it the beaten whites of three eggs. Set on ice to form, and serve with whipped cream.

For cornstarch cake take the whites of four eggs, two cups of sugar, two-thirds cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, one cup of cornstarch, two cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of lemon extract. Bake three-quarters of an hour with a steady fire.

"Next to pork," says a physician, "the banana is the most indigestible thing a person can eat, and, if you will notice, you will see them touched very sparingly by people with weak stomachs. If you can digest them, however, and don't mind the offensive odor, they are very nourishing, and one can make a meal on them that is in every way equal to a substantial lunch of bread and meat."

FOR HOME DECORATION.

This is the season of the year to gather flowers, leaves and grasses for home and holiday decoration. Let us hunt in field and woodland before Jack Frost comes with his blighting touch and changes the warm, mellow hues of autumn into the dull gray shades of winter. A brief excursion and tramp in the open fields will be rewarded with enough bright bits and colors to fill all the vases, bowls, and corners that can be spared. Remember, this is no fleeting joy, for grasses, grains, evergreens, and many of the wild flowers of autumn can be preserved for months and months. The season would be poor indeed in floral beauty if it were not for the wonderful display given by the many cultivated garden flowers. It would seem as though Nature emptied the last drops of her summer paint-pot on her fall flowers. The waning warm season is marked by the deepest dyes and the most gorgeous colors. The china-asters vie with the chrysanthemum, queen of the autumn; the xenias run riot in rich crimsons, scarlets, oranges, and yellows; the dahlias come out in flying colors; so do the dainty white clustering phlox and the golden colored helianthus—these, alas, are short-lived; they will never do for winter decoration. The most lasting autumn bouquet is made of wild flowers. Golden-rod and thoroughwort wave their gay banners in field and on hill-side. The latter with its grayish-pink blossoms skirts near the forest, where it peeps through the dead leaves. A vase filled with a mass of dried golden-rod, sprays of dried thoroughwort, bunched with the tall stalks of "cat-tails" in a high vase, will lend a touch of out-door color to some cozy corner. Here is another kind of a winter bouquet: Take a mass of long, feathery grasses, and mingle dried ears of grain with scarlet leaves or branches of bright red berries to give a dash of color. The result will be as æsthetic a cluster to decorate the fireside or hearth as one could find. Other useful materials for home decoration are ivy, laurel, dried ferns, seeds, and evergreen sprigs. When holly berries are scarce, the coral-red berries of the mountain-ash make a good substitute. So, too, the bitter-sweet vine, with its clusters of bright red berries, can always be used with artistic effect. The dried seeds of wild clematis, hung head downward, make light, feathery additions to any bouquet. In some localities running-pine can be gathered in long pieces which, when combined with the bitter-sweet vine, forms the most beautiful kind of ropes or wreaths for the pillars, columns, or balusters.—Exchange.

the first time with Pearline, you feel as if you never had been clean before. Possibly you haven't. Only baths like the Turkish or the Russian can make you as clean as Pearline does. There's the same feeling of lightness and luxury after it, too.

Bathing with Pearline costs almost nothing. It's like everything else—you would long for it, if it were expensive, but you're apt to overlook it when it's cheap. Directions on every package.

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back.

FARM NOTES.

(From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

AGRICULTURAL.

Mark all the grain bags.

A lazy man's fence corners give him away.

Complaining of the weather will not help harvest the crops.

Do not let any weeds go to seed around your house or barn.

When getting the seed wheat ready get out all the weed seed possible.

Lemons and sugar for the threshers' drinking water are better than rum.

A lining of wire netting will make the corn crib "proof" against rats, mice and squirrels.

Whittling dry-goods boxes and chewing tobacco often produces mortgages and discontent.

Happiness is not dependent upon riches. The most unhappy are often surrounded by the richest luxuries.

Alfalfa should not be cut the first season. The seed is procured from the first cutting each year after the first.

If the grain is threshed and the roof over it leaks, stop the leaks. An hour of time and a dime or two may save many dollars' worth of grain.

If the threshing is still to be done and the grain to be stored upon the farm, see that the bins are tight, well swept and well protected from outside dampness.

The California Fruit Grower says: "The farmer who undertakes to earn his bread by the sweat of a hired man's brow, had better make up his mind to do without pie."

A Mississippi subscriber writes us that in his neighborhood there will be at least forty-five per cent less cotton made this year than last, the boll worm and wet weather being the cause.

Now that the hurry of haying is over, see that the stacks are all well covered to shed the fall rains. If you have no board protection, cut some marsh hay and put it on green over any stacks that may be defective in the "topping out."

After securing your crop do not let a good share of it go to waste through shiftlessness or lack of thoughtfulness. It is well to walk about the premises once in a while with an eye open. When you have "seen" a leak or waste, stop it.

According to government statistics, the average values per acre of the various farm crops for the last ten years are: Corn, $9.47; wheat, $9.95; oats, $8.16; rye, $8.27; barley, $12.76; buckwheat, $8.24; potatoes, $38.34; tobacco, $61.57; cotton, $15.79; hay, $11.08.

A New Whatcom (Wash.) subscriber writes: "I have marshy land; cannot get into it to sow oats as early as I would like to do in spring. If I sow in the fall, and should it grow so as to be injured by frost, can I pasture it down without injuring it for a crop the following summer?" If oats freeze off that is the last of them. Try winter rye.

BEES.

The amount of honey on hand and available at the market centers is limited and it is probable that "cheap honey" will not be plenty this year.

Mr. Geo. R. Allen, of England, recently took a colony of bees from under a church roof. They had been there for thirty years. The length of comb, from one extreme to the other, was five feet, running upwards between two rafters. There was but little honey in it.

LIVE STOCK.

Crowd the shoats that you mean to turn off before Christmas. A pound of meat can be made cheaper now than when the weather is colder.

A Peabody (Kan.) subscriber writes us the crops with them are excellent, and that thousands of cattle will be fed in that vicinity next winter. He adds: "I find the sheep are not as liable to disease in Kansas as in Illinois, my former home, and fattening several carloads of sheep each winter has been paying well."

It has been well said that sheep are profitable for all farmers to keep, but that all farmers do not make a profit keeping them. Some fail to get the profit because they have an idea that sheep will take care of themselves, and so give them little attention; others because they undertook to handle too large flocks, and others because, in one way or another, they got hold of the business by the wrong end. Properly managed, there is money in sheep.

A great many farmers will soon be weaning their colts. If the colts have been taught to eat oats or bran and the ration is increased as they are deprived of the dam's milk, they will get on all right if permitted to have access to a good pasture. If they have not yet been allowed oats or bran they should be given some at once before taken from the dam. Where there are several colts in the same pasture it pays to fix a trough with railing around it, so arranged that colts can go under to the trough and the mothers be excluded. Put in bruised oats and the colts will soon find it.

It's a strong stomach that can stand the ordinary pills, with their griping and violence. What kind of a man or woman can it be who buys them?

It's some one who doesn't know about Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets—that's certain. They're better—they're the best, in every trouble of the liver, stomach, and bowels. They do more good, do it easily and naturally, and do it so that it lasts—cleansing and regulating the whole system. Sick and Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Dizziness, are surely prevented, quickly relieved, and permanently cured. They're the cheapest pill you can buy, too, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Reports from agents in the field, this week, are numerous and interesting. Let these earnest workers be properly remembered and encouraged.

The number of Scandinavians in the Dominion of Canada, we are trustworthily informed, is about 8,000. The only Scandinavian newspaper in the Dominion is Den Skandinaviske Canadiensaren, or the Scandinavian Canadian, published by Mr. Emanuel Ohlen, at Winnipeg, Man. Hitherto, since 1887, it has been issued monthly, but Mr. Ohlen informs us that hereafter it will appear weekly. Under all the attending circumstances, it ought to receive an able support. It is devoted to Christianity and Christian politics.

For the first time in many years, death has entered the White House at Washington, and removed the esteemed wife of the Chief Magistrate. This sad event was not unexpected, for she has suffered long from pulmonary consumption; but her loss falls heavily upon the President and the many friends to whom she had endeared herself by her virtues. The sympathy of the nation is with the stricken family, and the prayers of God's people for them will not be withheld in this their hour of affliction.

Chicago University, just starting on a career distinguished by munificent endowments, a high-caste Faculty, and unprecedented free advertising, has recently received an offer from Mr. Charles T. Yerkes to give it $500,000 for the purpose of procuring the largest and best telescope in the world, and to build a proper observatory in which to place it. If the Scripture rule is followed in this instance, the university has a grand work before it: "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom men have committed much, of him will they ask the more." Luke 12:48. It is to be hoped that this institution will not fail to meet its great responsibilities.

Another triumph of science was recorded last week, when long-distance telephone service between Chicago and New York City was successfully established. Mayor Washburne saluted Mayor Grant: "The city of Chicago greets the city of New York," and the response was promptly received: "The city of New York returns the greeting." The service of the new line is highly satisfactory, and will undoubtedly supersede in part that of the telegraph system. The distance to New York by this new wire is 950 miles. Hitherto the greatest distance over which speech has been successfully transmitted was 500 miles. Forty-two thousand seven hundred and fifty poles are used in the line between New York and Chicago. The wire of this experimental circuit weighs 826,500 pounds. The leaflet issued by the company shows that the same circuit in the ordinary telephone wire would weigh only 200,000 pounds. It is a great achievement.

Among the curios at the World's Fair the exhibit of the American college fraternities promises to be of much interest. It will occupy 900 square feet in the Manufactures Building, and will embrace contributions from about twenty-five secret organizations. The exhibit will consist of a collection of the publications of the fraternities, their catalogues, song books, magazines and other publications. There will be statues emblematic of each fraternity, and enlarged copies of their badges. In addition it is proposed to display an illuminated map of the United States, showing the location of all chapters with the relative density of each fraternity's following. It is intended to exhibit portraits of the prominent fraternity men of the country and other data by which it is intended to make a revelation of the strength of college secret societies. To make the exhibit as full as possible, and thus enhance its interest, there should be an annex, showing implements and methods by which initiates of these societies have been maimed and murdered.

There is something especially familiar to old Cynosure readers in the case of Mr. Louis Dorman, who is an officer of the weather bureau at Oklahoma City, O. T. This gentleman seceded from the Masonic fraternity, some time ago, and since then has freely circulated books and tracts exposing the secrets of the lodge. He has thus brought upon himself the indignation of his former "brethren," whose antagonism culminated, at last, in a charge against him of cruelty to his children. "He and his wife," adds the Gwennedale (I. T.) John-three-Sixteen, "were both arrested on the last Sunday of the special meetings and brought before the police court judge the following Monday. The animus of the witnesses, prosecuting attorney, and even the judge, was clearly to be seen all through the farce of a trial. Mrs. Dorman was fined $10 and costs and her husband $50 and costs, amounting in all to some $80. It demonstrated to us that to cross the path or oppose the minions of the secret empire, means simply to call upon the wrath of the devil and his legions."

THE STATE AND ROMANISM.

SERMON BY REV. J. M. FOSTER, DELIVERED IN MUSIC HALL, BOSTON, SABBATH AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 2, 1892.

TEXT: "Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil."—Rom. 13:3.

We charge Rome with treason against our government. She was the ally of the Southern Confederacy during the war. Pope Pius IX. was confederate with Louis Napoleon, Emperor of France. The French Emperor sent Maximilian to make war on Mexico, with a view of making an empire out of the republic, April, 1862. His object was to unite this with the Southern Confederacy. But just as Napoleon III. was writing his letter recognizing the Southern Confederacy, the Emancipation Proclamation of Lincoln appeared; the French troops were soon withdrawn from Mexico; Maximilian was captured and executed. But the Pope did not suppress his letter to Jefferson Davis. That letter appeared Dec. 3, 1863. Lincoln said: "It was designed to detach the Roman Catholics who had enrolled in our armies. Since the publication of that letter, a great number have deserted their banners and turned traitors; very few, comparatively, have

There will be five sessions, the convention closing on Friday evening. The official call and program will appear later. Everything seems favorable for a rousing convention. Among those expected to be present are the entire State Committee. There is promise of abundant entertainment for all who will attend. Rev. J. P. Stoddard is to be present with his charts; and the effect of secret societies upon the labor question is to receive consideration. Let arrangements be made for a large attendance.

A., is called to meet AT MARENGO, IOWA COUNTY, TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 15TH AND 16TH, beginning at 1:30 Tuesday afternoon, assembling in the Wesleyan Methodist church. Friends in Iowa living along the line of this branch of the "Q." will do well to take advantage of this opportunity and aid the cause by their presence in this Convention. Rev. W. C. Paden, our agent, is hastening the program to completion, and it will be made public at an early date.

NEW ENGLAND.

Friends of the Anti-secrecy Reform in New England are planning for a District Convention IN BOSTON, IN DECEMBER NEXT, that shall be second to none yet held. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, the N. E. Secretary, has already secured a commodious and convenient place for holding it, right in the heart of that city.

remained true to their oath of fidelity." "It is known that when Meade, a Roman Catholic, was to order the pursuit of Lee, after the battle of Gettysburg, a stranger came in haste to headquarters, and that stranger was a distinguished Jesuit. After ten minutes' conversation with him, Meade made such arrangements for the pursuit of the enemy that he escaped almost untouched, with the loss of only two guns." The riot in New York City, the burning of the colored orphan asylum, the trampling out of the lives of helpless children, the foul murder of Col. O'Brien and the mutilation of his body, the terrible treatment of John A. Kennedy, were a popish plot. President Lincoln informed Archbishop Hughes that he would be held responsible if the mob was not dispersed. Hughes faced the rioters, addressed them as friends, and invited them to go back to their homes peacefully, and peace reigned at once. The hand on the Tiber was drawn back. But it soon appeared again in the assassin, Booth, who struck down President Lincoln. Gregory VII. decreed that "killing an apostate was not murder, but a good Christian act." A Jesuit assassin, Rivaillac, stabbed Henry IV. May 14, 1610. William the Silent, Prince of Orange, was struck down by Girard, a Spanish Jesuit, July 10, 1584. Coligny, the Huguenot, was brutally murdered on the night of St. Bartholomew; and Abraham Lincoln was shot by Booth, the American Jesuit. The day before Booth died he wrote: "I can never repent, though I hated to kill. Our country owed all her troubles to him, Lincoln, and God simply made me the instrument of his punishment." In the presence of these facts we may listen to the warning of Prof. Morse: "Popery is a political system; despotic in its organization, anti-democratic, and anti-republican, and cannot therefore exist with American republicanism." They have 8,000,000 members here, subject to the priests, the priests to the Cardinal, the Cardinal to the Pope. They control 1,500,000 votes. They have 15,000 government offices under their control. During Cleveland's administration nuns visited these departments twice a month for alms, and every one who refused received a yellow envelope of discharge. Senators and Representatives soon learn that their return to private life is inevitable if they antagonize Rome's instruments, and so they bow to superior force. Senator Blair's ill-starred educational bill was throttled by them. Said the Senator: "Upon this very floor, soon after we had passed the bill, full two years ago, and while it was in the hands of a packed committee of the House of Representatives, where it was finally strangled, on this very floor, a Senator showed me a letter which I read with my own eyes, the original letter of a Jesuit priest, in which he begged a member of Congress to oppose this bill and to kill it, saying, that they had organized all over the country for its destruction; that they succeeded in the committee of the House, and they would destroy the bill inevitably; and if they had only known it early enough, they could have prevented its passing through the Senate. They have begun in season this time. . . . Twelve years ago, when I was a member of the House of Representatives, and when we were undertaking to enact a constitutional amendment which was to prevent the appropriation of public money to the support of sectarian schools in this country, a friend of mine pointed out to me, upon that floor, nine Jesuits, who were there log-rolling against that proposed amendment of the Constitution. There, in Washington, is that Jesuit organization which has set out to control this country, which has been repudiated by every free country, Catholic and Protestant, in the Old World; they have come to our borders; they are among us, and to stay; and they understand that they are to secure the control of this continent by destroying the public school system of America. They are engaged in that nefarious, wicked work. And as Jesuits have been expelled from the Old World, let me say, the time is soon coming when the Jesuits will be looked upon as more the enemy of this country than is the anarchist to-day. And the process either of their expulsion or of their conversion, will be the one in which the American people will some time be engaged, unless the order change their program and their work."

The question is: SMALL THE TIBER FLOW INTO THE POTOMAC, OR THE POTOMAC INTO THE TIBER? When President Arthur was in the White House, the Jesuits sought to unite his daughter with a Jesuit. As a reward he was to be nominated for a second term. But the President would not bow to the yoke. Immediately Jesuit voices arose all over the land for Blaine, whose mother was a Catholic, whose two sisters were at the head of two convents, whose brother was a devout Romanist, and who said: "For a dozen Presidencies, I would not say a word against the religion of my mother." His daughter married a member of the Pontifical Guard, as the Jesuits desired, and so Blaine was nominated. But God raised up Dr. Burchard to say: "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion were the allies of the party opposed," and Blaine was defeated. Tammany, in New York, means Rome. Rome controls New York City and the Legislature in Albany. Rome rules Boston and the Legislature that meets on Beacon Hill. To catch the Rome vote, the chairmen of the Central Committees of both Republican and Democratic parties are Romanists. Archbishop Hughes said: "Irishmen in America are learning to bide their time. Year by year the Irish are becoming more and more powerful in America. At length the propitious time will come—some accidental, sudden collision, and a Presidential campaign at hand. We will then use the very profligacy of our politicians for our purposes. They will want to buy the Irish vote, and we will tell them how they can buy it, in a lump, from Maine to California."

Jesuitry is a military organization. It outnumbers the United States army many times over. They are waiting the order from the Black Pope to strike down free America. This is treason. They were expelled for treason from England in 1581; France, 1594; Portugal, 1598; Russia, 1717; Spain, 1767. Driven from Europe and the South American Republics, of late, they have swarmed upon our land. It is time for our government to rise in its might and drive them out.

III. Because the laws of the state come from God. Law is the uniform manifestation of the will of God. The phrase of Hooker is too sublime ever to become trite: "Law has its seat in the bosom of God and its voice is the harmony of the world." Two thoughts filled the mind of Kant with ever-increasing admiration and delight: "The starry heavens above us, God's law within us." Cicero long ago declared that "those who fail to recognize the will of God as the basis of all law lay the foundation of government tantum in aquis, as it were in the waters." Minos, the lawgiver of Crete, claimed to be the son of Jupiter, and to have received his laws from his reputed Father. Lycurgus, the Spartan lawgiver, claimed as authority for his laws the oracle of Delphi, Apollo. Numa claimed as authority for his laws the nymph Egéria. The Emperor of China is regarded as the vicegerent of God. The Grand Llama of Tibet is the incarnation of Deity. In this capacity he dispenses civil offices at pleasure, just as the Pope of Rome did in Europe for centuries. These facts clearly indicate that there is an ineradicable conviction in the human soul that laws will not bind the conscience unless they come from God. As Blackstone said: "Any law that contravenes the law of God is no law at all."

The Ten Commandments are the basis of moral legislation. The state is the divinely appointed keeper of both tables of the Decalogue. The Ten Commandments are both a civil code and a spiritual rule of life. In the second sense they belong to the church. The church deals with matters of faith. But in the first sense they belong to the state. The open and public breach of them the state must authoritatively and judicially suppress. Let us apply this to Rome.

Take the First Commandment. The being, authority and law of the state come from God. The state is under obligation to recognize God as the source of all authority and power in the Constitution, and pledge herself to have the people honor him. But Rome applies the titles and attributes of God to the Pope and the Virgin Mary, and worships them as God. St. Bernard had this dream: "There were two ladders reaching from earth to heaven; at the top of one was Christ; at the top of the other, Mary; a great number of people tried on both to reach heaven, but from Christ's ladder all fell back; not one from that of Mary." Salvation is certain when application is made to Mary; almost impossible from Christ. The Pope they call "Prince of God," "the oracle of religion," "our Lord God the Pope," "the Most Holy Father," "Priest of the world," "the divine majesty."

The Pope assumes the prerogative of lawgiver for all nations. He abrogates laws, removes kings and sets up kings. This is treason against the nation's God. It should be punished. Every citizen thus honoring the Pope should be disfranchised—or refused citizenship if not naturalized.

Take the Second Commandment. With the principle of idolatry the state has nothing to do. A man may believe in it if he choose, and formulate his belief in a creed without let or hindrance by the civil authority. But its open and public practice should be authoritatively and judicially suppressed. King Josiah went through his kingdom, cut down the groves, broke the images, and burned them. Job said: "If I were guilty of idolatry, it were an iniquity to be punished by the judges." This principle will settle the Chinese question. The Chinamen have a right to come here, for this is God's land and they are God's creatures. But they have no right to bring their idols and build their Joss-houses and follow their idolatrous customs. The government should confiscate their Joss-houses and destroy their idols and forbid their idolatry. Welcome the Chinamen, but prohibit their idolatry on American soil. The same rule applies to papist as to pagan. Romanism is baptized heathenism. The images of Rome pagan were not so numerous as those of papal Rome.

In 817 Pope Pascal I. rebuilt the church of St. Cecilia. He placed her shrine upon its high altar. The remains of the saint were wanting. The Pope slept. He dreamed. Cecilia appeared and pointed out her grave. He visited the spot, took a spade, dug up the earth and discovered "the body of the saint clothed in a robe of tissue of gold, and with linen rags freshly impregnated with her blood." These relics were removed to the church. The faithful were excited to contribute largely of their wealth to the Pontifical treasury. That fraud is used to-day to obtain money.

"Just as Scylla, the dictator, consulted a little Apollo hung around his neck (B. C. 68), so Pope Gregory XIV. (A. D. 1590) put his trust in a figure of St. Philip Neri, by which image he believed that his life was saved in an earthquake at Beneventum!" There is an image of St. Peter in Rome, clothed with the Pope's robes; on its head the triple crown, and on its finger the ring of the Pope. "The bronze statue of Peter is worshiped devoutly by the peasants and lower population, who kneel long on the marble floor before it; then reverently approach to kiss the worn toe, that records the millions of kisses it has received. A noble looking priest, robed in white, his head as white as his dress, reverently approached the statue, carefully wiped the worn toe, kissed it, and pressed his forehead against it; kissed it a second time with tokens of awe and reverence, and then retired as from the presence of a royal ruler. In the cathedral at Pisa is an old image of Mars, now called St. Ephesus, and held in great veneration. At St. Paul's church in Rome is venerated a crucifix saved from the great fire of 1824, which spoke to St. Bridget. These are a few instances from the thousands of images worshiped." They worship the "Mass." Pope Urban II. who sanctioned the murder of all excommunicated persons, while presiding over a council in 1,088, said: "The hands of all priests are exalted to an eminence denied to all angels; for priests create God, the Creator of the universe; then, with their hands they offer him up for the sins of the whole world." In Montreal, not many years ago, when a procession was passing, with the "host" (that is, with the sacred bread made into the body of God), elevated in the midst of the procession, the people were expected to kneel all along the street as it passed. A Protestant gentleman declined to fall down, and was struck on the head a violent blow by one of the passers-by, and was compelled by force to kneel. This occurred not twenty years ago.

The idolatry of Rome ought to be prohibited under the severest penalties of forfeiture. It pollutes our land. John Milton said: "The papists are the common enemy of good government and cannot be admitted to the privileges of the body politic. Therefore, we do not admit of the papist sect, so as to tolerate papists at all; for we do not look upon that as a religion, but rather as a hierarchial tyranny under a cloak of religion, clothed with the spoils of the civil power, which it has usurped to itself contrary to our serious doctrines. No Protestant of what sect soever, following Scripture only, ought, by the common consent of Protestants, to be maltreated for religion. But as for popery and idolatry, why they also may not hence plead to be tolerated, I have much less to say. Their religion, the more considered, the less can be acknowledged a religion, but a Roman municipality rather endeavoring to keep up her old universal dominion under a new name, and mere shadow of Catholic religion, being indeed more rightly named a Catholic heresy against the Scriptures, supported mainly by a civil, and, except in Rome, by a foreign power; justly, therefore, to be suspected, not tolerated, by the magistrates of another country." Oh, that the eyes of Americans were opened to see Rome as Milton saw her!

Take the Third Commandment. The state punishes blasphemy and profanity. Disloyal oaths are likewise obnoxious to punishment. The government found it necessary to assail the "Knights of the Golden Circle," during the war, for they were plotting to destroy it. It became necessary to throttle the Molly Maguire and Ku-Klux clans as a means of self-protection. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that any one who has taken the Endowment House oaths of the Mormon hierarchy should not be naturalized, and if naturalized, should be disfranchised. Let it be proclaimed in trumpet tones, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that the highest tribunal in our land has decreed that the secret oaths of that religious fraternity disqualify those taking them from becoming citizens; or, if citizens, for exercising the privileges of citizenship.

The murder of Dr. Cronin, in Chicago, led to the trial of the order of Clan-na-Gael. Their horrid oaths were exposed, just as the wicked oaths of the Endowment House in Salt Lake City were brought to light in the trial over the Idaho test oaths disfranchising Mormons. The courts have decided that these disloyal oaths disqualify those taking them for citizenship. The secret order of Mafia came over from Italy. They showed their true character in the murder of Chief-of-Police Hennessey of New Orleans. That assassination was a crime which demanded retribution. Eleven members of the order were put on trial. Through fear of the order the jury acquitted them. A mob attacked the prison that very night and summarily dispatched these guilty wretches. That massacre cannot be justified. It was mob law, and that is a danger, and a symptom of a greater evil behind it. When justice breaks over its legal bounds, no one is safe, and the insidious disease of anarchy is back of it. But a secret oath-bound gang of ruffians and brigandines cannot be tolerated here. That massacre was the hand-writing on the walls of the secret dens of the Mafia. The Highbinders of California have come from China. The Chinese empire is honey-combed with them, and the government is powerless. They have committed foul murders and are now under process in San Francisco. The verdict of the American people is, that a secret oath-bound order that resorts to murder as a weapon ought to be swept from the face of the earth.

The Jesuits are an oath-bound society. They have sworn absolute obedience to the Pope. Here is the Jesuit's oath: "I do renounce and disown any allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince or state named Protestant, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers. I do further declare that the doctrine of the church of England, the Calvinists, Huguenots, and of others of the name of Protestants, to be damnable; and they themselves are damned and to be damned that will not forsake the same. I do further declare, that I will help, assist, and advise all or any of His Holiness' agents, in any place wherever I shall be, to extirpate the heretical Protestant doctrine, and to destroy all their pretended powers, regal or otherwise. I do further promise and declare, that notwithstanding I am dispensed with to assume any religion heretical, for the purpose of propagating of the mother church's interests, to keep secret and private all her agent's councils, from time to time as they intrust me, and not to divulge, directly or indirectly, by words, writing, or circumstance whatsoever, but to execute all that shall be proposed, given in charge or discovered unto me, by you, my ghostly adviser, or any of this sacred convent. All this I swear, by the blessed Trinity and blessed Sacrament, which I am about to receive, to perform, and on my part to keep inviolably; and do call all the heavenly and glorious hosts of heaven to witness these my real intentions, to keep this my oath." What need we any further witness! The Jesuits should be required to abjure these disloyal oaths or leave the country.

OBERLIN COLLEGE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The fall term of Oberlin College is quite as full as usual in all its departments. The great mass of young people that over-crowd the chapel at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and especially when, on Thursday evenings, they are supplemented by as many citizens as can find seats, are a most interesting study. What great possibilities are within their reach! How great the responsibility of their moral and intellectual training! Dr. Brand has just entered on his twenty-first year of labor as the successor of Pres. Finney in the old First Church, and has preached of late with more than usual earnestness. Mr. Finney of the Second Church, has lost nothing in the confidence and appreciation of the people. These two churches include the large majority of the church-going people of Oberlin.

Of late there have been some most interesting lectures. Last Thursday (the 6th) Prof. A. A. Wright gave a very interesting lecture on the genesis of bowlders, especially those of Northern Ohio. It was illustrated by charts and specimens, and devoted, in good part, to the discovery, by Prof. G. F. Wright, of the ancient outlet of the Great Lakes through Lake Huron and the Ottawa River. This (the outflow) was long before Niagara Falls was dreamed of. The whole discourse was the fruit of great labor as well as careful scientific research.

Quite different, and even more interesting, were the lectures of Prof. J. H. W. Stuckenberg, who, though formerly a theological professor in America, has for twelve years been pastor of the American church in Berlin. Of the nearly a thousand American students that every year visit that great city for the purposes of higher education, the majority are drawn towards the American church, as the only place where they can hear the Gospel in their own language, except at the English church, which is patronized by the Empress. This American church is remarkable, because it is a practical example of Christian union. Except the Bible they have no other than the Apostles' Creed. At the formation of the church there were members from ten different denominations, and they now include those who have belonged to twenty-seven of the sects. Yet, with all this diversity of views there has never been the slightest friction as to substantial agreement in Christian work, but a continued and healthful growth. Part of his mission is to raise $100,000 for a church building. His lecture on Saturday evening was on German Socialism. He spoke of its very rapid growth; that now it had 148 journals devoted to its promotion; commanded 1,500,000 votes, and represented 9,000,000 of people. Among its causes were: (1) The development of self-consciousness, which, in turn, was the result of general education and abundant means of knowledge. (2) The rapid growth of the cities, as compared with the rural districts. (3) That the increase in wages and the ability to obtain the common comforts of life have not kept pace with the increased demand of a growing civilization; and (4) A re-action of the democratic feeling against aristocracy and imperialism. He spoke of the theories of the Socialists; that while they were not necessarily antagonistic to Christianity, they were mainly the products of atheists, and that the whole movement was regarded as a menace to religion. There were often twenty-two socialistic meetings in Berlin each Lord's day.

On Sabbath evening he spoke of the religious needs of the German people, the extent and influence of rationalism over the masses, and the weakened power of Christianity. Of the 1,600,000 people in Berlin, about 1,400,000 are nominal Protestants; and yet in all the Protestant churches of that city there are but 60,000 sittings. The only really active and aggressive religious force in Germany is the Roman church, which aims and expects to reconquer the empire.

On Monday morning he spoke for an hour, in the College chapel, on the development of modern thought in Germany; and then took half an hour to answer written questions. He spoke, first, of the great facilities for inter-communication, the press and the telegraph, as bringing about a community of thought in the entire civilized world, especially among the learned, so that German or French or American thought speedily becomes the thought of the world. He briefly traced the development of philosophy, of science and theology in the German universities. He regarded the present as emphatically the scientific age. Men were everywhere seeking for something practical and realistic, in distinction from theories and opinions. He thought that the tendency among the leaders in theology is to a more spiritual and evangelical type, and that the rationalism and infidelity among the masses is the result of past influences. He regards the greatest obstacle to the influence of Christianity to be the dominance of the state in all religious matters, and that, as a result, there is great diversity of thought in those who are the appointed teachers. He thought that Germany was embarrassed with as great and as difficult problems as other nations; but he did not take a pessimistic view of the general outlook.

Oberlin sends more students to the great Berlin University than any other American school, except Harvard, and the numbers who seek culture abroad will doubtless increase. It is the mission of the American church to look after their spiritual welfare.

TESTIMONY OF JNO. S. RADFORD.

My reasons for leaving the lodge:

First, God's Word teaches me that a Christian has no right to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers; read 2 Cor. 6: 14-17.

Second, God's Word forbids the taking of oaths; read Matt. 5: 33-37. This being God's Word, how can I be a Christian and be in a lodge-room and call my friend brother who has just voted against my principle, that we will have the Walnut street theatre for a night for the benefit of the lodge of which I was a member. God forbid that I should be united with them, for the world favors sin and sinful things; and these secret orders have the Word of God in them for a cloak to deceive Christians, also having the Bible to be read by ungodly men, who handle the Word of God deceitfully.

For these reasons I would come out from among them and be separate, knowing that God will hold me accountable for the deeds done in this body. Christians, if you are in them, come out from them for they are the devil's stronghold, and to stay in them means death to the soul. Yours in Christ.—John S. Radford, of Philadelphia.

TESTIMONY OF ROB'T ADAMS.

I have belonged to a secret society. In my initiation I was blind-folded and partially denuded; this was being "neither stripped or naked;" had to walk over a rough and thorny road; "this was the wilderness;" was scourged with nettles and thorns, climbed a heap of some kind, fell on a sheet and was tossed up several times; this was "riding the goat." In taking another degree I do not remember the ordeal, but I can recollect kneeling on the form of a coffin and with my hand on the blessed Bible swearing not to take advantage of a "brother's" wife or daughter, "knowing them to be such." While taking those degrees I was surrounded and manipulated by fellows who were so drunk that they scarcely knew what they were doing, and vile above all men dwelling in the neighborhood. Three meetings were all I attended. My reasons for staying away are obvious. I was only a boy at the time, and had not much light or grace, but felt that moral life could not be sustained in such an affiliation. I shudder now at the thought that bishops and elders and deacons and leaders maintain such a brainless, demoralizing, soul-damning relationship. They all must be damned, for hell itself cannot be constituted of worse ingredients.—Rob't. Adams.

LAW AND ORDER

AGAINST LIQUOR AND LAWLESSNESS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

[Address of Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts to the Columbian National Commission, Oct. 19, 1892.]

Senator Hawley, in a great speech in the United States Senate, estimated that the large bodies which had indorsed the World's Fair petitions by vote represented forty millions of people, counting the members and their families. This figure is reached by making the usual allowance that there are three times as many individuals in the families of a church as are members of it. There were, in 1890, thirteen millions of members in those evangelical churches whose general conferences and assemblies and conventions indorsed the petitions, and they were also indorsed by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Farmers' Alliance, and many other bodies which include members of yet other churches and members of no church.

It should be remembered that all, or nearly all, the petitions of the church congresses asked for the exclusion of liquor-selling from the World's Fair, as well as for Sabbath closing; and the case of the liquor-selling acquires a still greater strength than its companion reform in the way of petitions, in that the Catholic Total Abstinence Society joins in the protest against liquor-selling, while the opposing petitions in the case of the liquor-selling are fewer than in the matter of the Sabbath; indeed, the petitions for liquor-selling in the Fair are too few to count. Those who desire that are ashamed to petition for it.

But my purpose, to-day, is not to urge the temperance arguments that lie back of these petitions of past months and years, but to present six hundred new petitions that oppose liquor-selling in the Fair, partly on grounds of law and order, which even those who are not radical temperance men can hardly disregard.

THE LOCAL DIRECTORY'S LIQUOR CONTRACTS VIOLATE THE CHARTER.

Many of the petitions ask the Commission to "prevent our nation from becoming a rum-seller to the world by illegal liquor-selling at a German beer-garden and otherwise in our national Exhibition." If you allow liquor-selling in the Fair, legally or illegally, you will make each prohibition State a rum-seller, as it is a part of the nation that conducts the Fair through this Commission, and every prohibition county and town and every temperance man will also be made partners of the liquor dealers.

We protest against this. Most of the petitions ask the Commission to ascertain whether it be true, as stated on the floors of Congress, and in the press, that the local managers have made contracts in violation of the local option law of Hyde Park, and of the Illinois law against the sale of liquors at fairs, and so of the charter which requires that State laws shall be observed in the contracts and conduct of the Fair; and also whether the local option law and Sabbath law are not already being violated; and if any such violations of law, present or prospective, are found, that the Commission will use its veto power against such lawlessness.

1. The charter of the Fair, as made by Congress, in section 4 says: "Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to override or interfere with the laws of any State, and all contracts made in any State for the purposes of the Exhibition shall be subject to the laws thereof."

2. A law of Illinois, enacted in 1883, is as follows: "Whoever shall keep any shop, booth, tent, wagon, vessel, boat, or other place for the sale of spirituous liquors, or expose for sale, or sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of any spirituous liquors, or engage in gaming at or within two miles of the place where any agricultural, horticultural, or mechanical fair is being held, shall, for each offense, be fined not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars: Provided, This section shall not affect tavern-keepers, distillers, or others exercising their calling at their usual place of business." The local option law of Hyde Park also includes the Fair grounds.

3. Senator Palmer, on the floors of the Senate, speaking in behalf of the Illinois corporation, said: "It has let the privilege of a large number of cafes or restaurants, with the right to serve liquor at meals as at hotels." If it were true that the contracts allow liquors to be sold only with meals (a square cracker serves as a "square meal" in such cases), it would still be a serious matter, as drink gets in its work however taken, and as such contracts would violate the State laws and so the charter.

4. But Major Handy admitted to me that the

in the "German village" is an exception to the rule about selling liquor only with meals. I call the attention of the Commission to the fact that there is no effective bar to the multiplication of such exceptions, as the Directory blithely jumps the three legislative bars. Evidently the Commission must protect these legislative bars or there will be bars of another kind. A fountain of free wine has been proposed, and this devil of wine, dressed as an angel of light, unless prevented by the Commission, will doubtless companion the beer devil, who will be decked with all the charm that the German government can put about it, with pretty peasant girls for waiters; the surroundings a quaint German village, all drunkenness quickly hidden, to charm American youth into drinking the golden liquid, and into thinking foreign customs better than our own. The "German village," it is reported, has already arrived in New York, but is detained in cholera quarantine. Unless the Commission disinfects the beer out of it, it will be worse than the cholera, for it will poison not only bodies but also the body politic.

5. The Chicago papers, months ago, published the opinion of one of the attorneys of the Chicago managers that the contracts for liquor-selling are a violation of the State laws I have quoted, but they have not therefore cancelled the illegal contracts, as is evident from the recent publication in liquor cases of an advertisement of the "Columbian Casino Restaurant, 6,000 capacity," for "foreign wines, ales and beer." The threat is made that the laws in question will be repealed by the State Legislature this winter; a monstrous thing indeed, that men who have contracted to violate good laws should ask their repeal as a part of the celebration of four hundred years of progress.

6. It seems to me that it is not only but its highest duty, as representing Congress, to protect the charter made by Congress, which I have shown, not by hearsay but from public documents and personal knowledge, has already been grossly violated by the local managers.

7. It will not do to say that Chicago may be left to enforce the laws of Illinois in the Fair. The good citizens of Chicago will have all they can do to take care of the outside of the Fair, the city itself. They propose to close the Sunday saloons. That is their share. The National Commission should keep the inside of the national Fair in order. That Chicago cannot be relied on to enforce the law against her leading citizens in the Fair management, is proved from the fact that the local option law and the law against Sunday work and Sunday amusement, including work on the buildings, is now being violated without punishment every week.

8. The plea made by them that in connection with these contracts they have put themselves under forfeits to the extent of $600,000, has no force as an excuse for law-breaking, nor can such forfeits for illegal contracts be collected by the liquor-sellers. They are not worth six cents—only the price of old paper. We will shed no tears for the managers. It is the liquor-dealers who should walk the floor, not they.

9. That liquor was in some small way sold in the Philadelphia Centennial is in this case, as there were then no petitions to speak of from the people and no law-breaking involved.

10. For like reason, the action of Congress in declining to add the anti-liquor condition to its appropriation has no force in this case. Both houses of Congress, in the first vote, forbade liquor-selling in the Fair, and then, through threats in the lobby and because there was no time for debate in the hurry of the closing session, rescinded their action in each case. But in both cases the only question up was the question of temperance, not the question of law and order, which is the present issue before the Commission. That the Directory's contracts violated the laws of Illinois, and so the charter, was never brought to the attention of the Senate; and when it was brought, at my suggestion, before the House, by Congressman Atkinson, the speaker ruled that the vote on the liquor question could not be separated from the five million appropriation, to which the majority was then opposed, and so the vote then taken had no significance.

11. The opposition of some Commissioners to acting on this matter or even hearing arguments on it, on the ground that it is "a political question," the reference being to the Prohibition party, is not valid, for the laws involved are those of Illinois, prohibitory elements in its license law, laws against liquor-selling at fairs and for local option such as are found in nearly all States, regardless of their party management. These violations of law, which have not been reported to the country by the negligent associated press reporters of Chicago (who also failed to tell the country that Sabbath-closing long ago became a law by the acceptance of the conditioned appropriation), have recently been sent out in our petitions and otherwise to every State, and the people are everywhere proclaiming them in public meetings where the petitions are adopted, and the Commission cannot long escape the duty of deciding this matter.

12. To the plea that it would not be fair to make foreigners, who, accustomed to use liquors with every meal, accommodate themselves to the house-keeping habits of their hosts even for the noon lunch, which is the only meal that will usually be taken in the Fair, we answer, first, that there are saloons in abundance across the prohibition line within three minutes' walk of the gates; and, second, that we have surrendered our American institutions already too much to the foreigners of the baser sort, who are largely responsible for the fact that in the last quarter-century the consumption of liquor has increased three times as fast as the population, and that, largely on that account, divorces and murders have increased in like ratio. It is time we should learn to STAND UP FOR THE UNITED STATES.

13. It is not the foreigners' habits but the stockholders' pockets that prompt the liquor-selling. With the millions that our government has given there can be no doubt of fair dividends without selling the morals of our youth. In the case of the Centennial the people had no thought of the money to be made, any more than we think of salary in electing a President. But money is the uppermost consideration in the management of this Fair, crowding morals, patriotism and progress into back seats. I am not at all sure that liquor-selling will add to the dividends. The "good will" of the forty millions in Christian families is worth something. It has been a stupendous blunder to give the religious press and the preachers no chance to say a good word for the Fair. The Bloomington Fair, two or three years since, violated the liquor law. Rows, and at last a murder, were the result. The next year the managers announced in advance that no liquor would be sold; but they had so alienated good citizens by their course the previous year that the fair was a financial failure. If a few farmers cannot safely buy and sell liquors in a county fair, how much more will it be unsafe in a crowded gathering of all nations!

14. To the technical point that the Commission cannot make rules until it receives for modification the rules made by the Directory (which the nation believes are being held back, in discourtesy to the Commission, for the purpose of preventing action until too late, on this question), I respectfully reply that where a technical "rule" can not be made, a resolution equally effective can show the opinion of the Commission, and we hope you will resolve or rule liquors from the Fair without delay. At least appoint a committee of investigation, as asked by our petitions, which will really bring you the "rule" long ago made in this matter by the contracts, and so enable you to put your veto on this money-making by law-breaking and heart-breaking.

QUESTIONS BY COMMISSIONERS.

"What right has a national body to enforce State laws?"

The National Commission is required by its charter to protect State laws. There never was a stronger case of "State rights" than this. If the Commission approves the liquor-selling contracted for by the Directory, it will be an attack on the State's laws by the nation through you.

The penalties for the violation of these laws are in any case too light for an occasion of this kind. The beer-garden could afford to pay the fine every day. The National Commission must use its power as the deputy Congress in charge.

"What if this Commission, despite the laws, should approve the contracts?"

Then the Commission would become a criminal, but a criminal hard to arrest, and so it must obey the law in honor.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19, 1892.

Just before taking a recess to enable the members of the court and their families to go to Chicago for the dedicatory ceremonies of the World's Fair, Chief Justice Fuller announced the decision of the Supreme Court in the case involving the constitutionality of the Michigan electoral law, which was argued last week. The decision was unanimous, upholding the constitutionality of the new law providing for the election of Presidential electors by Congressional Districts, and the Chief Justice said that the formal opinion, covering the special points, legal and constitutional, would be handed down as soon as there was time to prepare it; and that it was the exigency of the case, owing to the nearness of the Presidential election, which had caused the decision to be announced in advance of the preparation of the opinion. In view of the fact that this was a political question upon which the validity of the election of a President might have turned, it is fortunate that it was decided before the election, and doubly fortunate that the decision was the unanimous verdict of a full bench.

Special Columbus sermons were preached in a number of the Protestant churches last Sunday, and elaborate services were held in all of the Catholic churches, in honor of the four-hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America. There are also to be celebrations in all of our schools on Friday and a torchlight parade in the evening. Most of the prominent government officials have gone to Chicago either to see or to take part in the ceremonies of dedicating the Exposition; and although the wives of several members of the Cabinet were extremely reluctant to go on a pleasure jaunt while Mrs. Harrison lies in such a precarious condition, all of them, at the special request of President Harrison, accompanied their husbands. Being unable to go himself or to have any member of his family there, Mr. Harrison was particularly anxious that the Cabinet should be as fully represented as possible, and that the social side of official life should be represented by their wives and daughters.

There seems to be some reason which prevents the successful publication of a religious or temperance paper in this city. The National Methodist, which started on its career a few months ago under what appeared to be the most auspicious conditions, has changed hands, got into the courts, and, I believe, suspended publication.

The 375 Washington delegates to the International Christian Endeavor Convention in New York, last July, held a very pleasant reunion this evening. The church was handsomely decorated, and after an interesting program consisting of short addresses, music, etc., the delegates enjoyed an elegant lunch.

No single act of the Triennial Episcopal Convention in Baltimore gave more general satisfaction here than the adoption of the resolution providing that a petition be addressed to the various governments of the world in favor of the arbitration of all international differences, and for the distribution of copies of this petition among Christian organizations to assemble at Chicago during the Columbian Exposition, the idea being for every Christian organization to unite in signing these petitions before they are presented to our own and foreign governments. No greater or worthier crusade was ever started than that which Christianity has undertaken against war between nations, and should it succeed before the close of the nineteenth century, as it is eventually bound to succeed, great as have been the material and moral accomplishments of the present century, it will be among the noblest of them all.

"How is Mrs. Harrison to-day?" is a question oftener asked than any other in Washington these days. Every one seems deeply interested in the good daughter, mother, grandmother, sister, wife and Christian who lies stricken with consumption, in the White House, giving the world a striking example of how a good and upright woman calmly and cheerfully submits to the will of One who knows best. All of Mrs. Harrison's immediate family, with the simple exception of her only brother, Judge Scott, of Port Townsend, Washington, are now with her, and he is expected in a few days. She has reached that stage of the disease where sudden changes are dangerous, and all around her realize that while she may linger for months, she may die in a few hours, and are prepared, as she is, for the worst. Grave fears are expressed that the anxiety of President Harrison will undermine his own health. The close companionship that has for many years existed between him and his wife renders his burden a hard one indeed; but he looks above for strength to bear it.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, Oct. 21, 1892.

The staid old city of Boston is in the throes of the four-hundredth birthday of the discovery of America. Of course the tumult is not equal to "uproarious Chicago," but "it is enough." It will continue while politicians or a world-worshipping church can make votes at elections, or advance the schemes of the despotism on the Tiber.

Presumably we shall be treated to another chapter of hero-worship next Sabbath, and the press will issue another volume of sermons, according to Christopher Columbus as interpreted by the "Holy Mother Church." It would seem as if last Sabbath's panegyrics ought to satiate the most omniverous who relish that kind of pabulum, but when the craze once gets on, no mortal can divine when or where it will end.

Read, in flaming head-lines, on the first page of the Boston Herald of the 17th inst.: "Churches Celebrate Columbus Day. Services in Memory of the Great Discoverer. Special Observance by Order of the Pope," etc., followed by sketches and skeletons of forty-eight eulogiums on the "Great Discoverer." It is interesting to notice that the fullest report given is of the only one by a Jewish Rabbi, and that reports of the twenty-eight Roman Catholic service occupy as least four times the space given to the nineteen services held by Protestants. There is another fact even more significant. These reports are, with six or seven exceptions, meagre outlines, and the things omitted are necessarily more than the things mentioned. It is justice to the reporter to suppose, however, that he seized upon the most prominent thoughts and gave them to his readers. A careful scrutiny of these reports gives us the fact that Christ's name was used by five of the forty-eight speakers—three Romanists and two Protestants—while the name and fame of Christopher Columbus appears in nearly every report, however brief. Does not this show, at least, the trend of the secular press, and is it not giving "His glory to another" and a desecration of the Lord's holy day?

Accepting these reports as bordering on the facts, it would seem that we are already well advanced in a new dispensation of gospel according to Columbus, in which Christ is relegated to the shades. It is a gospel like that of the imposter Schweinfurth, perhaps, teaching that we have got beyond the law and out from under the restraints of the Decalogue, or that teaches future probation, and that it is safe for a man to die in his sins; a gospel with Christ and the atonement omitted, and the Virgin mother of God, the Holy Catholic church and her devoted son and servant Christopher Columbus, inserted. Doubtless Bro. J. M. Foster and our Covenanter brethren would say this is the outgrowth and legitimate fruit of an atheistic constitution as the basis of our civil compact; that ignoring the kingly prerogatives of Christ is the first step towards a Godless nation; that this semi-deification of Columbus is simply elevating him to an empty throne which of right belongs to Christ, but from which he is excluded. There is certainly force in the facts and logic by which this claim is supported, and it is certainly time for every disciple of Christ to pay his vows of loyalty, and "render unto God the things that are God's."

In justice, I ought to make one exception before closing this letter. Dr. A. A. Miner is the one who, as reported, seems to have read and interpreted history aright, and then showed the courage to declare his convictions. Whatever estimate we may have of the doctor's theology, we must accord him the honor of a grand old hero on many a hotly-contested battlefield of reform, and it is quite evident that he does not "take kindly" to the idea of worshipping the creature who blundered on to a continent more than the Creator who made it. The doctor finds more to admire in a loving Providence, who directed and protected an adventurer in his perilous voyage, than he does in the gold-seeker, the aspirant for fame, the harsh and cruel pledge-maker who violated the instruction of his sovereign, "and carried natives home with him to be slaves." To take such a stand in ordinary times is not a test of character; but just now when the whole city is like Ephesus, shouting "great is Diana of the Ephesians," going wild with the Columbus craze, it means a great deal, and reveals the true hero. It would be greatly to the furtherance of righteousness and truth if more of the so-called orthodox ministers would show a similar willingness to incur the world's censure when necessary to rebuke "wickedness in high places." J. P. STODDARD.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN NEW YORK.

WALTON, N. Y., Oct. 21, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—At no time is the reform agent brought to realize more that he is not on the popular side than when trying to enlist those from whom he should expect help in a convention like the one soon to be held here. There are a score or more of ministers within a radius of twenty miles that would rejoice exceedingly if every lodge in our land was overthrown and prohibited by law. Ministers in their parlors or studies have told me enough of their observation of the evil effects of secret societies to arouse this entire country if proclaimed in public. They have seen the remains of neighbors who have drank themselves to death buried with so-called Masonic honors. On funeral and other occasions they have witnessed professed infidels read prayers and engage in exercises shocking to ordinary decency, to say nothing of Christianity.

One minister, known to all in this section as a gentleman, a scholar, and a leader in Christian thought, lectured me for fully half an hour in his study on the evils of Masonry, and when I asked him to say at our convention what he had said to me, replied that he had no time to prepare an address. He was working in a quiet way; did not wish to make himself conspicuous, as at least five of his leading members were in the lodge. In a former charge he had alienated some of the good brethren by being too outspoken. Others, when asked, have given various excuses, some doubtless good, and others I could but believe gotten up for the occasion. The pastor of a church excluding secret society members from fellowship, who had heard the lodge question discussed in college, and had attended at least one Anti-masonic convention, replied, when asked to speak at least ten minutes at our convention: "I

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ANTI-SECRECY MISSIONARY FOR INDIA.

[In the first paragraph of the following letter, Bro. Gladwin mentions his call for "fifty men wanted for India." His circular was so similar to one printed in the Cynosure of September 8, 1892, that it was deemed inadvisable to reprint it. Now Bro. Gladwin wants fifty, instead of twenty-four men, to assist him.]

BOMBAY, India, September, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Were your readers startled by the call for "Fifty Men Wanted for India?" That was not a bit surprising. If I had spoken of the wants of India at large, I should have said 5,000 men wanted; or still more; truly, 50,000 are wanted for India. But my call for fifty men only pointed to the number which I could, with the help of God's people, speedily introduce into safe and successful mission work. Two men have recently come, one from England, and another from Scotland, to my little "Cherith Home," and they find needy and open doors waiting for them.

If I had the right kind of men here on the ground, I could find blessed openings for a score of them within a month. By the term "right kind of men," I mean New Testament saints, Pauline workers, men who are in the true apostolical succession. How I wonder that they do not come: the reapers to the harvest; the soldiers to the battle front; the faithful saints to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

Now I wish to write specially about a missionary coming to take up a direct fight against the overspreading plague of secret societies. I have before me the letter of C. B. Ward in the Cynosure of the 21st July. I want to take exception to two of his points. (1) He says: "It seems almost wrong to ask short-handed Cynosure supporters to help India." No, it is the "little flock," the "Gideon's Band," who are just the ones to undertake still greater things for God. Bro. Ward himself is a marked specimen of one who has his hands more than full of work, and can always undertake some new strong enterprises. I have just received a letter from him, that he is undertaking a new job of vernacular editing, in addition to his already heavy duties in his blessed mission work. The comparatively small anti-secrecy party in America have had great faith and works. They have followed the noble motto of that grand old missionary Carey: "Expect great things from God. Attempt great things for God." The N. C. A. has planted artillery for firing at long range. Its shots are already taking blessed effect in India. They are just the ones whose enthusiasm and devotion can undertake a great deal more.

(2) Another item of Bro. Ward's I object to is this: "I do not expect this thought to materialize yet, but it ought to do so." I am surprised to see my "Faith Mission" comrade taking the place of doubting Thomas. But there is this apology for him—that he had not been to America for a great many years, and he does not know how much faith and fire there is about the Cynosure office, the Wheaton College, and the rapidly spreading work of the National Christian Association in America. Now I expect the thought to materialize. Let us join our faith and works and disappoint Bro. Charles, Ben, and the rest of the doubters.

Illinois gave us Ben Ward; Missouri gave us Ben Reynolds (my first colporteur-evangelist); Arkansas gave India a Watchman man; and I am sure there is plenty more such material in the Western States, if we could only get them out to India, where they could be properly developed.

Let us look on this matter in downright earnest. Let us make it a subject of special prayer. I am sure that if a hundred readers of the Cynosure were to pray over this matter as they ought, it would very speedily materialize into men and means. Let us set our minds, hearts and hands to getting out one good man as speedily as possible. Why can he not come out this autumn? I am sure he is there somewhere, ready, qualified and waiting. But perhaps he has not yet heard his call this way. The united prayers of a number of God's people will lay this call upon his heart. When he is willing to leave all and follow this call in the true martyr spirit, God will open the way for him to come. It will not be with a first-class passage, as I came out twenty-one years ago. It will doubtless be via the steerage and deck-passage as I have since twice made the voyage between New York and Bombay. It will not be with a guarantee of the easy-fitting salary of a city pastor, but may possibly be to some without any promise whatever of support outside of God's Word. That is the line upon which I am now laboring. The man who is willing in the day of God's power will hear God's call and come in obedience to his command, whether special provision is made for his future or not.

It is not necessary that he should be officially appointed by the N. C. A. That body may not deem it advisable to assume the apparent responsibility of sending a man so far upon this peculiar mission. The members of the Association may not all have sufficient acquaintance with the man to accept the responsibility, or they may not all quite have faith in God to expect the means to be forthcoming for the project. Faith is generally more of an individual matter than the commodity of a community. Here is the great field waiting. Here is a mighty work to be done. Bro. Ward's letter has shown how that Christianity is shamed, Gospel work hindered, non-Christian inquirers deceived, and Satan's kingdom promoted by the spread of European secret societies in India. Think of these points. Study them earnestly. Pray for great India, with her 288,000,000 of souls.

Who will hear this call: "Come over into Asia and help us?" Who will hear God's command: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature?" Let any number of awakened souls who are stirred by these thoughts write to us. You may write both to the Secretary of the N. C. A., W. I. Phillips, Cynosure office, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., and also to the undersigned. Please note the items as to religious experience, etc., in my circular "Fifty Men Wanted For India."

Yours in the light of the world,

WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

THE ERA OF NATIONAL REFORM.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 11, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The opposition of the Roman Catholics to the public schools, which led to the expulsion of Swinton's history, resulted in the holdings of patriotic meetings in Music Hall every Sabbath afternoon. The usual services of hymn-singing, accompanied with instruments, solo singing, etc., reading the Scriptures and prayer, are engaged in. These are followed by an address.

Last April your correspondent was invited to preach there. One theme was: "The Judgment of Anti-Christ." Another invitation was extended by the committee to preach there on the first and second Sabbaths of October, the theme of the one being, "The State and Romanism;" the other, "The Relation of Church and State." In the first of these prominence was given to the mediatorial dominion of Christ. In the second the principles underlying the national reform movement were discussed. In the third the political dissent of Reformed Presbyterians was defended. By arrangement with the committee, we had several Psalms printed on slips and distributed, and the precursor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church, Prof. John McLelland, led the audience in singing the Psalms without an instrument; and they sang wonderfully well. It was grand. We also had 400 copies of our pamphlet, "Romanism, Political Atheism and the Secret Empire, our Triple Foe," distributed as the audience dispersed. These three lectures were also printed in full in the American Citizen, 7 Bromfield street, Boston. So that these principles received a wide circulation.

I regard this as a providential opportunity for proclaiming the truth: That, on the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, when the thoughts of the people are being turned to the great principles upon which our civil and religious liberty is based, a Covenanter should be called to such a place meant a command to call this nation's attention to the crown-rights and royal prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ; that the only hope of national triumph is in placing the hand of this nation in the hand that was pierced. The secularism of our government is just as dangerous as Romanism. France and the Reign of Terror are an object-lesson against secularism. Spain and the Inquisition are a warning against the fatal effects of Rome rule. The true Christian patriot will point the nation to Him who is the desire of all nations, unto whom the gathering of the people shall be. This nation must honor Christ and bow to his scepter, or perish. To impress this fact upon this nation, Covenanters have separated from the political body. The apostles and early Christians separated from Rome pagan, and paganism fell. The Reformers separated from the papacy in the sixteenth century, and the beast received a wound unto death. The Abolitionists separated from this government, because the Constitution supported slavery. The members of the Christian Association separate from all secret oath-bound lodges of the secret empire; and so Covenanters separate from the political society of voters in this land, because of the political atheism embodied in the supreme law of the land. If Republican Prohibitionists separate from that party because they cannot accept the platform; if Democratic Prohibitionists separate from that party because they cannot accept the platform of that party; then Covenanters are justified in separating from the voting society, because they cannot accept the Constitution under which the body accepts of authority. That is the most powerful remedy.

MAGAZINES.

The Missionary Review of the World for November has the following interesting table of contents: Literature of Missions: The Metropolitan Tabernacle as a Missionary Center, by the Editor-in-Chief; The Samoan Mission of the London Missionary Society, Rev. J. E. Newell, D.D.; Native Instrumentality in Foreign Missions, Rev. A. Bunker, D.D.; How Shall the Interest of Our Missionary Meetings be Increased? Mrs. Ethan Curtis; Johann Ludwig Knapp, a Pioneer of African Missions, Rev. F. Wilkinson; Prayer and Missionary Work, W. D. Rudland; Our Indebtedness to Christ for Temporal Blessings.—III., Rev. T. Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, 18 & 20 Astor Place, New York.

Among many hygienic periodicals, the Sanitary Era, a progressive health journal published monthly by Wm. C. Conant, P. O. box 3059, New York City, has peculiar claims upon public favor by presenting in popular form important health news; the latest advances in sanitary science, and the hygienic needs of the people and the best methods of supplying them. The number before us is an excellent specimen of this journal, containing information of importance "for citizens, mothers, nurses, invalids—everybody." It has valuable commendations from health officers, members of State boards of health, civil engineers and physicians. A peculiar feature of each issue is its monthly tables of mortality in various towns and cities, and monthly weather averages, by which the climatic conditions and death rates in numerous sections of the country may easily be determined.

The Century will take up the Bible and Science controversy. In the November number Professor Charles W. Shields, of Princeton, answers the question "Does the Bible contain Scientific Errors?" with an emphatic no. He says: "Literary and textual obscurities there may be upon the surface of Holy Writ, like spots upon the sun, or rather like moles in the eye; but scientific error in its divine purport would be the sun itself extinguished at noon. Such a Bible could not live in this epoch." Professor Shields' article will be followed by one in the December Century on "The Effect of Scientific Study upon Religious Beliefs."

The October issue of the Cup-Bearer, for young people, like many of its predecessors, presents numerous pleasant and profitable features. Its mission is to "supply the youth of the land with literature that shall amuse, instruct, renew and elevate the plastic and eager mind; something that every parent will hail as a safe and charming companion, as well as a real educator and character-builder." It is certainly very attractive. Published at 358 Burling street, Chicago.

The Galaxy of Music for October, with its forty-four pages of vocal and instrumental compositions, is received. Among the songs (words and music) are selections by Gounod, Reyloff, Randegger and Clifton. The instrumental part is by Delibes, Spindler, Czibulka, Behr, etc. The price, 10 cents a copy, or $1.00 a year, is the most remarkable thing about the Galaxy. May be had of all newsdealers or from the publisher, F. Trifet, 408 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Our Animal Friends, published monthly by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, is furnished to subscribers for $1.00 a year. It is worth many times that amount in any family of intelligence. Stories and information relating to dumb animals, with original and instructive articles of interest to all animal owners, regularly fill its pages.

Similar in character, quite as worthy in its objects, and deserving of a liberal patronage, is the Humane Journal, published by Albert W. Landon, Chicago. Illustrated with admirable engravings in profusion, its pages teem with articles whose humane spirit should induce young and old to render proper care to every living creature dependent upon our bounty. $1 a year.

Vick's Magazine for October is replete with numerous valuable suggestions and instructions for gardeners, florists and fruit-raisers, enlivened with many illustrations. Its price is only 50 cents a year. Published at Rochester, N. Y.

OBITUARY.

Another all-around reformer and warm friend of the anti-secrecy cause, Rev. THOMAS BROWN McCORMICK, was born in Todd county, Ky., Dec. 23, 1811; and died at Princeton, Gibson county, Ind., October 2, 1892.

Bro. McCormick derived his being from Scotch-Irish parents, morally very strict, yet kind and affectionate. The lad, as he grew to manhood, exhibited considerable wildness, notwithstanding his surroundings; but in his twentieth year he was thoroughly converted and became the willing servant of the Lord.

He united with the C. P. church and some time afterwards commenced preaching. He was formally ordained in 1839, and Nov. 4th, of the same year, he was married to Miss Mary S. Shaffer, by whom he had two children, Samuel D. and Elizabeth F., both of whom entered the spirit world before him, their mother having died Oct. 26, 1849.

In May, 1850, he was married to Miss Mary A. McClure, who, with one son, Mr. James McCormick, the editor of the Prohibition Era, published at Princeton, Ind., survive him.

Mr. McCormick preached successfully in Kentucky, but his anti-slavery sentiments made life unpleasant, and in 1840 he removed with his family to Princeton. There for several years he served as pastor of a church; but resigned to accept the agency of the American Tract Society of which he was a life member, to distribute their publications, in which he was very successful, going from house to house, preaching two or three times each week and selling books and giving away tracts.

Early in life he became a Mason. He did not at first see the sinfulness of the institution until his attention was called to the fact by a lady in whose piety he had the utmost confidence; and as the Spirit of Christ gave him light he was led to renounce and denounce the institution as an enemy of the church. He lectured some against it and held some public discussions with the friends of Masonry.

He early espoused the cause of temperance, and in his last years advocated prohibition as the only right way to deal with the liquor business; and he never to his latest days lost faith in the ultimate success of the prohibition cause, but with the same prophetic voice which declared the overthrow of slavery, even when he stood almost alone in his views, he declared that prohibition must succeed "because it was right." He was radical in his stand on this question just as he was on the slavery question.

In his pastoral life in Kentucky his anti-slavery doctrines brought him into opposition to the community in which he lived, and made him the victim of the persecution which overtook so many who dared openly to denounce the vital institution of the South. He was indicted for the crime of abducting and stealing slaves and sending them to the free States. To escape the vengeance of the law he fled to Indiana. By the advice of Gov. Morton he returned to Kentucky in 1862; but the war against slavery was in full force, and within a year the "peculiar institution" was killed by the Emancipation Proclamation.

After that, although his health had failed, he did what he could for the good of humanity, and years of peace followed in his home, with the assurance that good men everywhere vindicated his course. After weeks of severe affliction, God said: "Enough, enter into the joys of your Lord." So, when near eighty-one years of age, he fell asleep in Jesus.

His funeral took place from his residence October 3d, conducted by his old friend, Levin Wilson, assisted by Rev. W. A. Provine, of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and Rev. M. A. Campbell, of the United Presbyterian church of his city. His remains were followed to the grave by a large number of those who had known him in life. Peace to his ashes.

As staple as sugar, and equally if not more useful is Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

No body advertises that his blood medicine doesn't amount to much. They're all of them "the best." But there's only one of them that's good enough to guarantee—and that is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. With that, if it fails to benefit or cure, in any case, you have your money back.

It's a medicine that cures, in all diseases caused by a torpid liver or impure blood. It's not like the sarsaparillas, which claim to do good in March, April, and May. All the year round, with equal benefit, it cleanses, invigorates, and builds up the entire system. If you're bilious, "run-down," or dyspeptic, or suffering from any blood-taint or disorder, that's the medicine you need. For the worst forms of Scrofula, and in the most stubborn Skin and Scalp Diseases, such as Salt-rheum, Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, and all kindred ailments, nothing can equal it as a perfect and permanent remedy. The genuine sold for $1.00. Beware of spurious imitations or dilutions, offered at less prices.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1892.

O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness; let the whole earth stand in awe of him.—PSALM 6: 9.

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH.

Reformers and Christian workers long ago learned the hollowness, the falsity of the ancient motto, "Vox populi, vox Dei—the voice of the people is the voice of God;" for while, as it is expressed in the Declaration of Independence, "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind" is honorable and often profitable, public opinion is quite as apt to be erroneous as correct. A memorable instance of this is found in Matt. 27: 15-23, where the multitude, without expressing an adequate reason, demanded the crucifixion of our Lord, and brought the curse of God upon them.

Nor is it safe, always, to believe that "vox ecclesie, vox Dei;" indeed, the records of history are filled with the mistakes of the church in all ages, and it must be confessed that it is still liable to err very materially in doctrines handed down to us by "godly men as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" in the days of the early Christians. For this reason, while it is proper to promote "a decent respect" for the church militant and its ordinances, it is inconsiderate to believe in its infallibility. It is better, always, to accept the Bible, which is our best exponent of the voice of God, as the only rule of right living and right government.

This being the case, and it being also the mission of the church to properly mold public opinion, especially in religion and morals, it is subject to more criticism and diversity of influence than any other institution. If it aims only at popularity and the accumulation of wealth and power by the sacrifice of its spirituality, it has no right to claim a position as the mouthpiece of the great Head of the church; if it is honeycombed with Freemasonry, which is the modern representative of ancient paganism, its voice is only a falsetto, and its dogmas and practices are not in accordance with the voice and Spirit of the Lord. In such a case it is not a trustworthy adviser.

There are many such churches in this day, strangling their spirituality and usefulness by a division of their strength with the secret lodges; and, too often, the lodge depletes the church attendance, the fires on its altars grow cold from neglect, and the substance of its members is diverted from the sacred treasury to the support of secret mummeries and unholy banquets.

This terrible blight of secretism, and the insidious manner in which it has invaded churches once pure and faithful to their Lord, tending to destroy them and bring upon their members condign punishment for their double-mindedness, is one reason why the National Christian Association was formed, and is its strongest incentive for opposing the secret lodge in all its various guises. We look upon the lodge as the dangerous foe of the church of Christ—as displaying the captivating spirit of the serpent in Eden, and, like him, entailing misery upon all who at heart believe its siren songs and fables. For more than sixty-five years, Freemasonry (which Mackey says "is not Christianity, and not even a substitute for it") has been openly arraigned before the tribunal of the world as a promoter of assassination, treason and other capital crimes; and yet there are churches, nominally "brides" of Christ, which have taken this serpent to their bosoms, and nurtured it by their influence and prayers, seeing no evil in it, but believing it to be, as the Freemasons claim, the innocent "handmaiden of Christianity."

It is time that this hypocrisy should cease; that the church should hasten to divorce herself from this insidious destroyer; that it should become a stench in her nostrils, and be no longer the leech that thrives upon her life's-blood. SEPARATION should be her watchword and the primary and ultimate object of her efforts to purify herself from the influences of the world, the flesh and the devil, which are, all summed up, the abominations of lodgeism.

True reformers may and do heartily thank God that there are several churches of Christ which have discarded lodge principles and lodge members from their communion, have renounced the hidden works of darkness, and have arrayed themselves as the uncompromising foes of the secret empire. These are our friends and co-workers. We love them; we rejoice in their fellowship, and they have our prayers and most sincere and earnest wishes for their welfare.

WHAT THESE CHURCHES ARE SAYING.

"If our lives are hid with Christ in God, we will have no desire to affiliate with secret societies."—Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends, 1892.

"Resolved, That we, as a conference, will continue in the future, as we have in the past, to put forth vigorous effort for the overthrow of all secret combinations."—Free Methodist Conference of Michigan, 1892.

"Believing all secret societies to be unscriptural and opposed to just and equal rights between man and man, and that they are being used to corrupt both church and nation, therefore we stand opposed to them in all their forms."—West Kansas Free Methodist Conference, 1892.

"Though the Free Methodist church stands as a unit against all secret societies, she is not so aggressive in her opposition as she should be. Hence we recommend that our ministers on the various circuits, as far as practicable, put themselves in communication with the nearest anti-secret lecture bureau, for the purpose of securing lecturers to speak upon the subject; also, to endeavor to circulate among the people upon their respective circuits, good anti-secret publications, such as the Birmingham Free Press and the Christian Cynosure; and, further, we recommend that our ministers be faithful in presenting this important issue to their congregations. While men are building hopes of eternal happiness upon the quicksands of secrecy, let us preach this doctrine—'other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.'"—Free Methodist Conference, Iowa, 1892.

We are indebted to Bro. Lawrie Tatum, of Springdale, Iowa, for the following abstract from the Minutes of Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends recently held in Oskaloosa.

"We encourage you [our members] to be faithful in maintaining our testimony on Peace, Temperance, and against Secret Societies and Lotteries. If our lives are hid with Christ in God we will have no desire to affiliate with secret societies. Brethren, 'have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.'"

These extracts will serve to show how and when the voice of the church is the voice of God.

THE A. P. A.'S PRINCIPLES.

The A. P. A. is a political secret society, known as a "patriotic" order, but is similar to the Orangemen's societies, having the same purpose and probably as little grace. Its declared object is to oppose and disfranchise Roman Catholics, but just how this is to be done does not clearly appear. It is also accused of resorting to the circulation of "false and forged circulars" to sustain its methods, and on this account was recently severely denounced in public by Rev. Washington Gladden, a Protestant, in the First Congregational church at Columbus, Ohio; and his discourse has been widely discussed, it is said, throughout that State.

If the evils of which the A. P. A. complains are so very bad, why this secrecy of action? Let it come out openly and submit its grievances to the people who are the sufferers by them. The court of public opinion will soon decide whether they shall continue to afflict the country, or endanger its liberties. Its secrets are no secrets to those whom it opposes; and if its methods are as bad as Dr. Gladden intimates, its principles must be evil also.

—An editorial review of the dedication of the World's Fair buildings and other articles are necessarily laid over until next week.

—Friends and acquaintances of Mrs. S. B. Allen, of Wheaton, were surprised on Friday last by her sudden death. The deceased was a sister of the late President Jonathan Blanchard, with whom she made her home until his demise in May last. She was in her eighty-sixth year. Her funeral was largely attended on Sunday by sorrowing relatives and neighbors. An obituary is soon to appear in these columns.

don't know anything about the subject. The Lord has not called me to oppose secret societies." Not five minutes after this, the man said he regarded such secret societies as Masonry and I. O. O. F. a curse to the nation. Men who never refuse to address a Christian Endeavor Convention, a Sabbath-school gathering, the Y. M. C. A., or other popular religious meeting of this nature, "have no time to prepare," "are not conversant with the subject," etc., etc. If these excuses can answer a good conscience toward God, all right; but at times our heart is made very sad believing they can not.

To-day the Masons and so-called Red Men are to bury a man who belonged to their societies. So far as I can learn, this man never made any profession of religion other than the lodge. The exercises will be in the Congregational church.

We are going to have a good convention, be our numbers few or many. God will be with us, and those who attend will receive a blessing. Daniel's God is ours, and by his grace we will be steadfast, knowing that our labor will not be in vain in the Lord.

We spent a pleasant Sabbath at Barnerville, Schoharie Co. Opportunity was offered to speak twice to good audiences. One lodge-man, evidently having down much of that which steals away brains, made himself ridiculous by constant ejaculations.

Our Free Methodist brethren cared for our temporal needs. It was an especial pleasure to meet our aged brother Wentworth; he is known, far and near, by the faithful testimony he has borne. Bro. Wm. Patterson and others from there hope to be with us at the convention. More anon.

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

On Tuesday, Oct. 11, the same day of the meeting of the German Lutheran pastors of Northern Illinois at Oak Park, the United Presbyterian Synod of Illinois met at Aledo. This is an enterprising town near the Mississippi, to the south of Rock Island, and half way between that city and Monmouth. Rev. Mr. Storey is pastor of a hospitable people here, who worship in a large and well-appointed building.

Our cause was not less welcome here than in Oak Park. I could not easily reach the Synod until the last day, but through the kind agency of Rev. Mr. Howie, of our N. C. A. Board, and Dr. Campbell, of the Second Church, Monmouth, an opportunity was given to urge the importance of our reform, though United Presbyterians are not unaware of its vital character. Later in the evening, after popular addresses by Rev. Mr. Montgomery, of Sparta, and Dr. Meloy, of Chicago, Rev. J. W. Collins, editor and manager of the Western department of the Christian Instructor, was chosen to represent the Synod at our annual meeting.

A notable feature of this last day of the Synod was the paper by Prof. White, of Xenia Theological Seminary, followed by his address on the Minor Prophets. Prof. White uses chart and blackboard illustrations freely and forcibly, and is an earnest student and popular speaker. The Synod heartily appreciated his addresses.

A precious revival has followed the State Conference of the Wesleyan churches at Kishwaukee, where the opening sermon was directed against the altars of the lodge as sheltering devil-worship. It is hoped that a lodge of Patrons of Industry, formed in the neighborhood, has been broken up by that gracious work of the Spirit. So, too, at Aledo. Bro. Storey had engaged Rev. Mr. Barr to aid him in evangelistic meetings following the Synod, and he ardently hoped that some whose feet were entangled in the lodge net would be rescued by God's grace. He thanked me personally for the remarks of the evening. God grant that the experience of Bro. Mullenix at Kishwaukee may be repeated in Aledo.

After renewing many old acquaintances and forming others that are as agreeable as new, I returned to Galesburg, where an appointment had been made in pastor Sundquist's church, the Mission Swede; and a day or two spent in visiting Drs. Bushnell and Sturtevant of the Congregational churches, and I was again away.

Miss Hand, of the New West Society, addressed large audiences in both on the important work of that agency among the Mormons. The Baptist pastors I found very cordial. Rev. Mr. Van Osdel, of the First Church, has but few lodge members, and labors to deliver them from their "unequal yoke." Bro. Leonard, of the Second Church (colored), is equally in earnest, but has a more difficult task. Bro. Boberg, of the Swedish Baptist church, came with his congregation to our meeting Sabbath evening, and gave earnest and material aid to its success. The new pastor of the Methodist church was found, I regret to say, of a different spirit. His heart seemed given to the lodge, and he wished no discussion of the subject.

The Swedish Methodists have also a new pastor, a young man, more timid than his predecessor, Bro. Johnson, who wished his people to hear an address on the lodge, and would have thus crowded our union meeting. An enthusiastic Y. M. C. A. meeting, on Sabbath afternoon, gave an opportunity for a few words and a notice of the evening meeting in the Mission Church, of which I was glad to see some of the young men take advantage.

The Mission Church was well-filled in the evening, and pastors Sundquist and Boberg aided to make the presentation of the truth effective. I was most kindly entertained in Galesburg by Mr. and Mrs. Hammond, old settlers in the city and warm supporters of every good cause.

The meeting of the Central West Congregational Association at Lawn Ridge, Ill., was my next point. This is a country church also, but formerly strong in numbers, in faith and influence. Death and removals have made large inroads, but Bro. Marsh, the pastor, hopes to renew the interest of the people and begins special services soon. The brethren here were friendly to me personally, but timid toward the reform. A revived Masonic lodge in the neighborhood clouds their vision, as if the smoke from its altar came between them and the Sun of righteousness. The truth was therefore hindered here, so far as I was its messenger; but I was thankful that Miss Hand, in her address on Mormonism, showed clearly the dangers of a false religion, the counterpart of the lodge.

But if this association would not give ear, I am invited to the meeting of the Fox River Association, at Streator, on the 24th, and trust that here and elsewhere open doors will be found for our cause.

M. N. BUTLER WORKING IN KANSAS.

OLATHE, Kans., Oct. 16, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Tuesday night found us in Kansas City, awaiting a train for Olathe, Kansas. In the waiting-room in the Union depot we passed around a number of "Handbooks" for the perusal of waiting travelers. After reading an hour or more, three expressed themselves as in accord with the same. The fourth, a traveling man, squirmed, read and squirmed again; then still read on. A long talk proved him to be a Knight of Pythias, of that city, but the reading convinced him that Masonry was altogether bad.

At Olathe we were most hospitably entertained by Father Curtis and his estimable wife. They are veterans in reform, and have borne the heat of battle for, lo, these many years. He is still firm and as strongly opposed to organized paganism as ever. Also Rev. W. W. McMillan, a Cynosure reader and R. P. minister, extended the right hand of fellowship and hearty good wishes. Rev. J. B. Dortch, retiring pastor of the Covenant church, was cordial, but busy with communion services for the coming Sabbath, assisted by Rev. J. M. Wylie, of Denver, Colo.

In the country we were glad to meet James Miller, W. H. McKee, Thompson Moore, and others, who did all in their power to aid in arranging meetings at Sunnyside, where a Bible-reading was given to a good audience on Friday night, and a brief synopsis of Masonic religion, along with the steps, grips, due-guards, signs, etc., of Masonry on the next night.

Saturday afternoon an able sermon by Rev. Mr. Wylie was listened to. We were happy and profited in meeting for the first time Rev. J. A. Richard, of Fort Scott, who was acting chairman of the South Kansas Wesleyan Methodist Conference convening in the city.

Olathe is given over to lodgery. It is reported that our old teacher, Rev. A. W. Bishop, the Congregational pastor, has donned the little white bib. The R. P.'s are comparatively safe from the lodge. But the U. P.'s are voters, and it appears the serpent is beguiling some of their membership into the orders. The Wesleyans are making a desperate stand. A licensed exhorter, boldly wearing the three links, was brought to task, and has agreed to face the other way.

Sabbath afternoon, Oct. 16, we gave a Bible-reading to an attentive audience in the Wesleyan chapel. Unless meetings can be held around such a city, arousing and enthusing the country people, so that an audience can be brought in from the rural districts in sympathy and touch with the speaker, it is useless to expect an audience in such a town where such rousing meetings were held ten years ago in the Opera Hall. A burnt child is afraid of the fire, and when the craft get one dose they will leave no stone unturned to defeat all future agitation. The only salvation for such places is to storm the rural stations with speeches and literature, tracts, books, etc.

M. N. BUTLER.

FROM THE WESTERN DEPARTMENT.

WAHOO, Neb., Oct. 18, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Bro. Gault and I are now at Wahoo attending the Nebraska Anti-secrecy Convention. We shall report it presently.

On Thursday and Friday evenings, Oct. 13 and 14, Bro. Gault and I addressed two audiences of our Swedish Lutheran people. On Thursday evening we addressed the Swedish Lutheran people in their church at Mead. We enjoyed the kind hospitality of Rev. C. G. Widen, their pastor. We find our Swedish church people earnest and reverent Christians. Their pastor preaches to them regularly in the Swedish tongue, yet they understand the English very well and gave us marked attention. We were gratified to find these people such sincere and uncompromising reformers. Several beautiful Swede songs were sung. Though Bro. Gault and I could not understand the words, yet the melody, harmony and spirit were easily understood. We went from among this people refreshed and invigorated.

At Swedeburg we found it much the same with Bro. Torell and his people. We were kindly entertained over night at the home of Bro. Torell. A large and attentive audience greeted us here also. They manifested the same readiness to receive strong doctrine, and Bro. Gault gave it to them. We addressed each of these audiences about two hours. We hope to find more of such, and also look in on these people again.

All the friends of this cause need to awaken at once and get together and counsel for the advancement of the cause of Christ. This flood of secretism must be stayed. Our Swedish brethren inform us that they have a very decided testimony against secretism, and that it is generally enforced. That is a matter of profound congratulation. Our prayer is that they may maintain this stand courageously. It is the only safe rule. What is a testimony worth without enforcement? It is but mockery. Farther, it is a grave mistake to have no testimony against it. One finds it hard to conceive how any church of Jesus Christ can allow her members, without warning, to join these lodges indiscriminately. We cannot serve at God's altars and the altars of Baal. If it were not lamentably and repeatedly true, it would be hard to conceive it.

Cordially yours, W. C. PADEN.

NEBRASKA ANTI-SECRECY STATE CONVENTION.

WAHOO, Neb., Oct. 19, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The first session of our Anti-secrecy State Convention is over.

It was most encouraging in every respect. Our speakers are all on hand except Rev. E. B. Graham, and his place was ably filled, last night, by Rev. Thomas M. Chalmers, of Lawrence, Kan. The large Covenant church, located opposite the Court House, and brilliantly illuminated with electric lights, was crowded to its utmost capacity. The professors and students of Luther Academy were out in force. The singing, led by J. R. Dodds and S. H. Carlisle, with a large choir of the best singers of Wahoo, furnished excellent music. It consisted of selections from the Bible Songs; also Bro. W. C. Padea, and Miss Jennie Beebe and Miss Stella Harrison, who are singers of fine culture, furnished inspiring solos.

The Dodds family sang a temperance song with rousing effect.

There are present quite a number of delegates from various parts of the State, among whom are Rev. S. Austin, of York; Rev. John Trace, of Pleasant Hill; Rufus Parks and Charles Hoover, of Alexandria; Rev. John M. French, Omaha; Rev. L. Proudfit, of Dunbar; Rev. J. W. Morton, of North Loup, and many others.

Dr. D. H. Coulter was elected chairman. He makes an admirable presiding officer, having a rare faculty of inspiring a convention with his keen and telling manner of putting things.

After reading the 43d Psalm, he called upon Rev. S. Austin, who opened the convention with prayer.

Dr. Coulter and Bro. Thomas M. Chalmers then occupied the evening with addresses on "The Significance of the Growth of Secretism," and "The Origin, Character and Religion of Freemasonry." The audience was held in rapt attention till nearly 10 o'clock. We never heard the false assumptions, selfishness, dangerous influence and immoral character of the lodge more pointedly, forcibly and clearly exposed. No brief abstract could do justice to these able addresses. They were delivered with the eloquence of strong conviction, and manifestly accompanied with the power of the Holy Spirit.

Miss Annabel Lee gave the address of welcome. She represented the State in the last Demorest Medal Contest, at the National Prohibition Convention in Cincinnati, and has fine elocutionary ability.

Last Sabbath the Lord wonderfully opened the doors of the churches of Wahoo for the presentation of the cause. Bro. Paden preached in the Presbyterian church in the morning, and at a union service of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches in the evening. Dr. D. H. Coulter occupied the pulpit of the Covenant church, morning and evening. I preached in the Congregational church in the morning, and in the Swedish Lutheran in the evening.

At all of these services the convention was thoroughly announced, and its programs distributed among the worshipers. There are indications that the town is being thoroughly stirred by the convention, and the best people in all the churches are in attendance. Especially is this true of our Swedish Lutheran brethren.

Bro. Paden and I visited the Academy and addressed the students on Monday morning. They are all deeply interested, and Prof. Hill has kindly dismissed them from recitations, in order that they may attend the convention.

Last Thursday and Friday evenings, Bro. Paden and I addressed large and successful meetings in the Swedish Lutheran churches at Mead and Swedeburg, in Saunders Co. We are more and more impressed with the strength, deep religious conviction and loyalty to Christ of these Swedish Christians, and their uncompromising fidelity to the anti-secrecy cause.

M. A. GAULT.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, was held in the Congregational church at Canterbury, Oct. 6-9. The attendance was good, and the convention one of the best ever held by the Association.

The bottom would seem to be dropping out of the lodge tub, when, as at this meeting, two reformed Royal Arch Masons publicly exhibited the "grip of the lion's paw," and exposed the folly and wickedness of lodgeism.

Robert A. Frohock, of Alton, a foremost Prohibitionist, and one of the brightest young men in the State, was elected president, and Deacon James F. French, of Canterbury, treasurer. The principal speakers were Revs. D. B. Gunn, of Boston; A. L. Smith, of South Newmarket; J. H. Bartlett, of Center Barnstead; Mrs. E. K. Jewett, of Hollis; Evangelists H. J. Pierson and wife, of Boston.

About thirty unconverted people turned to the Lord, and Bro. Pierson and wife, by request of the church, tarried to continue the meetings. The blessed power of the Holy Spirit overshadowed the meeting from first to last.

The writer was reappointed State Agent and Home Missionary.

THE HOME.

THE SOUL'S DEVOTION.

Rest, worship, service! Rest divine
O'erflows and floods this day of thine.
I trust thy finished work alone,
And rest in what my Lord has done.

Worship, rest, service! Worship high
Is thine to whom the angels cry.
With burning seraphs will I sing
Thy glory only, God, my King.

Service, rest, worship! Service sweet
I would lay, Master, at thy feet;
In lowly ministry to men
Would tread thy lowly steps again.

Rest, worship, service! Saints in light,
Rest, worship, serve with ardor bright!
Our holy day, our Lord's Day blest
Be bright with worship, service, rest!

"ONLY A BOY."

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

It was a hot, sultry afternoon in August. The shadows and fields seemed to sleep in the burning heat. The cattle stood panting under the trees, and even the birds and butterflies had, for the time, disappeared. The air fairly quivered with heat. The long country road stretched like a low ribbon towards the south. The only person visible was a lad of fifteen, who was toiling laboriously up the hill just where the road sloped towards the south. He was barefooted, and his clothes, once of good quality, were now tattered and threadbare; but he had a noble head, an intelligent face, and was refined and gentlemanly bearing.

He stopped as he reached the top of the hill and said: "It is now three weeks since Uncle Frank died, and since that time I have been a tramp. I cannot get work, for nobody wants a boy; but I have been told that Farmer Gardiner would probably take me. That must be his house up yonder." He walked up the path to the house and knocked timidly at the door. It was opened by a servant who eyed him suspiciously.

"Please, ma'am, can I see Mr. Gardiner?" "He is not at home." "Then can I see his wife?" "No; go away; we don't want you." "But I want to see his wife just a moment."

The servant beckoned, and a tall woman, dressed in a crimson wrapper, came to the door. "What do you want?" she said to the boy. "Please, ma'am, do you want to hire a boy?" "No," she said. "But will you take me on trial for a few days, and then, if not suited, you can send me away?" "We don't want you. Send him away," she said to the servant; "no matter what he says; he is only a boy!" and the servant shut the door, leaving the boy standing alone on the door-step.

He walked slowly down the path, musing bitterly on his fate. "Well," he said, "I have tried, and I expected it. Well, it cannot be helped." Near the left-hand side of the path was an orchard; near the fence, or hedge, was a sweet-scented apple-tree and the ground beneath it was generally covered with the fruit. The boy sprang over the fence saying, "There can be no harm in my eating a few of Gardiner's apples, even if he will not employ me;" and he stretched his tired and heated frame upon the grass. All the afternoon the desolate and homeless boy lay there under the apple-tree. He saw the carriage containing the wife and daughters of Gardiner drive down the street; he heard the voices of the hay-makers in the meadow beyond the orchard; and the sounds, combined with the heat, produced a drowsiness which overpowered him, and he fell asleep.

A clap of thunder awoke him. He sprang up. The heavens were overcast with clouds, and the rain was beginning to fall. Down the street the carriage containing the wife and daughters of Gardiner was approaching. The boy rested listlessly upon his elbow, watching it. Suddenly a gigantic hound sprang in front of the carriage, and the next instant the horses were tearing madly down the street on a wild run. The boy comprehended it all in an instant. He cleared the fence at a bound, and rushing in front of the maddened horses he seized the bits of the one nearest, and held on. He was dragged several rods, but by a superhuman effort he jerked the animal to one side and out of the road, and the team was brought to a standstill in front of a fence. The horses were uninjured. The woman and children were safe; but the boy? He lay a broken, bruised and senseless mass beneath the horses' feet.

When he woke to consciousness he was lying upon a couch beside an open window in a cool, dimly-lighted room. A tall woman in a crimson wrapper stood beside him. It was Gardiner's wife. The boy struggled to speak, and the woman bent over him. "Please, ma'am," he said, "were you hurt?" "No," she said; "we are all safe, my poor, brave boy." "Then it is all right," he said; "I am glad you are safe. No matter about me—I am only a boy!" he said, unconsciously repeating the very words she had spoken to him that afternoon.

Without the rain fell, and the thunder growled and muttered in the distance, and the dimly-lighted room was now and then illuminated by vivid flashes of lightning. The boy felt the bandages upon his head, and knew he was injured; but was he sorry that his wandering life had been brought so suddenly to a close? Presently he beckoned the woman to him. "I am dying," he said. He lifted his hands, crossed them upon his breast, and, with a few painful respirations, expired.

Without the wind howled, beating the ivy-vines against the window-pane; the rain fell and the dimly-lighted room was illuminated by vivid lightning flashes; and still the woman stood there in that lonely room looking down upon the dead boy's face. What were her feelings as she stood there? He had died to save her and her children. Did she remember how she had repulsed him that afternoon while he had pleaded with her to "let him stay just a few days, and then, if not suited, to send him away?" Be it as it may, she stood motionless, watching the dead boy's face, while without the rain fell and the wind howled and roared, and amid all this war of the elements the most peaceful thing in that silent room was the dead boy, sleeping the sleep from which only the voice of God could wake him.

Reader, eighteen hundred years ago, in a land beyond the sea, beneath the skies of Palestine, a Preacher stood upon a Mount and spoke those memorable words, which have sounded down the ages to the present time:

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

A FIVE-MINUTE SERMON ON HABIT.

Isaiah 1:17, "Learn to do well."

Boys and girls, you can obey this text by trying to do well to-day, and to-morrow and the next day. It is the same as learning to skate. You fall and rise again. You fall, but try again. After a little you can stand, and then can push out one foot, and by and by the other, until at last away you go, gliding over the ice like the wind.

Learning to do well is like learning to swim. You wade into the water, but not very far, for fear you will drown. You try to swim, but sink. You try again, and do a little better. You swallow a good deal of water. It gets into your ears and eyes and nose; but you keep on splashing, and finally you can swim. So you must keep on doing well until you learn how, and it has become a habit. A habit is something which we have. That is what the word means. It often becomes something which has us.

A habit is formed the same way that paths or roads are. You often see people "cutting across lots." Where they do this a narrow strip of grass about a foot, or fourteen inches wide will be trodden hard; and that is a path. It is made by being walked over again, and again and again. You can soon get into the habit of doing a thing if you will do it over and over many times. The more you do it the easier it will become, just as a path grows wider and plainer the more it is traveled. It is hard to keep people from going across lots after a path is once made; and so it is hard to stop doing what we have fallen into the habit of doing. It will not be easy for you to "do well" after you have once learned to do wrong. Bad habits are like the ruts made by carriage wheels in country roads—they hold people fast. I once read of an old man who had crooked fingers. When a boy, his hand was as limber as yours. He could open it easily, but for fifty years he drove a stage, and his fingers got so in the habit of shutting down on the lines that they finally stayed shut. The old man can never open his hand again.

Boys, if you do not wish to fall into the habit of swearing, refuse to swear at all. If you do not wish to become the slave of tobacco, let cigarettes alone. If you do not wish to die drunkards, never begin to tippie. If you do these things only a few times, they may become habits and hold you fast. You would then smoke and swear and drink almost without knowing it, or knowing why. "Learn to do well," but "abhor that which is evil."—Christian Advocate.

THE GIRL WHO IS GENTLE.

I do not mean by this the girl who is gentle in heart and thought, though, of course, I want every one of my girls to be that, but I mean the girl who is gentle in her movements and her speech. She is what you want to be. It is true you did not intend to knock over the chair as you entered the room, and it is equally true that you had no idea you were planting your foot down as if you wished to stamp the pattern out of the carpet—you did not intend to do these things, but you did them. You made a nervous woman start, the heavy step awakened a sleeping baby, and your entrance was very ungente. Then when you began to talk you raised your voice more than was necessary; as you grew interested in the conversation it reached a shrill tone that was ear piercing. You managed to knock over a book, let your fan fall, and you tipped over a glass of water. None of these things are wrong, but they show a lack of consideration, and suggest that in yourself there must be a strain that does not belong to the gentle girl. Learn to walk quietly; learn to keep your eyes open, so that you may not trip over rugs nor cushions, chairs or table. You see, I want you to be a gentle woman. It means very much. A sweet, low voice and a quiet manner are more convincing of the power of woman than all the loud talking and blustering imaginable. When I was a little girl I used to have sung to me a song that seemed to describe the finest little lady in the land, and there are two verses of it that I have never forgotten. In telling of the charms of this little lady these words come in, and I wish you would just remember them, and think over what a gentle manner and a low voice mean in a woman. This is the old ditty:

"Nellie Bly hath a voice,
Sweet as a turtle dove;
You hear it in the meadow
You hear it in the grove.
When she walks she lifts her foot,
And then she puts it down,
And when it lights there's music there
In that part of the town."

PRAYER FATHER TAUGHT US.

This is the little prayer which my father, Charles Dickens, wrote for us, and which each one of us was taught to repeat night and morning, as soon as we could speak:

"Pray God, who has made everything, and is so kind and merciful to everything he has made who tries to be good and to deserve it.

"Pray God, bless my dear papa, mamma, brothers, and sisters, and auntie, and all my relations and friends.

"Make me a good little girl. Let me never be naughty, or tell a lie, which is a mean and shameful thing. Make me kind to my nurses and servants, and to all poor people."

"Let me never be cruel to any dumb creature; for if I am cruel to anything, even to a poor, little fly, Thou, who art so good, wilt never love me.

"Pray God to bless and preserve us all this night, and for evermore, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The word "auntie" was not in the original prayer; I added it for myself. I was quite a tiny child when she, a very young girl, first came to live with us. And, as I do not remember any part of my life without her, and as I have knelt at her knees as often as I have knelt at my mother's knees to say this prayer, it seemed only natural to me to put her name among those specially mentioned in our evening supplications.—Mamie Dickens, in the Ladies' Home Journal.

HUMILITY.

The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing
Slings in the shade when all things rest—
In lark and nightingale we see
What honor hath humility.

When Mary chose the better part,
She meekly sat at Jesus' feet;
And Lydia's gently-opened heart
Was made for God's own temple meet—
Fairest and best adorned is she
Whose clothing is humility.

The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
In deepest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bows him down
The most, when most his soul ascends;
Nearest the throne itself must be
The footstool of humility.

ABOUT FLAGS.

1. To "strike the flag," is to lower the national colors in token of submission.
2. Flags are used as the symbol of rank and command, the officers using them being called flag-officers. Such flags are square, to distinguish them from other banners.
3. A "flag of truce" is a white flag, displayed to an enemy to indicate a desire for parley or consultation.
4. The white flag is a sign of peace. After a battle, parties from both sides often go out to the field to rescue the wounded or bury the dead under the protection of the white flag.
5. The red flag is the sign of defiance, and is often used by revolutionists. In our service it is a mark of danger, and shows a vessel to be receiving or discharging her powder.
6. The black flag is a sign of piracy.
7. The yellow flag shows a vessel to be in quarantine, or is a sign of contagious disease.
8. A flag at half-mast means mourning. Fishing and other vessels return with a flag at half-mast to announce the loss or death of some of the men.
9. Dipping the flag is lowering it slightly and then hoisting it again to salute a vessel or fort.
10. If the President of the United States go afloat, the American flag is carried in the bow of his barge, or hoisted at the main of the vessel on board of which he is.

A REAL KNIGHT.

A pleasing sight it was, I do assure you. Not the first part of the scene, for the little maid was crying bitterly. Something very serious must have happened. Wondering, I paused; when, round a corner came my knight. On a prancing steed? Wearing a glittering helmet and greaves of brass? No. This was a nineteenth-century knight, and they are as likely to be on foot as on horseback. Helmets are apt to be straw hats or derbys; and as for greaves—well, knickerbockers are more common to-day.

This particular knight was about ten years old—slender, straight, open-eyed. Quickly he spied the damsel in distress. Swiftly he came to her aid.

"What's the matter?" I heard him say.

Alas! the "matter" was that the bundle she held had "burst," and its contents were open to view. Probably the small maid expected a hearty scolding for carelessness. And, indeed, whoever put that soiled shirt and collar in her care might reasonably have been vexed.

A new piece of wrapping paper also proved too frail. Must the child get her scolding? Poor little soul! No wonder she had sobbed so mournfully.

But the boy was not daunted. He tucked the "burst" bundle under his own arm.

"I'll carry it to the laundry for you," he said, in the kindest voice, and off the two trudged together.

Soon after I met the small girl again. She was comforted and serene.

"Was that boy your brother?" I asked. She shook her head.

"Did you know him?" Another shake.

"A real gentleman!" said I. "A genuine nineteenth-century knight. Bless him!"

TEMPERANCE.

CALIFORNIA M. E. CONFERENCE REPORT.

The battle between the liquor power and our schools, homes, churches and temperance organizations, is still raging. Ever since the liquor power took the issues of this conflict into politics and secured its own legislation, it has been growing more and more insolent, dictatorial and aggressive. It is the same relentless foe of God and man that it has ever been. Its legislation and protection by the government, while they give it a seeming legitimacy and respectability, do not change its character, or the terrific results of its work. It is the same robbing, cruel, conscienceless, demoralizing, destructive, murderous monster that it has been. It is terribly united, while the forces that have been contending with it, up to the present, lacked unity of thought, plans and movements.

In theory most of them agree that the principles of a progressive civilization, the teachings of the Bible and the enlightened Christian conscience of our nation, demand that they move on two lines against their malignant and persistent foe; namely, total abstinence for the individual, and absolute prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks as a beverage. Prohibition, not license, is the necessary complement of moral suasion.

There can be but one right relation for government to sustain towards an evil that is destructive of the wealth, health, minds, intellects, homes and lives of its citizens; and that relation is not to legalize, but destroy it. To license such an evil is to violate every fundamental principle of social science, and contravene the grand purposes of government. Besides, as "we the people" make the government, we are responsible for its moral and political character; hence, if it legalizes and protects the traffic that robs and slaughters its citizens by wholesale, "we the people" are accomplices in its crimes.

We wonder not, therefore, that our church and other churches say that the liquor traffic cannot be licensed without sin. "But we do wonder that intelligent, conscientious Christians and citizens should perpetuate a government that legalizes and protects an organized villainy, an oligarchy of Satan." To the people belong sovereignty; therefore they possess the power to destroy this villainy, and blot out this oligarchy. And if they do not wield this responsible power for its destruction, we see no logic that can exonerate them from the criminal accomplices of the liquor power in its infamous work. Let it be distinctly understood, that no man has any inherent right to sell alcoholic drinks as a beverage. The legal right, therefore, must be granted by a government elected by the people. But the legal right to sell poisonous drinks, as a beverage, in no sense lessens the sin. But the granting of such a right by the people, through their chosen representatives, makes them partakers of the great moral and political wrong, a wrong that could not have been committed if the saloon power had not debauched, then dethroned, public conscience.

The question now is, what can be done to purify and enthrone public conscience? The answer is easy. God has given to the church the truths needed to enlighten, purify and enthrone public conscience; therefore it becomes her imperative duty to preach and apply those truths. Such a work will demand prudence, calmness, love, wisdom and courage. But it must be done. Politics or no politics, the pulpit must lead Christians and all citizens that it can influence, in a crusade against drunkenness in all its stages, and drunkard-making in all its forms. Ministers must gird themselves for the fight. Not so much to guide and control "primaries" as to form and guide public conscience for truth, God and humanity, so that it will be as true to these at the ballot-box as at the family altar and the prayer-meeting. Our General Conference says: "License laws are the liquor traffic's strongest bulwark of defense. They are wrong in principle and impotent for good." How, then, can this bulwark of defence be broken down? How was it built? How? By the people making a wrong use of the ballot. How can it be broken down? By the people making a right use of the ballot. See we not that it is the duty of the pulpit, the school, and the religious press, to direct the anti-liquor forces to meet the great enemy of our homes, our schools, our churches and every vital interest of our nation, on his own chosen field of conflict—the ballot-box. Nowhere else can he be conquered. He laughs at the "moral spears" hurled at him in sermons, lectures, sympathetic or strong resolutions. But, if the five millions of votes owned by five millions of professing Christians, and the three millions more that are friendly to Christianity would unite with them next November, they could so devitalize the body of this monster that he would be ready for burial before the incoming twentieth century. And before God, your committee says, and every sentiment of patriotism says, and every lover of God and man says, and millions of wretched women and children cast into hells of poverty, woe and shame by this cruel enemy say, that he ought to die. And he will thus be slain as soon as the three educating agencies just named have enforced on the consciences of the people, that so long as they perpetuate a government that legalizes the infamous traffic, so long they will be held responsible for its robbing, murderous work. The people, by a right use of the ballot-box, can destroy this classical evil. If not, then government by the people is a pretentiously brilliant humbug. At present, to our sin and shame, we have a government that is largely under the dictation of the liquor power. May God, and the church, and the school, and the press so arouse the people to a sense of their responsibility that soon they will change the government into a government by the people, and for the people, and thus aid in rescuing our country from the guilt and dishonor brought upon it by a criminal complicity with the liquor traffic.

WE SUBMIT THE FOLLOWING RESOLUTIONS.

1. Resolved, That we condemn the present attitude of our National, and with few exceptions, our State governments, towards the liquor business, and also the policy of all political parties that refuse to put themselves in an attitude of open hostility to the saloon.
2. That we greatly deplore the example of men in high positions who give encouragement, comfort, and sanction to men engaged in a disloyal business.
3. That, as a body of Christian ministers and citizens, representing a large constituency, we respectfully ask the directors and managers of the Columbian Exposition, to be held at Chicago, 1893, to so far respect the Christian conscience of the world, as expressed in numerous petitions, by prohibiting the sale of intoxicants within the limits of the Exposition grounds, and that our secretary be instructed to communicate our action to the proper authorities.
4. That we gladly, and with gratitude, recognize the good work done by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to further the cause of temperance.
5. That, as we are in favor of all agitation, and all organization of temperance sentiment that seeks to bring about the final adoption of Constitutional Prohibition for state and nation, we recommend the organization of a permanent Conference Committee auxiliary to the General Conference Committee.
6. That, while we do not presume to act as censors with regard to the way that citizens may have voted, yet, we deem it our duty to show revealed ethical light upon the questions pertaining to our political duties, and shall urge all men to vote according to their highest convictions, believing, as we do so, that no political party has a right to expect, nor ought it to receive, the support of Christian men, so long as it favors by its principles and action the legalizing of an immoral business.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Peter imprisoned.—vs. 1-5. This Herod was a son of Aristobulus, and grandson of Herod the Great. The country was now for a brief period united under one ruler, whose anxiety to be popular with the people led him to commit acts of atrocious cruelty, though he did not possess the worst qualities of the Herodian race. The former persecution, in which Stephen was slain, was indiscriminate; but this one seems to have been leveled entirely at the leaders, and the most striking marks singled out. James was undoubtedly regarded with peculiar love and reverence by the church at Jerusalem because he was one of the three admitted to the closest intimacy with the Lord, while Peter had taken the lead from the first, when he made his powerful arraignment of the Pentecost of the Jews with their priests and rulers as the murderers of Christ. Herod had already beheaded James, but this only whetted their thirst for blood. So he proceeded to take Peter also, and would no doubt have executed him as summarily as he had James, but was withheld by the Jewish prejudice against executing a prisoner during the Passover, or indeed any religious festival. They did not scruple to put to death an innocent man; only to violate the sacredness of a holy-day whose real significance their own willful blindness hid from their eyes. "Prayer without ceasing;" that is, earnest, urgent, specific prayer. Our lesson shows us what wonderful things can be wrought by this means. Peter lay chained to two soldiers, in a prison well guarded by keepers. What possible hope of rescue? Yet this little band of believers, sublimed in their faith, prayed on until only a few hours remained before Peter would be led forth to execution. Doubtless the long delay was meant not only to test their faith, but to encourage the Christian in all succeeding ages "to pray and not to faint."

2. Peter's release.—vs. 7-11. Perhaps Peter's last waking thought had been that on the morrow he should see his Saviour, for there was no reason that the tyrant who had slain his brother postle would spare him, and it is likely that he had given up all hope of life. But the Lord had other plans for his faithful servant. He was suddenly awakened by an angel, who smote him heavily on the side. How many a bitter stroke of affliction has been sent in love to rouse a sleeping soul! "Rise up quickly." This would have seemed an impossible command from human lips, but God never tells us to do anything that he does not at the same time give us the power to do. Instantly his chains fell off. Whatever chains of evil habits bind us will fall off if we obey his command, "Awake, thou that sleepest!" "Gird thyself," etc. Though the King's business may require haste, it is not the haste which leaves necessary or important things undone. Peter needed to put on his sandals and his outer garments, as a matter of comfort and decency, but there were other reasons. To leave the prison in a state of undress might direct suspicion towards him as an escaped prisoner, and lead to his recapture, while the fact of his staying long enough to arrange his toilet must have been a convincing proof that he was miraculously delivered. "He wist not that it was true." Peter thought it was a vision, and obeyed the angel mechanically, without questioning, like one walking in his sleep. "Opened to them of his own accord." If we follow on in the way of God's commandments we need not worry about the iron gates of suffering or trial that may lie in our way. They will open of their own accord and lead us into peace and liberty. This is also true of the iron gate of death. We need not fear it. When God's time comes it will open of its own accord and give us the freedom of the heavenly paradise. "Forthwith the angel departed from him." This was necessary to arouse Peter to the fact that it was no dream but a real thing.

Extraordinary agencies are for extraordinary occasions. The angel's part of the work was done, and now Peter must think and act for himself. God will send his angel, if needful, to open our prison-doors, but when delivered he leaves us to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling."

3. His visit to the house of Mary.—vs. 12-17. Very naturally Peter's first thought is to tell the Church of his wonderful escape, and he turns his steps to the home of Mary, the mother of Mark, which must have been known as a favorite gathering place for prayer. Even now a little band of faithful ones were besieging the throne of grace with supplications already answered. How strong and yet how weak their faith!—that they could not believe in the answer when it came. "Beckoning with the hand," that he might tell his story briefly and without interruption, for as soon as day dawned his enemies would be searching for him. The angel had not, as on a previous occasion (Ch. 5: 19, 20), commanded him to stay and preach, and to do so without such command would have been folly and presumption.

HOME AND HEALTH.

LOOK TO THE DIET.

The human system requires a certain quantity of carbon and of nitrogen to keep up the equilibrium of health, remarked a physician to a New York Telegraph reporter. The healthy man needs 10 grains of carbon and 4,600 grains of nitrogen daily, to supply the waste that takes place during the twenty-four hours. He should select a diet which can supply nearly as possible the proper amount of each of these substances. It matters little whether he eats vegetable or meat, so long as he achieves the result. It is very sensible, as vegetarians contend, that a well-selected vegetable diet is capable of supplying the greater number of individuals to the highest physical development which they are capable of, but it would be difficult for the majority of working-men to get the proper diet of vegetables the year round, and a mixed diet, partly vegetable and partly animal, is most sensible.

Most men eat too much meat. I know the people who live almost entirely on it. The proper proportion is about one part of meat to three of vegetables. One thousand grains of meat contain about 100 grains of carbon and 300 of nitrogen. Therefore to obtain the 4,000 grains of carbon which a man's system requires, no less than six and a half pounds of meat must be consumed daily, while the requisite 300 grains of nitrogen contained in one and a half pounds of meat; consequently three or four times as much meat must be consumed to supply the carbon than is necessary to furnish the nitrogen.

One thousand grains of bread contain 100 grains of carbon and ten of nitrogen. In other words, to obtain the requisite amount of nitrogen for the system on a diet of bread alone one would have to consume exactly double the quantity of bread required. A short calculation shows that two pounds of bread and one-quarter of a pound of meat just about compensate for the daily drain on the system of a healthy man.

Beef and mutton usually contain 15 per cent of carbonaceous and 20 per cent of nitrogenous material. Potatoes have 24 per cent carbonaceous and 10 per cent of nitrogenous material, very nearly the proportion the system requires. Oatmeal has sixty-six carbonaceous and six nitrogenous parts, and, taken alone, is a better article of food than beef as regards the requirements of the system. Skimmed milk contains carbon and nitrogen in about equal quantities. Oatmeal and good milk and bread, for breakfast, with beef and potatoes for dinner, form about the best diet that can be devised.

DIRTY CHIMNEYS.

A great many fires are properly attributed to defective flues and unswept chimneys, and quite a large per centage of those returned as "cause unknown" could also be included in the list. As long as fires are kept burning a day or so the danger does not seem so great, though it is there just the same; but the first big fire after several months is liable to end disastrously when the chimney is full of soot. All sorts of rubbish may have accumulated as well, and the safe way is to have the chimney swept out before commencing the fall fires. In some foreign countries a fine is regularly imposed for allowing a chimney to catch fire, even when it burns nothing but the pot, and hence does little harm. Severe enactments of that kind are apt to defeat themselves if enforced too rigidly, but they help prevent "mysterious fires" quite frequently.

THINGS USEFUL TO KNOW.

Use a small, soft sponge to apply the tacking to a stove. Tannin mixed with mutton tallow is good for chapped hands.

Put a teaspoonful of salt in a kerosene lamp once in a while.

A good-sized sponge is nice for cleaning paint and washing windows.

For removing old paint and varnish from woodwork, an emulsion formed of two parts ammonia shaken up with one part of turpentine is said to be efficacious, so softening the paint that after a few moments it can be scraped off.

Pails and tubs saturated with glycerine will not shrink.

A large, soft sponge, either dry or slightly dampened, makes a good duster.

Throw a quantity of salt in the stove if the chimney is on fire and there is danger from sparks; if not let it burn.

Circles of felt, pinked or scalloped, are invaluable to put between choice china plates when piled in the closet.

People who insist that eating green corn from the cob is the only enjoyable way will welcome the new corn holders—silver loops with a sharp point easily pushed into the ends of the piece of corn.

A good way to keep a knife perfectly sharp is to use a "rifle," such as the farmers sharpen their scythes upon. A few turns on this will give an edge that will cut through anything.

If you have set something hot on oil-cloth and it turns white, drop on a little spirits of camphor and rub with a dry cloth.

The gentle exercise on a cycle produces better and more lasting results than does any other. It seems to be suited to the needs of women in a most remarkable degree, and to furnish them with precisely what they require to build up their health and strength.

Salvation Oil, the people's liniment, is guaranteed the best. It will cure you.

Disordered Liver set right with BEECH-AM'S PILLS.

A friend of Wheaton College has given a corner lot in Harvey, as his donation to the $100,000 fund. It is only about six blocks from the station and nearer than that to the principal factory sites. It is offered for sale now at $550. A warranty deed will be given and an abstract showing clear title. Readers of the Cynosure contemplating purchasing near the World's Fair site, can help the College by purchasing this lot. The publisher of the Cynosure will be glad to show maps giving location, and give any further information.

FARM NOTES.

(From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

AGRICULTURAL.

One way to create a demand for your goods is to label them when sent to market. One farmer this year uses this label: "The chaff is taken out of this hay as much as possible. Produced and pressed by Andrew Lagrange."

Some of the fine horses of Chicago eat hay that costs seventy dollars a ton. It comes from near Sacramento, California. The freight is thirty-five dollars per ton. The feeders claim that it pays them to feed such hay, as it is more nourishing than that raised about this city, and the extra cost "comes back in the extra purses won on the strength of the fodder."

Here are two questions we would like you to answer. You can send your answer in on postal card to the Farm, Field and Stockman, Chicago. Please give State, postoffice, and kind of hay, in your reply. "What is the shrinkage in hay between taking from the field and taking from the mow six months after?" When you say "a ton and a half an acre" do you mean as taken from the field or after storage in the mow or stack?

Here is the way one farmer protected his corn from weevil: Last fall in putting up my corn, I placed two open bottles containing bi-sulphuret of carbon about four feet apart on the floor of the bin. The mouths of these bottles were covered with a layer of cheesecloth, and each bottle covered with an old, broken box. The corn was thrown on these boxes, and the bin filled to its utmost capacity. The result was highly successful; what weevil were admitted from the field were destroyed, and none further appeared. Thus at a cost of fifty cents, with very little trouble, I protected about 500 bushels of corn against the weevil. Moreover, I have noticed neither mouse nor rat in the bin, nor traces of them, which was not the case before, for in previous years they, too, did great damage to the corn.

HORTICULTURAL.

We would not advise the use of salt around young fruit trees. Lye makes a good wash for the bodies of young trees, helping to keep the bark nice and smooth and free from insects.

Results obtained by compiling the testimony obtained by examining the stomachs of 201 robins at the Ohio Experiment Station during the seasons of 1891 and 1892 show that he destroys more that is of value to the berry grower than that that is harmful. In other words, the berry grower is unduly taxed in Ohio to support the robin for the benefit of other people.

POULTRY.

Keep air-slaked lime in your coop and about your houses.

Do not entertain the idea that nest eggs increase egg production.

For egg production there can be no mistake in selecting either the Leghorns, Minorcas or Anconas.

A cross of Leghorn on any of the American or Asiatic breeds is better for broiler raising than the Leghorns in their purity.

Supply the want of insects to the moulting fowls by giving meat—the bones and scraps from the market are a good source of supply.

One of the secrets of success in poultry farming is to do away with unprofitable birds. Sell off the old hens and surplus cockrels.

The third Annual Exhibition of the Illinois State Poultry Association will be held at Decatur, Ill., Jan. 16-23, 1893. I. K. Felch, Judge; Geo. W. Kinsman, Secretary, Peoria, Ill.

Experience has proven that for egg production pullets and two-year-old hens are the best; three-year-old ones sometimes pay, but older than that there is no money in them and it pays best to use or sell them for roasters.

SWINE.

Corn is the great food for fattening. There is nothing equal to it for making hard, solid pork that commands the highest market price. Swine, however, will be able to digest more of it, if allowed turnips, potatoes, carrots or beets and some bran instead of nothing at all but corn. Too much corn will make them "cloyed."

Keep the brood sows at pasture as long as there is any. They need exercise to make them thrifty and the bearers of vigorous litters. Reserve the pen for the fattening hogs alone.

Whitewash will improve the appearance and healthfulness of the piggery. Use it freely all about the pens and mark how much nicer everything is afterward. Rainy days in the autumn offer a good time to do this work.

Fatten the hogs before cold weather and save what would be required to keep up the animal heat. In general it may be said that the more hogs that are killed and dressed before Thanksgiving, the better it will be for the owners.

Keep a mixture of salt, charcoal and wood ashes constantly before hogs, so that they can take what they want and no more. Something of this nature seems to be required to arrest fermentation in the stomach and promote general digestion.

To make the hair grow a natural color, prevent baldness, and keep the scalp healthy, Hall's Hair Renewer was invented, and has proved itself successful.

The list of Donations to the Association is this week unavoidably crowded out. It will probably appear in our next issue.

As an offset to the free public schools, the Jesuit fathers in Cincinnati announce free parochial schools in that city on the first of January next. This is certainly a new departure, as the patrons of those schools have heretofore had to pay for the tuition of their children. Their schools are reported as prosperous.

Representatives direct from the Vatican have arrived in Chicago, bearing the Pope's approval of the Columbian Exposition and expressing his great interest in it—because Columbus was a Catholic. Secretary Foster, of the United States Treasury Department, is endeavoring to obtain a loan of valuable Columbian documents in the possession of the Pope, including Columbus' prayer-book and a map made at his suggestion.

German Catholics reprimanded the secular and religious press for its abuse of Cahensly; expressed a hope that the name of Christopher Columbus may soon be found in the list of canonized saints, and left the question of papal independence and restoration to temporal power to divine Providence. These are strange topics to be discussed in this age and country. They sound very un-American.

The Free Methodists of Texas, at their recent annual conference, resolved that "last but not least in respect of importance is the earnest effort at reform put forth by our brethren against Romanism and secret societies, and we believe that it is highly necessary that we continue our efforts on these lines with renewed activity and energy." The Free Methodist church is always consistently with us in these reforms; and we are always glad to hear that it is aggressive in its promotion of them.

The heresy case of Dr. Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, in accordance with the decision of the Presbyterian General Assembly at Portland, Ore., several months ago, has been resumed by the Presbytery of New York, "upon its merits without prejudice to either party." On the former trial, this Presbytery dismissed the case. Then it should have been appealed to the New York Synod. Hence the General Assembly remanded the case to the Presbytery. The next appeal will probably be to the State Synod. The Seminary supports the doctor in his "higher criticism."

A secrecy paper—The Knight's Sword and Helmet—speaking of the late strike riots in Tennessee, makes the following statement: "Gen. Anderson was captured by the miners, under the flag of truce. It is true that the miners decided to hang him, and the leaders went for a rope. General Anderson is a Knight of Pythias, and while the leaders were away he gave the sign of distress. It proved that three of the miners present were members of that order, and they recognized the sign and remembered their obligation. Before the rope was brought the miners took the general and concealed him and kept him safe until they surrendered." And the same result would have followed, no doubt, whether the general was right or wrong. In such cases men are "saved" by their obligations, and the question of rectitude is secondary.

A stock trust has been recently formed of type-founders, with the design of "protecting" the trade, or, in other words, of increasing the prices of printers' materials, and an early "squeeze" in this direction is anticipated. Fortunately the combination does not include Messrs. Barnhart Bros. & Spindler, heavy manufacturers and dealers in this city, men of untarnished business reputation, and one or two Eastern houses, and their independence will have a healthy influence in checking the greed of the new organization.

To-day we print the last installment of Rev. J. M. Foster's masterly discourse on "Romanism and the State." Read in connection with our New England letter in another column, it provides material for some hard-thinking. We also give place to the report of the Nebraska State Anti-Secret Convention, which will be read with interest. Other reports from agents in the field will attract attention. We hope, next week, to print the report of the New York State Anti-Secret Convention, at Walton. The address of Rev. J. M. French, at the Nebraska Convention, on "God's Fraternities in Contrast with Those of Man," is underlined for insertion next week, and that of Rev. J. W. Morton, at the same convention, is to appear in an early issue. The reports from the field are hopeful, and we are looking for "better things" in the approaching State conventions in Iowa, Missouri and New England. Let the brethren agitate, work and pray earnestly for the cause everywhere.

THE STATE AND ROMANISM.

SERMON BY REV. J. M. FOSTER, DELIVERED IN MUSIC HALL, BOSTON, SABBATH AFTER-NOON, OCTOBER 2, 1892.

TEXT: "Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil."—Rom. 13: 3.

(Concluded.)

Take the Fourth Commandment. The Sabbath is a civil institute and a religious ordinance. The church teaches us how to keep the Sabbath holy. The state prohibits public Sabbath-desecration. The government should abolish the Sabbath-mail service, prohibit the railroad traffic on the Lord's day, forbid the issuing or selling of Sunday newspapers, interdict Sunday excursions and parades, and give the 2,000,000 unwilling Sabbath-toilers in our land their God-appointed rest day. Our land must have her Sabbaths. But Rome is the foe of the American Sabbath. "The Pope claims the right and the power to decree that the sanctification of the Lord's day shall continue only a few hours, and that servile work may be done on that day." The Continental Sunday of Europe is the offspring of Rome. They "say mass" in the morning and then give themselves to pleasure or work the rest of the day. The canon-law reads: "Merchandising and the selling of goods at auction on the Sabbath is, on account of its being a general custom, altogether lawful." "Buying and selling goods on the Lord's day, and on festival days, are certainly forbidden by the Canonical law, but when the contrary custom prevails it is excusable," says Peter Dens. "He who performs any servile work on the Lord's day, or on a festival day, let him do penance three days on bread and water."

ANTI-SECRET STATE CONVENTIONS.

Members of the National Christian Association and all friends of Anti-Secrecy Reform are hereby invited to attend and participate in the approaching State Conventions in behalf of the cause:

IOWA.

The Annual State meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, auxiliary to the N. C. A., is called to meet AT MARENGO, IOWA COUNTY, TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 15TH AND 16TH, beginning at 1:30 Tuesday afternoon, assembling in the Wesleyan Methodist church. The completed program of exercises is not yet received, but we learn that it will include addresses from Pres. Blanchard, Rev. M. A. Gault, Rev. W. C. Paden, and others.

MISSOURI

The Missouri State Convention will be held at ALBANY, the County Seat of GENTRY COUNTY, NOVEMBER 29TH AND 30TH. Albany is in the northwestern part of Missouri, on the St. Joseph Branch of the C., B. & Q. R. R. Friends in Iowa living along the line of this branch of the "Q." will do well to take advantage of this opportunity and aid the cause by their presence in this Convention. Rev. W. C. Paden, our agent, is hastening the program to completion, and it will be made public at an early date.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE OFFICIAL CALL.—The annual meeting of the New England Christian Association will be held (D. V.) in BROMFIELD STREET METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BOSTON, DECEMBER 14TH AND 15TH, 1892. Opening session on the 14th, at 7:30 P. M. All persons desiring information on the principles and influence of the secret society system are cordially invited to attend. Speakers and the program will be announced later.

Miss E. E. FLAGG, Sec'y.

JOHN A. CONANT, Pres.

MINNESOTA

Rev. William Fenton is busily engaged in arranging for a State Anti-Secrecy Convention in the early part of December. Time, place and program will be hereafter announced.

If any one break fasts prescribed by the church, let him do penance on bread and water twenty days." Twenty days penance for disobeying men, three days penance for disobeying God! Rome is converting our American Sabbath into the Continental Sunday. This should not be. Rome must go or our Sabbath is lost.

Take the Fifth Commandment. The state is responsible for the education of the children. "If we work to save the twentieth century, we must save the nineteenth." But Rome is the enemy of our public schools. The Baltimore Plenary Council decided that all Catholic children shall be educated in parochial schools. Here is the language of the Syllabus of Pope Pius IX., 1864: "That the entire direction of public schools in which the youth of Christain States are educated may and must appertain to the civil power, is an error to be reprobated and proscribed. Issue must be here joined." Rome has built parochial schools all over this land. She is teaching her youth to be loyal to the Pope, even if it requires disloyalty to our government. She is luring thousands of Protestant girls into her convent seminaries, there to be Romanized. She has Romanized the State Reform School of New Jersey. The Roman Catholic boys arrested in New York are given over to the priests; and there are 3,000 in the New York Protectory, lost to Protestantism, sold to Rome. How long shall this continue?

But Rome teaches treason. The Syllabus above quoted continues: "It is an error to be reprobated, proscribed and condemned, to say that, in the case of conflicting laws between the two powers, the civil law ought to prevail, and that the church has not the power of availing herself of force, or any direct or indirect temporal power." It has been said: "There is enough dynamite in these propositions to blow up our entire modern civilization, destroy liberty of conscience and bring utter ruin upon the purity of the church and the integrity of the state." Listen to Gladstone: "The Pope demands for himself the right to determine the province of his own rights, and has so defined it in formal documents as to warrant any and every invasion of the civil sphere. Rome requires a convert who joins her to forfeit his moral and mental freedom, and to place his loyalty and civil duty at the mercy of another." Remember that Pope Paul V. condemned Copernicus, and Pope Urban VIII. imprisoned him for life, for teaching that the earth moves in its orbit. Listen to Prince Bismarck, in 1875: "This Pope, this foreigner, this Italian, is more powerful in this country than any other person, not excepting even the king. And now please to consider what this foreigner has announced as the program by which he rules Prussia and elsewhere. He begins by taking to himself the right to define how far his authority extends; and this Pope, who would employ fire and sword against us if he had the power to do so; who would confiscate our property, and not spare our lives, expects us to allow him full, uncontrolled sway." Then he said: "We are not going to Canossa." The concordats of the governments of Europe, the one entered into by the French government under Napoleon Bonaparte, and that by the Austrian government by Franz Joseph, were efforts on the part of these governments to live on peaceable terms with the papacy. But it was impossible. Rome will rule or ruin.

Take the Sixth Commandment. The state prohibits murder. But Rome has been a murderous institution from its birth in the seventh century. Peter Dens, their standard authority, says: "Infidels are not to be tolerated. Infidelity is not to be tried or proved, but extirpated." "Are heretics rightly punished with death?" Saint Thomas answers, "Yes; because forgers of money, or other disturbers of the state, are justly punished with death; therefore, also, heretics, who are forgers of the faith, and experience being witness, grievously disturb the state." The Pope promised John Huss a "safe conduct," when summoned from Bohemia to answer charges of heresy before the Council of Constance. But he was arrested and thrown into prison, condemned and burned at the stake. Jerome of Prague met the same fate. On the night of St. Bartholomew, in France, 70,000 Protestants were foully murdered by the papists, and te Deums were sung at Rome in honor of it. The Spanish Inquisition put 300,000 Protestants to cruel and shocking tortures and death. When Napoleon's soldiers entered the Inquisitors' chamber they found a statue called "the maiden." They ordered one of the priests to "kiss the maiden." He declined. They pushed him forward with their bayonets. As he touched the image one hundred knives leaped out and cut his body into so many pieces. As he had done to Christ's children, so it was done unto him. It has been said: "The Inquisition is not only one of the horrors of history, but one of its greatest lessons also. It is the greatest argument to prove that the only safety of nations is in justice and liberty." Rome pursued the Protestants over the Alps and through the Low Countries until "every mountain became a monument, every valley saw executions, and every village had its roll of martyrs." Rome has murdered 60,000,000 Protestants. When the army of Garibaldi entered Rome they found victims in the cells half-starved and uncared for. They found a trap-door which covered a shaft of unknown depths. When the victim had been examined and no fault found in him, the sentence "vale in pace"—go in peace, was pronounced. This was the signal for loosing the trap-door. As the unsuspecting man stepped upon it, it flew open and he disappeared forever. In the depths he writhed in pain until death came to his relief. They found cells down level with the bed of the river. The victims were locked in, and the water gradually filled the cell and they were drowned, their cries unheard, or the rats devoured them while living.

Why does Rome have the same kind of cellars under her monasteries in America as are found in Rome? Who knows how many victims are walled up in them? Our government ought to know. Let another Garibaldi investigate.

Pope Stephen VII. came to the chair of St. Peter by poisoning his predecessor, Boniface VI. He exhumed the body from its burial place, "to punish him for having usurped the supreme dignity to his detriment." He assembled a council of bishops, "had the dead body placed in the pontifical seat, the tiara on its head, the pastoral baton in its hand, and clothed with the sacerdotal ornaments. He appointed an advocate to defend him, and propounded to the dead Boniface questions, which the advocate so answered as to amount to a confession of guilt. Whereupon Pope Stephen VII. impiously pronounced sentence of excommunication and deposition against the insensible victim of his pontifical vengeance, struck him a blow which prostrated the dead body at his feet, stripped off its pontifical robes with his own hands, cut off three of its fingers, ordered the head to be cut off, and the body to be thrown into the Tiber." How shall we designate a system that tolerates such deeds?

When Leo XIII. became Pope, he essayed to act independently. But the Jesuits rebelled. He was poisoned. His agony was excruciating. A Jesuit came to him, and told him the naked truth: "You are poisoned. You have so long a time to live. If you surrender, the antidote is ready." He surrendered. Clements XIV. abolished the Jesuits. He said, as he did so: "I sign my death warrant; but I obey my conscience." "Watch the pot" became the watchword, as he dismissed cook after cook, suspected of serving the Jesuits. A lady of the Sabine sent him a basket of figs, a fruit he delighted in. One of them was drugged with aquetta—a rank poison. The Pope suffered for three months, and died. He said: "Alas! I knew well that they would poison me, but I did not expect to die in so slow and cruel a manner." The Encyclopedia Britannica says: "Jesuitism is a naked sword, with its hilt at Rome and its point everywhere." It is time for America to break that sword. It is being brandished over the public schools of Boston. Three-fourth of the saloon keepers in America are Catholics; and one saloon is more powerful in politics than twenty churches, because it obeys the orders of the Jesuits. Let America bestir herself.

Take the Seventh Commandment. When the law of celibacy for priests was enacted, the order of nuns was instituted as an antidote. The nunnery is the counterpart of the convent. Sexual commerce between monks and nuns is accepted as a matter of course by Rome. Said a gray-haired mother: "My grand-daughter is being wooed and won by Father——. Can priests win hearts? Is that this vocation?" "Beautiful in face and form, attractive in manner, soft-toned in speech, she seemed fitted to make some man a good wife, and to become the centre of a pleasant home.

She had determined to become a nun. The cloister was not in her thought, nor was religion. She was in love with the priest and thought of passing into the cloister that she might have him, as soon as she became a spiritual sister." Gavazzi said: "The Jesuits, too, have nuns. For almost every order of monks there is a corresponding order of nuns. If monks are useless and dangerous, what are nuns?" Read the story of William Hogan and Maria Monk if you would have your blood heated with righteous indignation against these dissolute orders. Europe was horrified with the revelations of Scipio Di Ricci. From the declarations of nuns, it was shown that in the convents at St. Lucia and St. Catharine at Pistoria, the female Dominicans received the confessors in the chapter and abandoned themselves to the most unbridled excesses of libertinage, on the very steps of the altar; other nuns owned that frequently jealousy, or the inconstancy of the monks, led to serious collisions; that they disputed for the provincial, or prior; that they deprived themselves of their money and effects for the their confessors; that several Dominicans had five or six mistresses at once, who formal a kind of seraglio." * * * * *

The confessional is a horrible pit. Peter Dens, Liguori, and Bishop Kenrick are standard theologians in Catholic church. The questions asked in the confessional, according to these authors are shocking. I could not recite them without awakening indignation and wrath. "Several years ago, in Philadelphia, a gentleman read and translated these before an audience where there were no ladies, and an honest young Roman Catholic layman present was so shocked that he caused him to be arrested and carried before the mayor upon a charge of public indecenty." * * *

These questions are being asked in 100,000 confessionals in our land to-day. One hundred thousand wives and daughters of American citizens are answering them at this hour. * * *

Pere Hyacinthe said: "Ninety-nine per cent of the priests are libertines." Whose wives and daughters are the victims? Rome is the mother of harlots. This house of ill-fame must be torn down.

Take the Eighth Commandment. The Pope of Rome lives in a palace 1,500 feet long, 800 feet wide, with twenty courts, galleries filled with pictures and statuary, two hundred staircases, 1,100 rooms, the building of which cost $100,000,000. Cardinal Gibbons lives in a palace in Baltimore. Seven archbishops live in palaces. Sixty bishops hold $300,000,000 worth of property in America. There are fifty Irish Roman Catholic millionaires in San Francisco. But the rank and file of the Roman church are poor, kept so by the exorbitant demands of the priests. What right has the Pope to require Americans to pay "Peter's pence," to support his retinue of servants in the Vatican,—400 women and 600 men? The priests hold the ignorant people over purgatorial fires and say: "Your money, or burn." What right had Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, to make himself a savings-bank, gather in $5,000,000 of the hard earnings of his flock, use the money in building monasteries and cathedrals, and leave his victims without recourse? What right have the priests to rob the people continually? It should be dealt with as the endowment orders that are figuring in our courts at present!

Take the Ninth Commandment. I will not recite their abominable casuistry in justification of lying. Suffice it to say, they teach that if a falsehood will serve the interests of the church, it is always justifiable. But the confessional is a system of universal spydom. Through Roman Catholic servants the priests see and hear all that transpires in your homes. Through Roman Catholic editors the priests determine the cast of the daily and weekly press. They manipulate legislatures and Congress, and hear all that is whispered in the White House. When Gen. Sherman was asked to run for the Presidency, he replied: "It won't do. My wife is a Roman Catholic, and most devoted to the interests of the church. That is enough. The country would never give its support to a man who, when elected, would be compelled to see the White House overrun with priests." But the White House is overrun with priests. President Cleveland had direct communication established between himself and Cardinal Gibbons. President Harrison has honored the black gowns not once or twice. The 50,000 confessionals have throttled the spirit of liberty in Spain. The 100,000 confessionals in America may strangle liberty here. Let the confessionals be swept away as a danger to the Republic. Abolish them or they will ruin us.

Take the Tenth Commandment. Rome covets America. Disappointed in Europe, she turns her vulturous eye to the West. We are not deceived by the cat-like paw of the present Pontiff. Behind the white glove of peace is the red hand of tyranny. Bishop Ryan said: "We maintain that the Church of Rome is intolerant; that is, that she uses every means in her power to root out heresy. But her intolerance is the result of her infallibility. She alone has the right to be intolerant, because she alone has the truth. The church tolerates heretics when she is obliged to do so; but she hates them with a deadly hatred, and uses all her power to annihilate them. If ever the Catholics should become a considerable majority, which in time will surely be the case, then will religious freedom in the Republic of the United States come to an end. Our enemies know how she treated heretics in the Middle Ages, and how she treats them to-day, where she has the power. We no more think of denying these historic facts than we do of blaming the Holy God and the princes of the church for what they have thought fit to do." After the decree of infallibility was proclaimed, over 12,000 citizens of Munich, in Bavaria, addressed a letter to their government, in which they said: "The doctrine which the government of your royal majesty has declared dangerous to the political and social foundations of the state, is sought to be inculcated, with more and more urgency, publicly from the pulpit, and in pastoral and clerical newspapers, as well as privately through letters and the abuse of the confessional. In criminal defiance of the government, the hearts of women are poisoned against their husbands; the father is cursed to the face by his child. . . . The refractoriness of the clergy has gone so far, on the Rhine, for instance, that a soldier, returned from the war, who was about to lead his affianced bride to the altar, was not allowed to marry her because his name had appeared on the protest against this dangerous innovation." This is our foe. Hon. R. W. Thompson says: "Nothing is plainer than that if the principles of the Church of Rome prevail here, religious freedom is at an end. The two cannot exist together. They are in open and direct antagonism with the fundamental theory of our government everywhere."

Rome is the foe of God and the enemy of men. She breaks and tramples under foot every precept of the Decalogue. Either we must break Rome's power, or she will destroy us. Every member of the Roman Catholic church ought to be disfranchised. These Jesuit priests ought to be given so many days to quit the country, and after that imprisoned as public enemies. These nunneries and monasteries ought to be razed to their foundations as nests of vice and crime, and their inmates compelled to return to the ranks of society. These 100,000 confessionals ought to be broken up, because these lustful priests deflower our daughters and humble our wives and mothers, and spy out the liberties of the Republic, that they may trample them under foot. The parochial schools ought to be broken up and all the children compelled to attend the public schools.

In 1776 we had the war for independence, and Rome was on the side of the enemy. In 1861 we had the war for the freedom of the slave, and Rome was again on the side of the enemy. Now we are engaged in a war against secularism in our government and for the crown rights and royal prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ, and Rome is on the side of the devil. Rome is the incarnation of Satan. The synagogue of Satan is anti-Christ. Rome must go down. Delenda est Carthago.

We think of Patrick Henry at Williamsburg, Va., in 1776, declaring that "2,000,000 of men armed in the holy cause of freedom" are invincible. We think of Webster in the United States Senate, in 1832, saying: "There is Boston and Concord and Lexington and Bunker Hill, and there they will remain forever." We think of Wendell Phillips in Faneuil Hall, in 1837, declaring: "America is not large enough to contain slavery and freedom together." We think of Abraham Lincoln, on the field of Gettysburg, pleading for a government "of the people, and by the people, and for the people." But now we want a man to arouse the people against Rome. John Brown struck slavery at Harper's Ferry, and it perished. Who is ready to strike Rome at the sacrifice of his life? Delenda est Carthago!

MISSION TO GALATIA.

BY G. H. KRIKORIAN, PASTOR OF YOZGAT CHURCH.

We desire to testify of the faithfulness of the Lord in his promise, when he said, "Go ye . . . and I will be with you always."

And I went, about four and a half years ago, to preach the Gospel to the "foolish Galatians," whose natural trait of fickleness had caused much anxiety to the Apostle Paul. Same has been the experience of the mission at Yozgat for the thirty years past. But at last the work not only has taken root, but has already begun to bring forth fruit, and promises larger success in the future in the uplifting and the enlightening of this large and most needy community, as it will be seen from the brief sketch of the work below.

EVANGELIZATION AND CHRISTIAN NURTURE.

Galatia is now under the Turks. The inhabitants are principally Turks, Armenians and Greeks. Owing to the severe restrictions on the part of the government, our work now is mostly confined to the Armenians and Greeks. These people, though nominally Christians, and in possession of the Bible centuries before America was known, have yet their Bible chained in verses of unknown tongues and are in need of evangelization as much as any other people. During the last four years the membership of our church has been doubled, and the pulpit made the center of influence which is widely felt. Not a few are drawn to the constant hearing of the Word of God, and have joined the fellowship of our church.

While doing our duty in the line of general work of evangelization, we have not neglected the internal uplifting, nor forgotten our mission to the young. The prayer meeting is made the heart of our church, which is kept warm with Christian communion and fellowship, and is always in a revival condition by the presence of the Holy Spirit, who never fails to meet his people when they assemble "with one accord, in one place," as is the case in Yozgat.

We pay much attention to the Christian nurture, which is carried on, principally, through the Sunday-school and the Christian Endeavor methods. Our Sunday-school is conducted according to the best methods of the Sunday-school Union, and the young people organized according to the methods of the Y. P. S. C. E. Yozgat has the honor of first adopting Christian Endeavor methods in Turkey. The good example has been copied by many of the surrounding community. The interest has spread through communication, and by its methods being discussed in the ministers' meetings, until the movement became well-nigh universal. Consequently, a small manual has been prepared by the pastor, which is to be printed in the Armenian and Turkish languages, to meet the requirements, and to further the Christian Endeavor movement; and we verily believe that the interest thus started will kindle every church and congregation with the zeal of Christian Endeavor in Turkey.

OUR SCHOOLS.

The widening characteristic of our work has been remarkable. Objects to which we have set our hand have grown and spread; with its growth, its needs, anxieties and work also growing beyond our means and ability. But, regardless of the future perplexities, we have grasped any opportunity of work that bore the impress of divine will, and in times of stress we have cried unto Him and he has never disappointed us.

1. School for Boys. Our boys' school reached the rank of a high school only two years ago. At first it was a common school. Four years ago it became a college preparatory. Two years ago we drew out our program for a high school which has two branches. 1st. College preparatory course, which fits pupils for the freshman class of our colleges. 2d. Normal, or business course, which aims expressly to meet the demands in full of this extensive and the most needy community, by preparing to have youth become better merchants, citizens, teachers and artisans.

2. Home for Peasant Boys. The constituency of our school covers a territory fully as large as Palestine; the city of Yozgat being situated at the centre with its 30,000 inhabitants, the surrounding country being mostly composed of farming districts. And ours is the only institution to meet the need of a higher education. The conception of a Home for Peasant boys in connection with our school was a natural one, because of our relation to these poor people. The design and management of our "Home" is as follows: We select promising boys from these farming districts, and put them into the care of a mother under our supervision that they may enjoy the privileges of our school. A yearly sum of $10 for each boy, together with what food we get from his father, covers the whole expense of board and tuition.

3. School for Girls. We have also a school for girls, which is prospering in the hands of our able and consecrated lady principal and her associate. Nearly ninety crowded into this school last year, two-thirds of them being the children of non-evangelicals.

4. Our Kindergarten Enterprise. We were driven to undertake this most difficult, yet the most useful, enterprise, not having any means on hand, but simply a deep sense of duty, and the irresistible appeal of the people and the unmistakable prospect of success of the work. The remarkable success of the work thus far has justified the wisdom of our undertaking. Last year we sent one of our lady teachers to Smyrna to study the system. She has been wonderfully sustained, and is now back with the best outfit for work. She enters upon her duties with the enthusiasm of an apostle, and with the equal self-denying interest of a martyr. No provision has been made for her salary, or for the salary of a matron; and $100 is needed for a room, which must be built before next winter. For the needs of this school, as well as for the high school and for our Home for Peasant Boys, we look to God with hope and assurance that he will not forget us in time of such pressing needs. Ten of our boys in the "Home" are not provided for. We must also add two rooms this year for their lodging, together with the immediate need of a recitation room for larger boys in the high school; and do I need to remind our Christian friends that although the Lord will carry out his purposes without your aid or mine, yet as he is so pleased to use us, it is a great privilege to co-operate with him. Any one desiring to give us a helping hand, and co-operate with us in our mission to Galatia, can send his gift to Secretary Hitchcock, 151 Washington street, Chicago, Ill.

NURSERIES OF CRIMES.

The Denver papers are quite exercised over a statement by a local clergyman named Dean Hart. This gentleman asserts that the public schools are responsible for a large increase of crime during the past decade or two, and also for the multiplication of saloons. His theory is that in the absence of moral and religious teaching in the schools the children grow up virtually criminal, inasmuch as no training has been given them in the practice of restraining appetites, passions and evil tendencies.

In reply to the clergyman the Denver News contends that the increase in crime is due to unrestricted immigration.

The question as to what causes and is causing the large increase of crime in this country is a timely and appropriate one. Foreign immigration may be a source of crime, but it must be acknowledged that this does not meet the issue. It was shown in a recent magazine article that of 25,000 venal voters in Connecticut fully 67 per cent. were of the pure American stock. The writer, an American himself, admitted the accuracy of his figures with a sigh for the degeneracy of the Puritan. Corrupt voting is as much a crime as sheep stealing, and the situation in Connecticut is instructive in a discussion of this kind. Of course, other statistics prove conclusively that a very large proportion of the worst criminals in this country are educated so far as book learning may be considered education. That the lack of moral and religious training in our public school system is one cause of the increase of crimes coming to be acknowledged by the most thoughtful people of the age.—Deseret News.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Buyens statue of Columbus.—Independent Italians.—A truth-telling young American.—Mrs Helen M. Gougar.—The endowment orders.—The Boys' Brigade.—Fig-raising in New England.

Boston is in a quandary over the Buyens statue of Columbus. The Art Commission, whose judgment ought to be reliable, have rejected it, and if the city did not happen to be governed by Irish Romanists, this would end the matter. But, unfortunately, Boston's aldermen choose to consider it as a religious question instead of one which concerns the province of art alone. Columbus was a Catholic, and his statue in Copley Square would be to the further glorification of the church. So, in revenge for its rejection by the Commissioners, they straightway voted to put in place of the vetoed work of art a statue of John Boyle O'Reilly. A statue of Whittier would be more of an honor to the city, as well as more in keeping with her traditions, than the late editor of the Pilot, or even the Genoese navigator. Rome, in taking all the glory to herself that the discoverer of America happened to be born inside her pale, forgets the bitter truth so trenchantly put by Victor Hugo: "Every step which the intelligence of Europe has taken has been in spite of it" (the Catholic Church). . . . "In the name of Jesus it shut up Galileo. In the name of St. Paul it imprisoned Christopher Columbus. To discover a law of the heavens was a heresy. To find a world was an impiety." Rome has a convenient habit of remembering only what suits her to remember. Meanwhile, if Columbus could come back to earth, and know the widely different estimates put upon his character; hear himself, on the one hand, extolled as an incarnation of all the virtues, only stopping short of being a regularly canonized saint; and, on the other hand, denounced, as in many of our pulpits last Sabbath, as a mere practical adventurer, egotistical, cruel, faithless, the discoverer of America less by any wit of his own than by a streak of happy chance, he might well be puzzled as to which place he fairly belonged,—whether in the upper or the nether realms. The worst of it is, that as the glamour with which his name has been invested wears off in the light of unprejudiced research, the latter estimate seems to be nearest the truth.

The Italian colony of Boston, owing to some grievance with the General Catholic American Committee, recently held a mass meeting and voted to have an independent parade of their own on Columbus day. President Inovilli made a speech, which was rather remarkable as a manifestation of the wide difference, as regards their devotion to the papal See, between these sons of Italy and the Irish Romanist. Said he: "Whoever asserts that the discovery of America has been made under the auspices of the Roman Catholic clergy, or that the civilized world is indebted for this great fact to the papacy, utters a falsehood, knowing in his conscience that he does so to the detriment of faith, of justice, of honesty." So they "will commemorate him as Italians, and as members of the great human family," not as papists. Here is a spark, surely, of that spirit of freedom which has animated the great patriots of Italy, from Dante to Mazzini. It is possible that in the warfare with Romish aggression that is already on us, and which promises to wax to far greater proportions before we are through with it, our Italian fellow-citizens may do good service if—and a great deal depends on this if—we do our duty by them. The mission carried on by Mr. and Mrs. May has already accomplished an excellent work for this class of Boston's populace, and should receive the practical sympathy and support of all the churches, without regard to sect.

The stir which the election of a Catholic mayor has caused in London, the first time such a thing has happened since the Reformation, can but strike us somewhat oddly when we reflect what a common place occurrence it is for our great American cities to elect Catholic mayors. Our Democratic city government certainly knows how to manipulate the political chess-board shrewdly, as is proved by their recent law forbidding any but Boston citizens to be employed on the street force. This practically means that none but Irish Romanists, who can be safely relied on to cast their votes for rum and Romanism next November, need apply. Meanwhile, in our very public schools, which Rome is trying so hard to overthrow, God is forging the instruments for her destruction. This thought came to my mind very forcibly while reading an incident now going the rounds of the anti-Catholic press: Miss O'Keefe, a school teacher in Lawrence, Mass., recently asked one of her pupils, "What have Ireland and Irishmen done for the United States?" to which the boy gave the glib but certainly truthful answer: "Filled our State prisons, jails and almshouses." The indignant Miss O'Keefe sent him at once to the principal, who threatened him with expulsion if he did not apologize, as if the teacher who could ask so unwise a question and thus provoke such a reply, was not far more deserving of censure.

The refusal of Elijah A. Morse to join in a public tilt with Mrs. Helen M. Gougar on the third party question, has been, I imagine, the wisest thing for both. If Mrs. Gougar ever advised her hearers to vote for Cleveland, as Mr. Morse accuses her of doing, it must have been on some occasion when the heat of argument carried her too far and made her say more than she meant. As to her being employed by the Democrats, and receiving pay from them for her services, that is an old campaign lie which has been told about nearly all of the most noted Prohibition leaders, and has been killed and resurrected so many times that the gruesome thing ought at this late day to be buried for good and all. Mrs. Gougar, unlike the orators of the old parties, does not hammer away on stale platitudes, or show up merely material issues, as if there were no others of higher moment. Her arraignment of that legislative policy which allows the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few, till in one year we have seen six States and Territories under military rule, ought to be heard in Congress. "The Democratic party," she said in Fanueil Hall, the other day, "believe in tariff reform, and the Republican party believe in reform of the tariff." Was ever the difference between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee more cleverly put?

The endowment orders are still threatening more than it is likely they can perform in the way of making trouble for the Republican candidates. Like rum and Romanism, they seem naturally to gravitate to the Democratic ranks. It is to be hoped that the next Massachusetts Legislature will be men with enough integrity and back-bone, irrespective of party, to wind up these affairs, and stop the scoundrels who are at their head from preying in future on the hard-working poor.

Willimantic, it seems, is not the eastern limit of the "Boys' Brigade," as stated in the Chronicle. One was formed in the Clarendon Street Church, Boston, last spring, and a recognition service was held there one or two nights ago, the company attending in full uniform to listen to an address from the Baptist pastor at Clinton, who is himself the leader of the first Clinton company of the Brigade. I make no comment. Rev. H. H. Hinman's able article on "Rifles as a Means of Grace," covers all the ground; and Mrs. H. J. Bailey, World and National Superintendent of Peace and Arbitration in the W. C. T. U., has already begun to sound the alarm. It is certainly time.

An enterprising Maine man has succeeded in growing a good crop of figs, that fruit which we always associate with semi-tropical lands, in the open air. When fully ripe the fruit is as large as a medium-sized pear, and a great contrast in its mellow lusciousness to the dried specimens which are the only kind the Northern consumer knows. The trees are dug up and placed in the cellar during the winter. It is prolific and ripens early in the fall. Perhaps this fruit of Syria and the Orient may yet take the place of the peach so extensively raised in former years, in which case New Englanders may do what we have always supposed could only be done metaphorically,—sit each "under his own vine and fig-tree."

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26, 1892.

Death in the White House! What a wave of sadness those five words carried when flashed over the wires of the civilized world! No need was there for the name; everyone knew at once that it meant the relief of the soul of that good woman who had been so patiently, oh, so patiently waiting to be summoned whence it came, prepared by a Christian life to take its place among the redeemed around the throne of God. So peacefully did the soul of Caroline Scott Harrison take its departure from the bed of suffering, surrounded by sorrowing husband, children and relatives, that it is easy to imagine its being borne upon the soft wings of rejoicing angels to the mansions of eternal rest, there to be greeted by a loving Father with "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." It must be consoling to the sorrowing ones left behind to know that she was prepared to go, and to say, "O death, where is thy sting?" "O grave, where is thy victory?"

Mrs. Harrison died in the room in the southwest corner of the second story of the building, the same occupied by President Garfield during those awful weeks previous to his being taken to the seashore to die, and which, on account of its sorrowful associations, was not occupied during the administrations of Presidents Arthur and Cleveland. The room was chosen for her own by Mrs. Harrison as soon as she became mistress of the White House, because of its cheerful outlook upon the serpentine Potomac river and the picturesque Virginia heights beyond, and because of the floods of bright sunshine pouring into its broad windows the greater part of the day. Her taste made the interior of the room, which had previously been ugly and uninviting, one the most beautiful and attractive in the White House; its furnishings are in blue and silver, the paper being Mrs. Harrison's own design; and scattered around the room are pretty bits of her own painting, on canvas and china. With its two low brass bedsteads and a number of wicker rockers and easy chairs, the room presents an air of home-like cosiness that goes at once to the heart of every woman who loves home, and every good woman does, as no written description of it can possibly do.

I am fully aware of the tendency—a very bad one it is, too—in writers of the present day to discover meritorious traits in the characters of the prominent that would never have been known except for their prominence; but the merits of Mrs. Harrison were known and praised many years before anyone even dreamed that she would one day occupy the place of the "first lady in the land" by virtue of her husband's position as President; they were known when she presided over the little three-room cottage in Indianapolis, which was the best home the struggling young lawyer to whom she had given her love and hand could provide for her, and where she did with her own hands all the housework, besides looking after her children; they were better known later, when the success of her husband enabled them to secure a larger home—I almost wrote a better home; but, to their everlasting credit be it said, neither of them ever regarded any home they ever had as being better than the cottage in which they started; and better yet, when he became a United States Senator; but, of course, best of all when he became President of the United States. Then it was that the widening of her sphere made public property of her merits, and made them shine like diamonds in the Christian diadem of the nation. No position is more trying to the character of a woman than that of the President's wife. She not only passed through it without making a single enemy, but gained the love of all with whom she came in contact. Books might be filled with instances known to the people here—she never spoke of them herself—in which she displayed her love for her fellow-beings, and her Christianity. One is all I have space for. Everybody remembers the tragedy by which Secretary Tracy lost his wife and daughter, through the burning of his home. The bodies were so disfigured that it was thought best that the stricken husband and father should not be allowed to see them. While the two caskets were lying in the East Room of the White House, Secretary Tracy begged of President and Mrs. Harrison, who were trying to comfort him, the privilege of once more looking upon the faces of his loved ones. Mrs. Harrison knew that his daughter was burned beyond recognition, and that the undertaker had made no attempt to hide the hideous bruises on his wife, because it had been understood that the casket was not to be opened after he had closed it. Giving her husband a look, she told Secretary Tracy to wait until she sent for him. Then she had the casket opened, and with her own hands dressed Mrs.

Tracy's hair so as to hide the bruises on her head, and covered the bruised hands, arms and neck with fresh cut roses. Then she led the stricken man to the casket where the face of his wife looked as though she were calmly sleeping among the roses, and left him there.

The funeral services of Mrs. Harrison, to be held at the White House to-morrow, are to be as quiet and as unostentatious as her life was. She was a model for American girls to follow. *

REFORM NEWS.

THE NEBRASKA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

IMOGENE, Iowa, October 22, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I hasten to report the Nebraska Anti-secrecy Convention, held at Wahoo, on the 18th and 19th.

Four sessions were held, beginning on the evening of the 18th. It will be cheering and refreshing news to all friends of the cause to learn, in brief, that we had a large and enthusiastic convention. Thirty delegates were present. The Covenanter church in which the sessions were held was crowded at the evening sessions, and a good audience was in attendance at the sessions during the day. One cannot hope to make a full report of such a meeting. In this I hope to give a general view. Much will be given anon.

The Convention struck twelve from the very first. No time was wasted.

Dr. D. H. Coulter, of Winchester, Kansas, was called to the chair and presided over the Convention admirably, as all will testify, and contributed much to its success.

A brief but pointed address of welcome was given by Miss Annabel Lee, of Wahoo, on "The Lodge the Enemy of the Home." This address was well-delivered and well-received by the Convention; and points made came up afterwards, for it is not difficult to make out that the lodge is the enemy of the home.

Dr. D. H. Coulter, our chairman, then gave an address on "The Significance and Growth of Secretism." Some startling facts were brought forward, showing the growth of secretism in these recent years. It is a fact that the friends of the family, the church, and the state, and the friends of every good cause, must not ignore. In any case, it calls for an earnest inquiry as to the character of these secret associations.

Rev. E. B. Graham, of Omaha, who was on the program, was not able to be with us. Rev. Thos. M. Chalmers, of Topeka, Kansas, now preaching for the United Presbyterian brethren of Winchester, Kansas, gave a radical and rousing address on "The Character of Freemasonry." He showed clearly, from Masonic writings, and from the character and ceremonies of Masonry, that it is in spirit the religion of Cain, and that Masonry is but a modernization of ancient worship; i. e., semi-worship. He also touched upon the fact that these ancient idolatries centered around the worship of the reproductive powers of nature, resulting in prostitution and unspeakable abominations. Attention was called to the abominable oaths in Masonry in identically the same direction. Some men were saying on the streets, the next morning, that our Convention was no place for a decent man to be! Is it not strange to see men taking these atrocious and polluting oaths; but if they be but mentioned in the house of God, in the way of exposure, that men may be warned and their souls delivered, straightway they are offended? "Strong delusion."

Bro. Chalmers is a fearless reformer, and strikes directly from the shoulder. Send for him if you want something radical, seasoned with salt.

The Convention adjourned until 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, after the appointment of committees. Devotional exercises were conducted by Dr. H. P. McClurkin, of Wahoo; the passage read, Isaiah 59. Dr. McClurkin is a reformer of a thorough type. When once upon his feet in matters of reform, he gives no uncertain sound.

The question of State organization was taken up and discussed. It was decided to effect a State organization auxiliary to the National Christian Association. The following were elected as officers of the State Christian Association: President, Rev. W. I. Brooks, of Pawnee City, Neb.; Vice President, Rev. C. G. Widen, Mead, Neb.; Secretary, Howard P. Young, Wahoo, Neb.; Treasurer, Rev. T. H. Dabney, Hooper, Neb.

The Committee on Resolutions reported, and their report was adopted. The resolutions were as follows:

Resolved, 1. That we regard all secret fraternities as wrong in principle, inasmuch as they presume to establish the fraternal relation where no such relation naturally and rightfully exists; to fortify this relation by oaths or other obligations, often involving the most inhuman and horrible penalties, and to shelter the operations of men in this unwarranted and unnatural relation under the cloak of a suspicious, ensnaring and perilous secrecy.

2. That we believe these fraternities to be not only wrong in principle, but injurious in their operations, militating against the advancement of true merit, the administration of equal and impartial justice, and the accomplishment of needed reforms in society; encouraging a selfish spirit and a disregard of the rights of those without the pale of the mystic circle, and even, in many instances, leading men into immorality, especially in respect to the drink habit.

3. That it is the duty of all who believe in the equality of human rights, and who desire to promote the universal welfare of mankind, not only to abstain from all connection with secret orders, but to use every possible endeavor to persuade others to do likewise.

4. That we appeal to the churches which take to themselves the name of Christian to withhold the sympathy of their silence from an institution which ignores Christ and offers to men a religion of works, and those works even on a low plane of morality.

(Rev.) JOHN M. FRENCH, Chairman.

A number of the delegates were introduced at this point. As each delegate was introduced, he came forward and made a short speech, giving his views on the question of secretism.

Rev. Samuel Austen, of York, Neb., a minister in the U. B. church, was brought up in New York, within seven miles of Fort Niagara, where William Morgan was concealed for a time, and from which place he was carried out and drowned in Niagara River.

Rev. Wm. Trace, of Pleasant Hill, Neb., was introduced. Bro. Trace avowed his belief in wholesale reform, and his belief that all desirable reforms should be carried forward at once. This sentiment was repeated many times in the Convention, and is worthy of repetition and observance by all reformers.

Rev. T. H. Dabney, of Hooper, Neb., was introduced and gave an interesting experience. When a young man, soon after becoming of age, he joined the Odd-fellows and took two degrees; but was soon convinced of the evil character of the institution and left the lodge. I hope to lay his experience more fully before Cynosure readers.

Mr. Howard P. Young, Mr. A. J. Houder, of Alexandria, Neb., Mr. Rufus Park, of Alexandria, Rev. John Eckholm, of Wahoo, Rev. J. G. Lange, of Wahoo, Rev. L. Proudfoot, and others were introduced and gave stimulating testimony.

This was followed by an address from Rev. M. A. Gault, on "An Irrepressible Conflict." Bro. Gault emphasized the need of reform in the fundamentals of government, showing that our National Constitution is Christless and Godless, and that the government which the nation has instituted to carry out this Constitution is Godless and Christless. The stream cannot rise higher than its source.

It must be recorded right here, that to a very large extent the success of our Convention is due to the indefatigable labors of Bro. Gault for the previous six weeks in lecturing in different parts of the State and in stimulating interest in other directions by correspondence, and also in arranging so choice a program. The Cynosure must be recognized as bearing an important part in the success of the Convention, also, in sending the Cynosure to so many persons for several weeks before the Convention, and thus carrying to so many quarters information in regard to the Convention upon her pages. It is gratifying also to record that nearly every one on the program was at hand ready for his share in the work. No time was lost while the Convention was in session.

In the afternoon an excellent paper was read by Rev. J. W. Morton, of North Loup, Neb., on "The Church the Bulwark of the Lodge." I could not pretend to give an idea of this address. Negatively it did not deal in harshness and crimination. Our addresses were exempt from harshness other than the stern facts demand. It is hoped that this address may be laid before Cynosure readers.

Several interesting letters were read from those who are in hearty sympathy with us, but could not be with us. One was from a seceding Mason (Mr. James Ferguson). He expresses himself as sorry that he cannot be present to add his testimony with others against the powers of darkness, but desires to be counted as one of us. Sometimes it requires great grace simply to stand up and be counted. Let us pray continually that others may turn from secretism unto the Lord God.

Prof. S. M. Hill, of Luther Academy, Wahoo, gave a masterly address on "Jesuitism a Foe of the Republic." This was a stimulating and exhaustive address on this subject that needs much attention at this present. Rome's opposition to secret societies is simply and only opposition to those without her pale. If they be not under her control she opposes them because they interfere with her confessional. But surely Jesuitism cannot be surpassed for craftiness. Prof. Hill made many strong points. It is hoped that this address will presently be laid before Cynosure readers. Prof. Hill is principal of the Swedish Lutheran Academy on the hill. The school was dismissed, Wednesday afternoon, and professors, assistants and students came down en masse, afternoon and evening.

Bro. Gault and I looked in on the Academy Tuesday morning at chapel exercises, and were gratified with the cheerful earnestness of professors and pupils. Instruction is given in both English and Swedish. Our Swedish brethren have good reason to be encouraged in their work and their prospects. Let their motto simply be "Excelsior." The success of this institution is of grave interest to the whole community. Bro. Gault and myself, as we lectured among our Swedish brethren in adjoining towns, were much gratified with their reverent earnestness, and that they are fundamentally opposed to secretism. We had hoped to have an address in the Swedish language before the Convention, but failed to do so.

Another logical and convincing address was given by Rev. J. H. French, of Omaha, on "The Fraternity a Conspiracy." Secret fraternities were shown to be an unwarranted addition to God's three fraternities—the family, the church and the state. They are also an interference with God's fraternities. Many more points were made and strongly fortified. This address is too good to go no further. [It is to be printed soon in the Cynosure.—EDITOR.]

In the evening the opening address was given by Mrs. J. M. Knowles, of Fremont, Neb. Mrs. Knowles did not give all that she had intended, but what she did give was excellent. I was very much impressed with that fact, as I stood on Sixteenth street, Omaha, the next day, and reviewed a procession of Odd-fellows marching along the street. The most prominent things in the whole performance were bright coats, jingling swords, big hats with flowing feathers, and, finally, brass buttons.

An address was then given by Rev. W. C. Paden, on "The Secret Lodge System." His subject was wide, and he took a wide range.

Miss Jennie Beebe was called forward and gave a stirring recitation, entitled "The Two Fires." These two fires were and are literal fires that destroy buildings, and sometimes take human lives, and the fire of rum which consumes the bodies and souls of men. The recitation was rendered in an excellent manner, and was well-received. This feature struck the central chord of the Convention, namely, the oneness of all desirable Christian reforms.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GOOD FRUIT.

DE KALB, Iowa, Oct., 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Bishop Barnaby, of the United Brethren in Christ, (old constitution), bears good fruit on the secrecy question, though, in one sense of the word, he is not aggressive. If I understand him rightly, he does not lecture or preach against the lodge. His policy is "you let us alone and we will let you alone."

The disciplinary rule and clause in the constitution: "There shall be no connection with secret combinations," is strictly observed and rigidly enforced by him. All honor to such loyalty; it is a mark of sterling nobility on the part of the King's veterans to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

Bishop Barnaby has lectured several times here in Iowa on the state of the church, and each time something of the history of the denomination on the secrecy question has come to the front, and our position on the enforcement of law clearly defined. This he does very mildly, but as unswervingly as "solid rock." A church (if we have a free country) has a right to legislate for itself and administer its own law free from outside and worldly influences. But in our church troubles it is clearly seen by many that the lodge spirit would silently but practically deprive us of that right; and at one place where the bishop lectured, two young men claimed to be saved from joining the lodge.

CYRUS SMITH.

THE EFFECTS OF SECRET SOCIETIES ON GOVERNMENT.

October, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The effects of Freemasonry on government in this country is illustrated and exemplified by the influence of the Amalgamated Association on the government of Homestead, as pointed out by the New York Tribune (Aug. 24, 1892), which sent a reporter to investigate the causes of the riot:

"POWER OF THE AMALGAMATED ASSOCIATION.

"For defects of paving and water the citizens are responsible. Homestead is a borough, and, of course, its chief executive officer is called a Burgess. The Burgess is a quiet man, one who dresses neatly, and even stylishly, and who, in ordinary conversation, talks well and temperately. But the Burgess is a skilled workman in the Carnegie mills, and an influential officer of the Amalgamated Association. Nearly all of the citizens of Homestead are also members of the Amalgamated Association. It is easily susceptible of proof that when, as one of the workmen in the steel mills and an officer of the Amalgamated Association, the Burgess of Homestead, is ordered to do a certain thing, he loses entirely his official character as Burgess, and remains, as he will always be, no doubt, the subject of his labor organization. As most of the other citizens are his fellow-workmen, he has no need to fear any serious effects resulting from the merging of his official with his industrial or professional character. There are, however, in the town, a number of tradesmen who have, for them, a large amount of capital invested in their respective enterprises. Those men have absolutely no official representation in the local government. They are entirely helpless, and, as they realize that fact, they are entirely voiceless. They are quiescent. A protest would bring a boycott, and a boycott in Homestead would mean bankruptcy. There is no other conclusion, then, than that the Amalgamated Association is the Burgess of Homestead, its council, its government. The laws of the State, of the county and of the borough are all as nothing compared with the dictum of the organization which embraces 90 per cent of the citizens in its membership.

"There is not a shadow of a doubt that the Burgess of Homestead, and every constable under his command, could place their hands within an hour upon every workman who fired a shot on the morning of July 6, when so much blood was shed. This is naked truth, and has no bearing whatever upon the grievances that brought about the sanguinary battle. It merely explains the inefficacy of the local police power in cases of violations of the law, and proves of itself that the labor organizations' regulations are held above the sacred obligations of officers of the State, county or borough.

"The constables, in sympathy with the local administration, as is natural, are hand-in-glove with the strikers. They keep a watch upon all strangers, and have at heart only the interests of the predominant power—the Amalgamated Association. Not one of these constables has endeavored to assist the officers of the county since the morning of July 6."

Public opinion, manipulated and controlled by Freemasonry, denounces as perjurers seceders from the order, in the same manner as members of the Amalgamated Association denounce recalitrants against its sway, as described in the following extract from the American Cultivator:

"During the strikers' riots in Pittsburgh one of the strikers' committees seized a man on suspicion that he was an outsider seeking work. They let him off on his promise to leave town. Now that the strike is over, the man returned and the strikers have had him arrested on a charge of perjury, for not keeping the promise which he made under duress to them. It is curious how men assuming to possess an authority they do not will soon come to regard their power as real, and entitled to equal consideration with that which is established by law."

The underhanded methods and secret language of numbers, by which Freemasonry rules thousands within and without the lodge, is fully explained and proved in the "Key to Masonry" embodied in the last edition of "My Experiences with Secret Societies, by a Traveler," which has thereby been doubled in size, as advertised in the Cynosure.

THE SECRET OF MASONRY.

HARDWICK, Vt., 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—There is but one secret in Masonry that is of much importance to the world generally.

Whoever becomes thoroughly Masonized, has, by so doing, sold his heavenly birth-right, or the right to become a son of God by redemption.

The Masonic obligation is a forestallation of God's ownership in man.

Whoever becomes a son of God by redemption must promise obedience in all things known and unknown.

Whoever promises obedience in unknown things, sells his right of judgment and the voice of conscience to some one else.

It is perfectly safe, and thoroughly scriptural, to thus sell out to God.

Can I make this point understood?

Obedience in unknown things is due only to God. Why?

Answer.—First, He is our Maker and Preserver, and as such has right to dictate to us what to do, and what not to do.

Secondly, He knows what we ought to do, and what we ought not to do.

Thirdly, He is too good to dictate any thing wrong.

God has never commissioned any created intelligence with this divine right of dictation.

I take it for granted that all Bible Christians admit the above points, and therefore quote no Scripture to prove them.

Now, if I promise obedience in unknown things to any one but God, I promise it to a party who has no right to require it; and that party cannot be of God because he has usurped a prerogative that does not belong to him. He is a thief or robber.

If, under these circumstances, I undertake to make a trade with God for the salvation of my soul, I cannot do so. I cannot promise obedience to him in unknown things, because I have sold the right to do so to another party.

Consequently, there is no way for me to make a trade with the Lord in this matter short of breaking my obligations with the thief that I have sold out to, unless by some hook, crook, turn, or compromise. I can fool Him (the Lord) into the notion that I can serve both of them at the same time.

Now all professing Christians who are established Masons have either fooled the Lord into the notion that they can serve him, and this thief that they have sold out to, at the same time, or else this thief has fooled them, and they have made no trade with the Lord in regard to their soul's salvation. Which it is? F. F. F.

LITERATURE.

COLUMBIAN MEMORIAL SONGS, Historical Geography and Maps. By Rufus Blanchard. Pp. 125, Chicago: Blanchard & Co., 171 Randolph street.

Mr. Blanchard is a well-known antiquarian and historian, who has given close attention to Western events since the formation of the great Northwest Territory, and has published an elaborate history of Chicago and its surroundings, together with many trustworthy maps of Illinois. He has also contributed to Western literature "Lincoln," an epic poem of sufficient merit to indicate the possession of a thoughtful muse. The little volume before us is a collection of poems by him, based on the discovery of America by Columbus in 1492 and the Columbian Exposition of 1893, and presenting a variety of topics intimately connected therewith. The illustrations, including a fine full-page portrait of Columbus, copied from the navigator's bust on his tomb, at Genoa, are excellent art-specimens, and the ancient maps reproduced in its pages are full of interest.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

Scribner's Magazine for November is quite equal in interest to the majority of its issues. The principal topics discussed by able contributors, and enlivened by artistic illustrations, embrace the following: Conversations and Opinions of Victor Hugo, from unpublished papers found at Guernsey, by Octave Uzanne, with a full-page portrait and reproductions of contemporary prints, drawings and photographs; Great Streets of the World—The Grand Canal at Venice, by Henry James; Racing in Australia, by Sidney Dickinson; French Art (continued)—Realistic Painting, with numerous reproductions of pictures by French artists—by W. C. Brownell; Sponge and Spongers of the Florida Reef, by Kirk Monroe; Chicago's Part in the World's Fair, by Franklin MacVeagh; Salem Kittredge, Theologian—His Secular Excursion (concluded), by Bliss Perry; Stories of a Western Town, by Octave Thanet, (continued); Miss Dangerlie's Roses, by Thos. Nelson Page; Poems, by Edith Wharton, Francis B. Gummere, etc., with editorials. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons.

The November number of St. Nicholas begins a new volume of this favorite magazine, which, as usual, is crowded with attractions. The publishers' announcements for future issues give promise of sustained endeavor to maintain the popularity of the periodical. A new serial by Wm. O. Stoddard—The White Cave; and one by Kate Douglas Wiggin—Polly Oliver's Problem—are begun. Other contributions of special interest are: An Out-Door Reception, a poem by John G. Whittier; Uncle Jack's Great Run, by Tudor Jenks; A Giant in Fragments, by Felix Leigh; The Siren, by Henry Bacon; Winter at the Zoo, by Elizabeth F. Bonsall; Jack Dilloway's Scheme, by J. L. Harbour; From Revielle to Taps, by Gustav Kobbe; besides a fine collection of amusing verses and pictures and minor sketches, such as readers of St. Nicholas are familiar with, and greatly enjoy. New York: The Century Co.

Historia, the charming illustrated monthly magazine of historical stories, of which we have had frequent occasion to speak favorably, presents its peculiar characteristics in an attractive degree in its November number. The following is the list of contributions and contributors: Paul Jones' Celebrated Victory, by Geo. L. Moulton; An Old Roman Coin (poem), by G. W. Thornbury; Lafayette in the French Revolution, by H. T. Rhodes; Lafayette's Escape from Olmutz, by A. T. Rieske; Defeat of the Greeks, by Burr M. Weeden; Anecdote of Harrod, by Henry R. Carter; Fighting the Mexicans, by Lieut. J. Harmon (continued); Good Reading, and Questions Answered. Published at Chamber of Commerce Building, Chicago.

A literary sensation has just appeared simultaneously in London and Boston, under the title: "Recollections of a spy," by Major Henri LeCaron, for twenty-five years in the secret service of the British Government. LeCaron was for years prominent in Fenian and Clan na-Gael circles in this country, but was always a British Spy. His dramatic appearance at the Parnell trial will long be remembered. In his "Recollections" he makes some startling disclosures, it is said. The American Citizen Co., Boston, are the American publishers.

Columbia's Christmas Chimes is a new Christmas service for Sunday schools, by Dr. J. B. Herbert, with spirited and easy music and appropriate for a national Christmas entertainment. Christ is shown to be the true source of our nation's greatness and Christianity the only hope of future prosperity. At the close "Uncle Sam" appears and addresses the children. Price 5 cents by mail; $4 per hundred by express. Published by the S. Brainard's Sons Co., Chicago, Ill.

The Globe, a thick quarterly (Roman Catholic) review, ably conducted by Wm. H. Thorne, and devoted to literature, society, religion, art and politics, has been removed from Philadelphia to 716 "Title and Trust Building," Chicago. Those who admire a conglomeration of religion and politics with a Romish bias will find it in this magazine.

The Sunbeam is the title of a cheery monthly conducted by the ladies of Ontario Ladies' College, Whitby, Can., and replete with original and selected literature that should have a wider circulation than is possible in college periodical. The benefit of such a magazine to those who write for it, and those who read it, is apparent.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

OBITUARY.

MRS. SELIMA BLANCHARD ALLEN, sister of the late President Jonathan Blanchard, fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of Oct. 21, 1892. She was born Jan. 1, 1807, and was therefore nearly 86 years old.

She was converted when about 20 years of age, and united with the Baptist church in or near her native village, Rockingham, Windham county, Vermont. Her religious life was from the beginning zealous and aggressive. She not only sought to serve God herself, but was eager to have others do so also.

After teaching in Vermont and New York States for a time, she followed her brothers westward; first to Cincinnati, Ohio, and then to Illinois. In this State she lived many years, teaching in Paxton, Morrison, and other places. In the city last named she owned property and made her home until her strength was so uncertain that she could no longer conduct her school, when she spent a winter with her niece, Mrs. E. A. Cook, of Chicago, and afterward removed to Wheaton.

Here she lived, in large measure, apart from the busy world, but with no diminution of interest in its great problems. The cause of opposition to secret societies, of the cheated and oppressed freedmen, of the millions of India, of the defrauded red man, and of evangelical religion, were always near to her heart. She especially delighted in prayer, and did not wish a friend who called upon her to leave without it. So long as her strength permitted she was faithful in her attendance on the means of grace, and it was one of the crosses of her later years that she could not attend public worship.

For the last two years she has been subject to repeated attacks of inflammation of the bowels. On several occasions it seemed that recovery was impossible, but from them she rallied so as to go about and enjoy a fair degree of health. Thursday evening she was quite weak, but replied to inquiries about 8 and 9 o'clock, saying that she had no pain and was pretty well. She had usually slept well, and had not for some time needed watchers. On this last night of her earthly life she seems to have slept as usual until near morning, for when members of the family entered her room in the morning life had departed, though the empty tenement was still warm.

Her burial took place from the house of President Charles A. Blanchard, where she has made her home for several years, at 2 p. m. on Sabbath, Oct. 23. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Yea, from henceforth saith the Spirit, for they do rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

LODGE NOTES.

XEROPHAGISTS.

The meaning of this name and whence it came is thus stated by Notes and Queries: "Pope Clement XII. having issued a bull forbidding the practice of Freemasonry, the Masons of Italy, who continued to meet, for the purpose of avoiding the penalties of the bull called themselves Xerophagists. The word means dry liver—persons who do not drink—and they adopted the title because they introduced something like the principle of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks into the institution." The title and the principle have since become obsolete.

A RELIC OF "MORGAN TIMES."

John Wilson Timson, who died in New York City in 1878, in his 87th year, is credited with having conferred the Capitular degrees on Gen. Lafayette and his son, although not then the officiating High Priest. Bro. Timson was a unique character in New York Masonic circles and an enthusiastic devotee to the fraternity, having been made a Mason in 1828, fifty-eight years before his death.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1892.

While it may be true that there are many pious and wise men belonging to the Masonic fraternity, yet there are thousands of learned and pious men who have renounced it, and thousands more who have examined its claims, and who reject it as an imposture and as inconsistent either with Christianity or good government.—CHAS. G. FINNEY, a Master Mason.

THEY ARE EVIL AND ONLY EVIL.

The Advance, several weeks ago, had the temerity to say, when speaking of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, that "against 'organized labor' of this sort no objection can be raised."

This expression incited an intelligent correspondent to rejoin as follows: "Here is the fly in the ointment. Two formidable objections lie against even this, your pattern organization: 1. It is a secret organization, and so is constituted and fitted for plotting to gain undue advantage, its acts being in a measure without the scrutiny of public opinion. Every organization, even the church, needs this scrutiny, lest it become corrupt. (Witness the Jesuits.) 2. Each one of these engineers is sworn to implicit obedience to an irresponsible 'chief.' The engineer has placed his business, his judgment, his conscience in the hands of another, who thus becomes an autocrat, and has every opportunity of becoming a tyrant. That Chief Arthur is a better man than Grand Master Sweeney is readily conceded, and this is the only difference between the two organizations, so far as appears to an outsider. When Chief Arthur is succeeded by some Chief Sweeney, what then? The trouble is inherent in these secret, oath-bound societies. Hundreds of workmen lying idle; hundreds of families starving because some head-center declares war; hundreds of men out of a job when the war is over; several new-made graves; and several cripples for life; these results constitute a strong indictment against such un-American institutions. They should be opposed because they are on a wrong basis, and will, as a matter of course, cause trouble, most of all to the laborers themselves."

When will the churches and Christians everywhere learn the difference between honest, untrammelled mechanics and laborers and the tyrannical, oath-bound secret "unions" that have proved themselves foes to every principle of human freedom and established a despicable despotism over all their members?

THE WORLDS' FAIR DEDICATION.

October 21 the buildings of the Columbian Exposition at Jackson Park were dedicated, and very soon, wherever electrical science has penetrated, the world had heard of the enormous pomp and pageantry that distinguished the ceremonies of the occasion.

In the records of time, so far as human history is concerned, the event is emblazoned as one of the greatest and most magnificent that has ever attended the celebration of human heroism.

It was no doubt a great thing for his age, and for the world at large, that Columbus discovered America. More than that, it was providential; and in giving to Castile and Leon a new world, the sturdy Italian navigator was an humble instrument in the hand of God, "building better than he knew;" and to him it is right to accord all the credit of that achievement which his wisdom, forethought and intrepidity deserve.

It is meet that he should be thus far honored; that the event should be duly remembered; that his labors and their results should be indelibly impressed upon the rising generation; but there is danger that in all the display and enthusiasm attending the Columbian Exposition, his name shall be too greatly exalted, and that of the Almighty shorn of its glory, in the assignment of honor to the man rather than to his Creator.

There is no doubt that several hundred years before its discovery by Columbus, this continent was visited by hardy Northmen; but it is very evident, since its development and settlement by foreigners did not follow their discovery, that God's time for making it a field for its present occupation had not yet arrived, and the world remained in ignorance of its existence and its resources until the Italian navigator, 400 years ago, placed it within reach of human ken.

For God had a purpose in the discovery of America by Columbus, which succeeding generations have been working out, with more or less success, too much in their own strength perhaps, yet evidently upon the lines laid down by the Almighty for the solving of the problem of humanity.

It would require a library to record what God hath wrought in this wonderful land during the four hundred years just closed. The mind falters at the multiplicity of his works performed here for the advancement of his kingdom, the glory of his name, and the eternal welfare of his children. We may admire and praise the magnificent products of agriculture, art, science, labor and literature which this great Exposition is bringing together for our delight; we may rejoice in the progress of human skill and learning, but we ought to avoid man-worship and will-worship when we contemplate the grandeur of these Fair exhibits. "The things which are seen" (wrote the apostle Paul) "are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." 2 Cor. 4:18. While the ceremonies attending the dedication of the Fair were appropriate, yet, as compared with the spiritual affairs of human life, they, and the occasion which they commemorated, were but secondary matters, and the same curiosity and earnestness that actuated the masses in Chicago on that day would be powerful agents, if rightly directed, in the conversion of the world.

TIMELY AND TRUTHFUL.

The Report of the Committee on Moral Reform in the Kansas Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection takes a bold stand against the iniquity of the lodge, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, as a Connection, look upon all secret orders, political or the so-called benevolent, as inimical to the common good of society, and that their ordained system of worship is false, and an insult to God and a Gospel-enlightened conscience, because as a system it rejects the person and the atoning mediation of Jesus Christ as the only ground of man's acceptance with God, and puts as a substitute in its place an implicit obedience to their cabalistic oaths as a fitness for heaven, in consequence of which the popular churches of our land have become spiritually dead, because of their fellowship in their church bodies of the lodge worship, and therefore their present religious state is a state of moral stagnation and death, and Bible discipline in their bodies has become a farce.

"We further declare that this secret empire is the stronghold of all the monopolies of our land, in our age, and especially that of the liquor monopoly; and that in its governmental principles it is a strange government, acting inside and undermining a free republican form of government, claiming to have in itself the right of life and death outside of the constitutional civil law of the land. Therefore, we declare it to be an enemy to a free constitutional form of government by the people and for the people, and is therefore the greatest enemy of the working class, as it denies equal rights to all laboring men. As such it is the child of a foreign planting, introduced into this country from the old monarchical bloody dragon of the Roman empire; is in its principles autocratic, and in its form of worship heathenish; idolatrous in its nature and moral principles, the anti-Christ of our time in its incorporated associated form, and the legitimate child of Roman Catholicism, conceived by Voltaire, the apostle of infidelity and French Jacobine socialism, and born into active life by the French Illuminati, which brought forth the French goddess of liberty in a flood of blood of the French Revolution. It is the spirit of Jesuitism, only different in form, but the same in spirit and nature."

—A Washington dispatch of a recent date announces that "the President has granted amnesty in the cases of Gustave Anderson, Charles A. Anderson, L. H. Berg, Warren G. Child, Lauro Fustrop, Andrew Hansen, Peter Johnson, James Jensen, Edward D. Mills, Niels P. Nelson and William J. Poppleton, convicted in Utah of bigamy or polygamy." Amnesty is granted on the recommendation of the attorney-general that the prisoners abstain from unlawful polygamy and concubinage in the future.

The concluding address was given by Rev. W. I. Brooks, of Pawnee City, Neb., on "The Lodge and the Church Antagonistic." Though many in the church desire peace and quietness between them and the lodge, and many in the lodge desire peace and quietness between them and the church, yet the aims, plans, principles and destiny of the lodge are antagonistic to those of the church. Bro. Brooks gave no uncertain sound, and concluded the Convention in an admirable manner.

Several things deserve further mention. The Convention held all its sessions in the Covenanter church. On the other side of the street stands the court-house. Contrary to usual custom, the cornerstone of its foundation was laid, not by Masonic hands, amid Baal incantations, but by the hands of a Covenanter minister, with Christian services, amid the incense of Christian prayer and praise to God. There was something fitting in holding an anti-secrecy convention across the road.

We had beautiful Indian summer weather. A fine rain on Monday evening laid the dust which had been flying for many weeks or months. Tuesday morning the sun came out bright and clear. The Lord smiled upon our Convention.

Very kind entertainment and hospitality was extended to all who came. I was at six or seven different places during the week, and can speak definitely of the hearty welcome the good people of Wahoo extended to us.

A liberal collection was gathered, and a good Cynosure club was raised. This is an encouraging item always. A continued interest is assured if the Cynosure be placed in many hands for a year.

Excellent music was furnished all the way through the Convention, for the most part by the Dodds quartet. The Convention and all concerned owe this quartet a vote of thanks for the help they gave the Convention and the cause. Mrs. Harrison and Miss Beebe gave a beautiful duet. Thanks are due to all of these. We do not know how much we owe these singers; for reformers are usually supposed to be pretty savage fellows, yet

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast."

The past, at least, is secure. Take it all in all, we may set it down in our calendars that the first Nebraska State Anti-secrecy Convention was a decided success, under God, exceeding our most sanguine expectations. To our Lord Jesus be all the praise. Amen. W. C. PADEN.

DOWN THE VALLEYS OF THE FOX AND THE ILLINOIS.

Congregational and Baptist Associations.—The great whiskey metropolis, its churches and lodges.

Another week is closing its record of perplexity and encouragement, with a large overbalance of the latter. Elgin Association of Congregational churches opened at St. Charles, Ill., on Monday Oct. 24. I was made welcome by the pastor, Bro. Smith, and took part in the discussion of the somewhat celebrated Frazer case, of which some particulars have been published in the Cynosure. Since Mr. Frazer's name was dropped from the roll of the Association, he has been rewarded, I am informed, by the Knight Templars of Wisconsin with a high office, as a reward for his trials and a challenge to the Congregational and Presbyterian bodies that have unfavorably considered his ministerial standing. He has an indefatigable friend, Rev. Mr. Green, a recent Methodist and champion of Freemasonry, who continues in every possible way to press his claims. I could not remain to hear the end of the matter, but the more it is agitated the fewer seem to be the friends of its central figure.

At St. Charles I learned of the death of Dean Ferson, a most steadfast friend of our work, some months since. His son renewed with hearty approval the Cynosure subscription which his father has maintained for years.

Fox River Congregational Association was meeting at Streator, and I hastened to fulfill a promise to speak there. While waiting at Aurora, a conversation with Rev. Mr. Cady, presiding elder of the M. E. church, strengthened the opinion of the growing opposition of his brethren toward secretism. Not more than one-half, in his judgment, are holding lodge membership. Fifteen years ago it was fifty per cent greater. Bro. Whittington succeeds Bro. Parry as pastor of the Free Methodist church. The latter goes to Evanston, an important educational and religious center. Bro. James Powers of the Aurora church lay for days at the point of death when I visited Aurora two months ago. We must thank God that he has raised up this dear aged brother to continue his testimony against the great iniquities of the age.

About an hour before its adjournment I reached the Fox River Association. Some misinformation as to dates made me tardy, but I had the pleasure of hearing Rev. Mr. McMillan, district superintendent of Sabbath-school work, though too late for Miss Hand's account of mission life among the Mormons, which is always intensely interesting. Brethren Ethridge of Marseilles, Riggs and Buckley of Streator, Newlands, Helm and others had very cordial greetings, and appointments were made for future visitation of the churches. Bro. Newlands was an associate in Sabbath-school work among the Sierras last year; Bro. Riggs preceded Rev. A. J. Chittenden, formerly of the N. C. A. Board, at Grand View, Tenn., and Bro. Buckley has from the first stood for our work in this part of Illinois. He was honored as moderator of the association.

The Baptist State Convention had already been two days in session at Peoria when I reached that city Wednesday afternoon. It was meeting in the beautiful new building of the First Baptist church. An earnest zeal which rose at times to enthusiasm pervaded the meeting, especially during the session of the Young People's Union, which was addressed, among others, by Rev. E. O. Lovett, now pastor of a new church in Peoria, but when in the Morgan Park Theological Seminary associated in the students' movement against the secret orders (which, by the way, is worthy of revival.)

A few acquaintances gave me an introduction to leading members of the body; and, though its presiding officer was a high Mason, and the chairman of its business committee a member, as he expressed it, "of all the lodges he could get into," I was promised an opportunity to present the N. C. A. work and request for delegates to our annual meeting conference. For some reason best known to those making it, the opportunity did not come to realization. But the promise was in itself a point gained, as was the subsequent promise to appoint a delegation. I could not well remain to see whether this was fulfilled, but trust that, being made in apparent good faith, it will give us two good representatives of the Baptist churches of Illinois. They cannot afford to lag behind in the discussion of the lodge, when such men as Gordon, Gifford, Pentecost and Moorhead lead the way.

During two days I visited most of the pastors of the city, and found them, with few exceptions, unconnected with secret orders, and a goodly number most heartily opposed. Bro. Jessup, of the Swedish Lutheran church, secured a brief address from me at his mid-week meeting, which seemed to be excellent in its effect. Some half-dozen other appointments were made for a future visit; and left Peoria to fill Sabbath appointments at this place, after beginning again the Cynosure list, and aiding to renew the efforts of former days, when Moses Pettengill was a leading citizen, to withstand and remove the multitude of secret orders, the incense from whose altars seems to darken the heavens above every church spire of the city.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND SECRETARY.

A CALL TO DROWSY NEW ENGLANDERS.

The faithful—and such they are—need no special word from me. The call of God by his servant Moses, at that notable Templars' Encampment, is sufficient: "Who is on the Lord's side, let him come unto me." (Exodus 32:26.) With them the official announcement is sufficient. Their heads and hearts are right, and when the word is passed along the line they are ready to "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

There is, I am sorry to say, another class to whom I am impelled to say: "It is time to awake out of sleep," and "put on the whole armor of God." It is high time for all such to be "not hearers only, but doers of the word."

The sun of reform is rising in the east, and there is a responsive glow on the western horizon. A belt of light is spreading from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, flooding the hills and valleys with intellectual and spiritual light, that is destined to wither the parasites of secrecy clinging to "the old ship of Zion," as their last "forlorn hope." The patriot who has any heart in his bosom, any conscience, or courage, or loyalty in his soul, or any love for his fellows, or for Christ who "died to redeem them that were under the law," can afford to shut his eyes and stop his ears and deliberately turn his back and walk away into the darkness of secrecy, or to sit silent or grumbling under its blighting shadow in such a dawn as already lights the hill-tops of the grand old commonwealth of New England. Would it not be an act of treachery to Him who planted this country "wholly of a right seed," and a most pusillanimous desertion of the standard around which such noble heroes as Finney, Colver, Bernard, Carpenter, Blanchard and a host "of like precious faith" have laid down their lives.

As I note "what God hath wrought," and forecast his purposes in the future, it does not seem possible that any true friend of the New England Christian Association should fail of every reasonable effort to be present. Friends, I say emphatically you ought not to allow the cause to suffer by reason of your absence; you ought to come, and you ought to bring level heads, warm hearts, and willing minds, and, above and beyond every other consideration, "be ye filled with the Spirit."

You ought to be at this "yearly sacrifice," because (1st) God calls you. He has opened a commodious room in the very heart of Boston, second to no other in its influence in this whole country. He is preparing the people by a series of holiness meetings and conventions of Christian workers, to receive plain practical truth spoken in love. He has prepared men and women who are "known in the gates" to "preach the preaching he bids them." Let us pray that he may "touch their lips as with a live coal from off the altar." He has shaken the "secret empire" by exposing the shams and swindles of the "endowment orders," by judicial investigations in the Massachusetts Legislature, and made secrecy, as a principle of fraternity, odious in the eyes of a host who have been betrayed and then robbed of their substance.

He has called out a Gideon's Band, who, with sounding trumpets and breaking pitchers, are shouting for victory about the camp of the Jesuits; and now he is calling a rally of those whose "eyes have been anointed with eyesalve," and are prepared to enlighten such as "see men only as trees walking;" men who see how utterly futile it is to attempt to curb Romanism with one hand while holding the same cunning craft and priestism which gives the Jesuit his power, in the other hand, under the name of Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, et al.

2. You ought to be here, because it is worthy of your best endeavor. It is the question of worship, that has confronted the race from the days of Cain and Abel to the present. Abel brought an "offering of the firstlings of his flock," and was accepted in his obedience and faith in Christ. Cain brought an "offering of the fruit of the ground," and was rejected for his disobedience and unbelief. The first murder followed as a direct product of false worship, or worship in which Christ was not confessed "before men;" and there has never been a crime-blots on the record of our race that has not sprung from the same source. A movement which stands by Abel's altar, with its lamb typical of "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world," and by the communion table of the Gospel, and against Cain's altar and its Gentile sacrifices, certainly merits your hearty endorsement.

3. You ought to be present, because the meeting needs your presence, and you need the information and inspiration it will give to your soul. Secretism has "come in like a flood," and you really need a clearer vision of the "horses and chariots of fire," and to feel that "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." You need to have the "shiver" taken out of you, and there is nothing like a glimpse of Elisha's God at the head of his battalions and a baptism of the Holy Ghost to do it. Try it once.

4. You ought to be on hand, because it is the first meeting of the Association with corporate rights and powers. This corporation is as worthless as an old shoe unless you put life into it. It will neither stand, nor stay, nor run, if left to decay in solitude. But your drowsy ones are saying, perchance: "You go ahead and we'll agree to what you do." Very kind, indeed, and considerate; but do you think that the highway to victory? I question very seriously whether the faithful few have any right to accept your tender of confidence in their ability, or whether you are faultless in making such an offer. There has been too much of this "You do and we'll in-dorse," already, for the honor of Christ or the promotion of his cause. Let us try the "more excellent way" of being instant in season, abounding in the work of the Lord.

5. You ought to come, because God has intrusted funds for this cause to your care for which he will call you to account. The N. E. C. A. has never, so far as I know, met when it had any considerable sum of cash in hand to dispose of for the cause. True, the money consideration is only a means to the end, but it is nevertheless highly important. Faithfulness in "a few things" is the very best evidence of worthiness to receive "many things" over which to rule.

6. There comes an urgent call from the Pacific slope, with strong financial backing, which, if accepted, necessitates a change in your field agent; and because this change is possible, and would on many accounts be desirable, you ought to come and give counsel and voice. There should be no hasty or "shoddy" action, but wise counsels and a clear judgment should prevail. Will you come? Say, if you love the cause, "God helping me, I'll be there, in the might and power of the Holy Spirit."

JAMES P. STODDARD.

THE NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION, ETC.

ON TRAIN FOR BINGHAMTON, }
N. Y., Oct. 29, 1892. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The New York State Convention was a success. Numerically it was not as large as some, but the spirit of our Captain overruled and guided the deliberations. I believe it has left a good impression and has been the means of awakening many and warning some who might otherwise be entrapped. As usual, the evening sessions were much better attended than those of the day.

There were other meetings in town both evenings. Two United Presbyterian churches were dedicated near by; politics were taking the attention of some; we were disappointed in some speakers; but God and the weather were in our favor.

Much credit is due Bro. Shaw. When some suggested a postponement because of disappointment in securing speakers, he said "Go ahead." From first to last he was on hand to do what he could. His two addresses were masterly presentations of the facts.

Bro. Wallace's address showed a thorough study of his subject. His manner of presentation was both pleasing and convincing.

Brothers Tamblin and Brazee spoke in a manner to arouse. As they are ministers in the Free Methodist church, you may know that they would not be behind in matters of reform. It was my privilege to make my home with Bro. Brazee while in Walton. The unswerving faith and devotion of this brother and his estimable wife were a great source of inspiration. May the Lord reward them richly!

As the secretary's report will give details, I need not comment further.

Much of my time during the week past has been given to arranging for this gathering.

Sabbath evening I went eight miles in the country with Bro. Shaw and preached the Word to those who gathered in Rock Rift Union church. This church is in the centre of a rich farming community, and is very much in need of a pastor. The United Presbyterians and Covenanters have been supplying them preaching. It is thought that great good might be accomplished if some young man would settle here. This may come to the notice of some one who would be willing to take this needy field.

I return home early next week and plan (D. V.) to spend much of November in work in Pennsylvania. Any desiring work at this time in their section can address me at the Washington office.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

MARANATHA.

The Lord will come; the earth shall quake;
The hills their fixed seats forsake:
And, withering, from the vault of night
The stars withdraw their feeble light.

The Lord will come; but not the same
As once in lowly form he came,—
A silent Lamb to slaughter led,—
The bruised, the suffering, and the dead.

The Lord will come; a dreadful form,
With wreath of flame, and robe of storm,
On cherub wings, and wings of wind,
Anointed Judge of human kind.

Can this be he who went to stray
A pilgrim on the world's highway,
By power oppressed, and mocked by pride?
O God, is this the Crucified?

Go, tyrants, to the rocks complain;
Go seek the mountain's cleft in vain;
But faith, victorious o'er the tomb,
Shall sing for joy, "The Lord is come."

—Reginald Heber, 1811.

THE PROFANE DOCTOR.

Some years ago, soon after beginning my pastorate in a certain church—I need not say where—I preached a sermon on profane swearing. It was a very plain discourse, aiming to show that the habit of profanity was useless, vulgar, shocking to the minds of decent people, and an insult to God. At the head of his pew in the middle aisle, and near the pulpit, where all the audience could see him, sat an old physician. I noticed that he was very uneasy, turning now on this side, then on that, like a caged lion; but I did not know at the time what was the cause.

"You gave the doctor some blows to-day," said one of the deacons, after service was over.

"How so?" I inquired.

"Why, don't you know he is the most profane man in town?" he replied.

One of the elders shook his head and gravely remarked: "I think that pew will be vacated. I have no idea the doctor will stand such a shot as you gave him this morning."

This was a new experience for me, and not very pleasant. The aged physician was wealthy, and a very popular man in the community. He had but recently retired from his practice in the large city, and had come to spend the evenings of his life with us. He was social and generous, and we felt we were favored in securing him as a church attendant and supporter. How unfortunate that anything should be said to displease him, and perhaps drive him away from the service of the sanctuary! What could I do but leave it with God! I was his servant, and had spoken his message, and felt convinced that he would take care of me and the church and the truth.

But what was the result?

The next morning the old doctor was seen driving up to the parsonage. The minister was not at home, but his wife was, and she warmly welcomed the visitor in the parlor. Great was her surprise when he exclaimed, somewhat abruptly: "I like your husband. He is a courageous young man, who is not afraid to speak the truth, even if it does convict some old sinner like me. I have brought $10 as a contribution to the Bible Society, the claims of which were presented in our church a week ago yesterday; and in addition to this I beg you to accept this $5 for yourself as a token of my esteem for your husband as my pastor."

I do not know that the old doctor at once ceased his profanity; but he continued to wait on my ministry. Although living four miles from the sanctuary, he was every Sabbath morning in his place as long as I continued in that pastorate, and a very attentive hearer he was.

Some years after, when settled in another parish, I came back to visit my old charge. The physician, then very aged, was sick. I called on him and found him physically feeble, but his mind was clear and composed, and his heart seemed changed. Gladly he listened as I talked to him concerning the heavenly kingdom. He said he was a sinner, but he believed he was saved by grace. Evidently he was standing on the border-land, and I was not surprised to learn that a few weeks after he stepped quietly over.

The profane swearer had become an humble Christian. The aged pilgrim has gone home. He was one of the many wonderful trophies of grace called at the eleventh hour to work in the vineyard, and paid just as if he had toiled all day.

That was a wholesome lesson to me. I have always tried to be prudent in the enunciation of truth, so as not needlessly to offend people. But never since then have I been afraid to speak of sin and warn men to flee from the wrath to come.

In the pulpit, the preacher stands between God and men. Even sinners will respect him while he speaks the word of condemnation in their ears, and as he humbly wields the sword of the Spirit God will bless him.—Christian Intelligencer.

TO COUNTRY GIRLS.

If your lives have fallen into some quiet, unpretentious place, do not complain that it is dull and commonplace, and that "there is nothing to live for here," as I have heard so many do. Why, dear heart, there is no place on God's earth so bleak and barren, so quiet and lonely, so wind-swept and rain-beaten, but that there is a great deal to live for right there, and when you have grown a little older you will see it with clear eyes; and you will, perhaps, look back to the country village and wish—oh, how you will wish!—that you had been happy and content in that simple life. You will know, then, that it is nobler to live well a humdrum life, than to wear out body and mind and soul in a fever of gaiety and frivolity and to stretch out your empty hands always to something you cannot seize. Better to sing babies to sleep in the soft twilights that fold down over a cottage home, than to loll in velvet carriages and laugh at the brainless nonsense that men of the world whisper into your jeweled ears. And better—far better—to dwell forever away from the lights, and the roar, and the temptations, and the sins of the city, with a clean heart and a pure soul, than to let the city's passionate unrest creep into your pulses and set them to beating in a mad chase after—death.—Amber, in Good Form.

ALMOST A FAIRY TALE.

A pathetic story is published in the London Daily Telegraph. A hospital for sick children in the East End of London was "a tumble-down old wharf warehouse." But it had to do for the sick children simply because there was no money to build a better place. One day, up the rickety stairs, holding on by the rope that served for banisters, came a shabby, gruff old man, asking, in a tone that seemed to threaten an action for damages, if this were a children's hospital, and if they did not want a proper "hospital." The secretary, with faint hopes of a guinea, answered the question and received—a cheque for £1,000! They went over the place, and when this unexpected angel of blessing had seen the children he came back, asked again for pen and ink and wrote—a second thousand! Then, with his coat buttoned, he was about to go, but one story after another of healing and child heroism flowed from the secretary's lips, until with a gruff "Hal!" the coat was thrown back once more, the magic book produced, and a third thousand laid beside the others. "I found my way up and I can find my way down. Good-day!" The man of shabby coat and gruff voice was gone, but the secretary had the new building in his hands.

WAITING FOR THE GRIST.

"It is strange," said a gentleman who sat next to me in a car, and with whom I had struck up quite an acquaintance, "what an influence a look, a word, or the little act of a perfect stranger, will sometimes have upon a person."

"Yes, said I, 'more than any of us realize.'"

"It was the simple act of a stranger that changed the whole course of my life."

"Indeed! How was that?"

"When I was a boy my father moved to Ohio. It was before the days of steam, and no great mills thundered on her river banks; but occasionally there was a little grist mill by the side of some small stream, and thither, whenever the water was up, the whole neighborhood flocked with their sacks of corn. 'First come, first served.' Sometimes we had to wait two or three days for our turn. I was the one usually sent from our house, for, while I was too small to be of much use on the farm, I was as good as a man to carry a grist to mill. So I was not at all surprised one morning when my father said, 'Henry, you get up old Roan and go to mill to-day.' Saunders' mill was ten miles away, but I had made the trip so often that it did not seem far. I believe one becomes more attached to an old mill than to any other building. I can see just how it looked as it stood there under the sycamores, with its huge wheel and clapboard sides.

"When I arrived, I found the North Branch and the Rocky Fork folks there ahead of me, and I knew there was no hope of getting home that day; but I was not at all sorry, for my basket was well filled with provisions, and Mr. Saunders always opened his big barn for us to sleep in; so it was no unpleasant time we had while waiting for the grist. This time there was an addition to the number who had been from time to time in the habit of gathering in the old barn—a young man of about my own age, probably a little older. His name was Charley Allen, and his father had bought a farm over on the Brush Creek road. He was sociable and friendly, but I instinctively felt that he had more 'manners' than the rest of us. The evening was spent as usual in relating coarse jokes and playing cards. Although I was not accustomed to such things at home, I had become so used to it at the mill that it had long since ceased to shock me, and indeed, I was fast becoming a very interested spectator.

"Well, boys, it is time for us fellers to go to roost," said Jim Finley, one of the greatest roughs on the Rocky Fork, as he threw down his pack of cards and began to undress. We all followed his example, although it was not much undressing we did to sleep on the haymow; but we were so busy with our own affairs that we did not notice Charley Allen until Jim exclaimed, 'Heydey, we've got a parson here, we have!' Charley was kneeling by the oats bin, praying. Jim Finley's jest met with no response. The silence was only broken by the drowsy cattle below, and the twittering of the sparrows overhead. More than one rough man wiped a tear from his eye as he went silently to his bed on the hay. I had always been in the habit of praying at home, but I never thought of such a thing at Saunders' mill.

"As I lay awake that night in the old barn, thinking of Charley's courage, and what effect it had upon the men, I firmly resolved that in the future I would do right. I little thought how soon my courage would be tested. Just after dinner I got my grist and started for home. When I arrived at Albright's gate, where I turned off to go home, I found the old Squire waiting for me. I saw in a moment that something had gone wrong. I always stood in the greatest awe of the old gentleman, because he was the richest man in the neighborhood, and now I felt my heart beginning to beat very fast.

"As soon as I came near he said, 'Did you go through this gate yesterday?' I could have easily denied it, as it was before daylight when I went through, and I quite as often went the other way. Charley Allen kneeling in the barn came to my mind like a flash, and before I had time to listen to the tempter I said, 'Yes, sir, I did.'

"Are you sure you shut and pinned the gate?" he asked.

"The question staggered me. I remember distinctly that I did not. I could pull the pin out without getting off my horse, but could not put it back again; so I carelessly rode away, and left it open.

"I—I—I—"

"Out with it! just tell me what you did!"

"I left it open," I said abruptly.

"Well, you let the cattle in and they have destroyed all my early potatoes—a terrible piece of business."

"I'm sorry—I'd—"

"Talking won't help matters now; but remember, boy, sorrow doesn't make potatoes, sorrow doesn't make potatoes."

"I felt very badly about the matter, for I was really sorry the old gentleman had lost his potatoes, and then I expected to be severely reprimanded at home; but I soon found they knew nothing about the matter, and after several days had passed I began to rest quite easy. Alas for human hopes! One rainy afternoon I saw the Squire riding down the lane. I ran off to the barn, ashamed to meet him, and afraid to meet my father. They sat and talked for a long time. At last my curiosity overcame my fear, and I stole back to the house and went into mother's room to see if I could hear what they were talking about.

"Why, the boy could be spared well enough, but he don't know anything about the business," said my father.

"There's one thing he does know," said the Squire; "he knows how to tell the truth."

"He then told the story which I so much dreaded to have my father hear. After he had gone my father called me to him and told me that the Squire was going to open a store in the village and wanted a boy to help, and that I could go if I wanted to do so. I went, and remained until the village store blossomed into a city store; and people say I got my start in life when I entered Albright's store; but I will always maintain that I got it while waiting for the grist."—Minnie B. Fenwick, in the Union Signal

KINDNESS IS CATCHING.

A newsboy took the Sixth avenue elevated railroad car at Park Place, New York, at noon on Thanksgiving day, and sliding into one of the cross seats fell asleep. At Grand street two young women got on, and took seats opposite to the lad. His feet were bare and his hat had fallen off. Presently the young girl leaned over and placed her muff under the little fellow's dirty cheek. An old gentleman in the next seat smiled at the act, and, without saying anything, held out a quarter with a nod toward the boy. The girl hesitated a moment, and then reached for it.

The next man just as silently offered a dime, a woman across the aisle held out some pennies, and, before she knew it, the girl with flaming cheeks had taken money from every passenger in that end of the car. She quietly slid the amount into the sleeping lad's pocket, removed her muff gently from under his head without rousing him, and got off at Twenty-third street, including all the passengers, in a pretty little inclination of the head that seemed full of thanks and a common secret. This rebukes Ingersoll's sneer that that if he had been God he would have made good things catching. They are catching, and God made them so.—Parish News.

THAT'S ENOUGH FOR ME.

A child who had a mother asked from one who had none:

"What do you do without a mother to tell all your troubles to?"

Mother told me to whom to go before she died," answered the little orphan. "I go to the Lord Jesus; he was my mother's friend, and he is mine."

"Jesus Christ is in the sky. He is a long way off, and he has a great many things to attend to in heaven. It is not likely that he can stop to attend to you."

"I don't know anything about that," replied the orphan. "All I know is he says he will, and that's enough for me."

What a beautiful answer that was! And what was enough for the little one is enough for us all.—Exchange.

REAL FRIENDS.

You may have heard your mother tell how, when she went to school, she had such a dear girl friend, and how they two have kept up the friendliness for many years, and you have perhaps heard her say that school friendships are often the most enduring of any. Then you have wondered if you and your present "best friend" will love each other when both of you are gray-headed. Now let us see how things stand between you and your best friend Anna. Of course you like her very much, but you must confess that very frequently there comes a little "tiff," and you "fall out." When such a thing happens you straightway transplant your affections to some other girl, and your friend does likewise. You two scarcely speak when you meet, and generally make a point of showing great devotion to the new friend in the presence of the old one.

Now isn't it rather silly to have these unhappy differences so frequently? If Anna does some very unworthy act, then she deserves the loss of your friendship; but is your regard so frail a thing that it cannot stand small differences of opinion? Cannot you be more generous?

If your friend is lovable and you are the kind of a girl you ought to be, then you will bear with her inconsistencies and put up with some of her faults. Perhaps you are not quite perfect yourself, and she may have to bear some things from you. If your friendship is the real thing, you will remember that love "hopeth all things," "beareth all things," and so bearing many things patiently and sweetly, you will find that years will not weaken, but will rather strengthen, your mutual bond of intercourse.—Harper's Young People.

"SHOW ME WHERE THE CHRISTIANS LIVE."

Ye different sects, who all declare
"Lo, here is Christ!" or "Christ is there!"
Your stronger proofs divinely give,
And show me where the Christians live.

The gates of hell cannot prevail;
The church on earth can never fail:
Ah, join me to my secret ones!
Ah, gather all thy living stones!

In them let all mankind behold
How Christians lived in days of old;
Mighty their cavius foes to move,
A proverb of reproach and love.

Scattered o'er all the earth they lie,
Till thou collect them with thine eye;
Draw by the music of thy Name,
And charm into a beauteous frame.

For this the pleading Spirit groans
And cries in all thy banished ones;
Greatest of gifts, thy love impart,
And make us of one mind and heart.

TEMPERANCE.

A SALOON-KEEPER'S TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

The temperance people have had a great deal to say, and we on this side have kept pretty quiet; that is, we haven't lectured in public much; but I think it is time we tried to do something to gain a new foothold. We don't know just what to do; only if talking will do the work on the temperance side, why won't it or ours? It isn't best to let this fight be too one-sided. Now here we are, strong in numbers, strong in determination, and strong in spirits; for though the thermometer may be freezing down in zero, or perspiring up among the hundreds, what matters it to us?

We are generous; we can afford to be; we have money, more than all the temperance folks put together; and our money comes easy, easy for us. The temperance folks say a good deal about its being hard on poor people who don't have much to buy bread with, but it's very easy work to just stand behind the counter and pour something from a bottle into a glass, and fill up the money drawer. To be sure we sometimes have to kick a man out doors, when he hasn't any money, and don't know enough to go home, and don't have any wife to come after him; but that's easy when you get used to it. Then it's kind of hard sometimes to give a young fellow his first glass of liquor, especially if I know his mother; but then you can do this easy when you get used to it. Then it's about the hardest thing I ever did to take a little bundle from a poor tattered man, in pay for a drink, and open it, and find a pair of little baby's shoes, or a little girl's doll, or a little boy's sled. Those things were hard work; but I got used to them, and now it's easy. They want us to stop because it's such a hard business. Why, that would be the hardest part—to stop.

When you're used to it all, it's an easy business, not half as hard as preaching or lecturing, particularly if you set out to lecture on temperance; and I am sure it isn't one quarter as hard as listening to such lectures. Folks come out of a temperance lecture and say, "How tired I am! What do we care whether it's two parts benzine and extract of old leather, and soakings of dirty molasses barrels, or whether it's two thousand parts? We don't drink. If they'd tell us some way to get rid of the stuff!" That's the way they talk,—I've heard them, lots of times; and they come right along by my saloon, and stop and shake hands with me standing in the door, and maybe step in and get a glass of lemonade, and ask me sweetly how I am going to vote! Now if I was fighting under the temperance flag, I wouldn't march up to a rebel, and pat him on the back, just for the sake of coaxing him to vote for me the next day.

One thing I wouldn't do if I was a temperance minister. If a saloon-keeper should hand me a ten-dollar bill as I was going by his saloon, I wouldn't take that bill, and fold it up, and put it in my pocket, and say, "Thank you, sir." I don't think near as much of the kind that will do that as I do of men like Elder Pennyworth. He was poor, and had a big family to provide for. The church couldn't pay him much, being one of the kind that can't hire any minister, unless he's willing to wait for his pay until he gets to the next world. I felt so sorry for poor Elder Pennyworth that one day when I met him in the street, I took out a twenty-dollar gold piece and offered him. But instead of dropping it into his pocket quick and then looking round to see if anybody saw him, he looked solemn, and didn't touch it, but said, putting his hand on my shoulder, "My dear friend, I thank you for the kindness. God knows how much I need money, but I wouldn't dare use it. You know it is written, 'The wages of sin is death.' I'm afraid to help use such wages." I thought I was in for a regular lecture, but that's all he said, and those few words have given me more hours of sober thinking than anything else I ever heard. I don't know as it was the words so much, either; only he acted as if he believed them, every one; and I tell you, that minister I respect, though I s'pose if his prayers should be answered, I should fail in business in less than a week, for want of customers. We're all right now for a while, for you aren't going to reform old toppers in a hurry; the prayer of a saint or the song of an angel wouldn't affect most of them enough to make them give up drinking.

But there are your Y. M. C. A. and your W. C. T. U., etc.; and if there are any more letters I have skipped, I suppose they have got them in some kind of a society—or something; and every one of them is doing its level best to draw the rising generation away from us. The boys used to like to come into my saloon. They said it was pleasanter than the church, it was so bright, and fixed up nice, you know; but the folks in these societies have learned the trick, and I declare if they aren't trimming up most as fine as we do. So I don't see the boys as much as I did. I have a few left yet who stand by me, but I'm afraid they won't stay much longer, if these women hold out. This is where the trouble is to come from—these persisting women. You may vote high license or low license, "Sunday" law or no "Sunday" law; you may stand at the polls from sunrise to sunset, and pass your little papers in as fast as you can count; you may raise your temperance platforms as high as a meeting-house and plant your temperance lecturers upon them as thick as they can stand; they may raise their voices till the tones reach the top of the Eiffel tower, and mark off their figures and statistics on their eloquent fingers as long as they can add and subtract. We will still hold up our heads, and keep up our spirits. This skirmishing don't affect us much; but so long as there is one woman left to wave her white handkerchief as the blue-ribbon, cold-water boys march along the streets, depend upon it, she'll do more damage to our trade than all the other things put together. Then the children, when they shall grow up, rooted and grounded in temperance,—they're beginning it now,—rocked in a temperance cradle, wheeled in a temperance cart, fed with a temperance teaspoon, on temperance bread and milk (half water)—why, even in the schools they're taught the effect of alcohol on their systems—along this line, I say, is where the trouble is going to come in for us saloon-keepers.

But I am bound not to give up, if I can help it. I'll rally new forces if I can; but if I have to surrender, you may know 'twas one of those little women that stole a march on me; and when that day comes, I hope you'll paint over my saloon door, just to make me feel mean and sneaking on account of deserting my colors, "Left Camp! Driven Out by a Woman!"—Hattie F. Bell, in the Golden Rule.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Paul and Barnabas called to the missionary work.—vs. 1-3. It was very fitting that from the city where the grand, distinctive name of Christians was first given to the disciples should go forth the first regularly ordained missionaries. Hitherto each laborer had worked as the Spirit prompted him, and with grand results, as in the case of Philip; but the time had now come for broadening the work and carrying it on more systematically. The church at Antioch had in her communion many highly-gifted men—prophets and teachers, who supplied the lack at that time of any written word adapted to the new order of things. Among them it is curious to see the great apostle to the Gentiles mentioned last. But at this period he was only Saul, the converted persecutor. His devoted spirit and wonderful ability seem not yet to have been fully recognized; perhaps because his own vivid remembrance of his former cruelties induced in him a humility that kept him in the background. We know that years afterward, when his name was beloved and revered beyond that of any other human being, his touching words, “unworthy to be called an apostle,” and the “chief of sinners, because I persecuted the Church of Christ,” showed that it was a memory seldom or never absent from his mind. “As they ministered and fasted the Holy Ghost”—through these prophets and teachers—said, “Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work wherunto I have called them.” We find here some very important lessons. (1) When called of God to any great work, the Spirit “separates” us to that work. The world loses its charms for us. Its pleasures cease to attract; its desires, hopes, ambitions, are displaced by one all-absorbing aim infinitely higher than any it can offer. This is the supreme, the unmistakable sign that we are indeed called with a divine calling. (2) We see the method of procedure in appointing missionaries in the early church. First, the calling of the Spirit; next, the ordaining and sending them away. There was no binding them to preach any denominational creed, but simply Jesus Christ and him crucified. (3) Before sending out these first missionaries the church fasted and prayed. Every member felt an individual interest, a personal stake in the work. Could there be a revival of such genuine missionary spirit, how soon would the great voice be heard in heaven saying, “The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ!”

2. Elymas the Sorcerer.—vs. 4-8. Cyprus, as the home of Barnabas, was naturally their first objective point. It had a large Jewish population and many synagogues where they could enter and preach the word to Jew and Gentile alike, for curiosity would soon bring the latter to hear what “these setters-forth of strange doctrines” had to say. “Paphos,” one of the strongholds of heathenism, famous for its worship of Venus. There they found a certain Jewish sorcerer and false prophet, one of a class whose services were much sought for by the superstitious Romans. Seeing that Sergius Paulus, the pro-consul, was favorably inclined to the new doctrine, and fearing to lose his influence, and in that case the gains which his profession brought him, he withstood the work of Paul and Barnabas, seeking to turn the deputy from the faith.” We have sorcerers in our own day,—men and women who claim to have communication with departed spirits, and who have turned multitudes from the faith of Christ. The characteristics of Elymas the sorcerer may be found not only in spiritualism, but in theosophy, Christian science, and other lying systems. “Paganism of all sorts,” says the India Watchman, “including Freemasonry, Romanism and theosophy, is from one prime source, the great Nimrod apostacy of ancient Babylon.” The spirit of sorcery, of lying and deception; is at the heart of them all.

3. The deceiver struck with blindness.—vs. 8-13. The lodge, in its power to bewitch men and lead them away from Christ, is the Elymas of our Protestant churches. Our young men would not be left to fall unwarned into its snare if all her pastors were, like Paul, “filled with the Holy Ghost.” “Full of all subtlety and mischief,” dark, underhanded, serpentine, characteristic of evil men everywhere. “Thou child of the devil.” Paul did not mince matters. When he saw a man doing the devil’s work, he had no hesitation in telling him to his face where he belonged. “And now behold,” etc. He had sought to keep the deputy in spiritual blindness. That he should be made physically blind for a season was only a fitting punishment. This was a miracle of judgment, but it was also a miracle of mercy, as it caused Sergius Paulus to believe, and doubtless others who would be influenced by his example.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—Rev. J. L. Barlow has resigned at Richmond, Ill., and retired from the pastorate permanently on account of failing health. His address is now Harvey, Ill. Any church, however, desiring a supply for a time may address him at Harvey.

—Rev. Dr. David Spencer sends the following to the Standard, Chicago. It shows that Baptist churches were first organized in the States and Territories at the dates herewith given: Rhode Island, 1639; Massachusetts, 1663; Maine, 1682; South Carolina, 1682; Pennsylvania, 1684; New Jersey, 1688; Delaware, 1701; Connecticut, 1705; Virginia, 1714; New York, 1724; North Carolina, 1727; Maryland, 1742; New Hampshire, 1755; Georgia, 1759; Vermont, 1768; West Virginia, 1774; Tennessee, 1780; Mississippi, 1780; Ohio, 1790; Illinois, 1796; Indiana, 1798; Arkansas, 1799; District of Columbia, 1802; Missouri, 1805; Alabama, 1808; Louisiana, 1812; Michigan, 1822; Indian Territory, 1832; Iowa, 1835; Wisconsin, 1836; Texas, 1837; Oregon, 1844; Minnesota, 1849; California, 1849; New Mexico Territory, 1849; Kansas, 1854; Nebraska, 1855; Washington, 1863; Colorado, 1864; Idaho, 1864; Wyoming, 1870; South Dakota, 1870; Montana, 1871; Nevada, 1873; North Dakota, 1879; Arizona Territory, 1879; Utah Territory, 1880; Oklahoma Territory, 1889.

—Between the years 1854 and 1891 (both included), the number of members received into Chas. H. Spurgeon’s Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, was 14,691, an average of about 390 per annum. The estimated number of members when Mr. Spurgeon first became pastor was 232. The present membership exceeds 5,000.

—An esteemed correspondent calls our attention to a discrepancy between two items in the Cynosure’s “Religious News,” Oct. 20, and we have since then seen it referred to in another religious paper: “Of the 2,600,000 Negroes in the South who are members of churches, 1,260,000 are Baptists.” This is one item. The other says: “A great gathering of the colored Baptists of the South was recently held at Savannah, Ga. The churches represented have 1,400,756 members.” Our impression is that one or the other item-writer blundered—perhaps both. We “caught them on the fly,” and cannot verify either.

EVANGELICAL.

—The Evangelical Alliance issues its usual notice and invitation to the churches of the world to unite in a week of prayer early in January next. The topics suggested for devotion and petition are very varied. The first day is to be one of “Humiliation and Thanksgiving.” On the next day prayer will be offered for “The Church Universal,” more particularly that “she be faithful in her protest against Romanism, sacerdotalism and latitudinarianism.” On another day prayer will be offered for “Nations and their Rulers,” and in this connection special prayer will be asked that the spirit of Mammon may cease to dominate mankind, that there may be fewer who haste to be rich and are content to wrap themselves in luxury. Home missions, foreign missions, children at home and in school, will all be remembered.—Christian Leader, Glasgow.

—Dwight L. Moody has concluded his evangelistic work in Ireland, leaving the Rev. John McNeill in Belfast to continue the services. Mr. McNeill’s sermons were full of evangelistic fire, and made a great impression. His audiences were as large as Mr. Moody’s, and he preached to ten thousand persons every night in the week during his stay in Belfast. At one o’clock in the day he gave “Talks to Business Men,” which were largely attended. Mr. Moody was to begin a week of meetings in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, Mr. Spurgeon’s church, and from London to go to Dublin for a week’s work there.

—It is not a hundred years since the first Protestant foreign missionary society was organized. Now there are more than two hundred such bodies, with more than seven thousand foreign missionaries, three thousand ordained native ministers, more than thirty thousand unordained native helpers, with converts numbering millions. Madagascar is a Christian kingdom. The Sandwich, Society, Fiji and New Hebrides Islands are evangelized. Japan is rapidly becoming Christian. Christianity is a growing power in China, Siam and India. Persia, Syria and Turkey are being permeated by Christian ideas. Africa alone remains almost unapproached.—St. Louis Republic.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Chicago preachers’ meeting elected officers for the year as follows: President, C. E. Mandeville; vice-presidents, H. G. Jackson, W. H. Burns, Wm. Fawcett; secretary and treasurer, J. A. Matlack; business committee, F. M. Bristol, E. C. Arnold, E. W. Drew, P. H. Swift, B. Lampert.

—Trinity College, at Durham, N. C., was dedicated with imposing ceremonies Oct. 12. The college buildings are the gift of Washington Duke, the millionaire tobaccoist of Durham. The college is under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Rev. Dr. J. F. Crowell, formerly of Pennsylvania, is president.

—A movement is on foot for the union of the Methodist and Methodist Free churches in Jamaica.

—The net increase in the membership of the M. E. Church South during the last year is 48,201.

—The City Evangelization union, organized in Pittsburgh, Pa., March 15, 16, 1892, by the representatives from more than twenty different societies in the United States, and working under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal church, will hold its annual convention in Madison-avenue M. E. church (corner Madison avenue and Sixtieth street), New York City, Wednesday and Thursday, Nov. 16, 17, 1892. All local societies are earnestly requested to send delegates.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—There are 375 Sunday-schools in New York City.

—Thirteen million people in England are non-churchgoers.

—A church an hour, night and day, this is the record of dedications in America.

—It is asserted that all of the $1,200,000 royalty on Moody and Sankey’s Gospel Hymns has been devoted to charitable purposes.

—A zenana Christian worker in Delhi, India, says there is scarcely a house in that city which is not open to the reception of the Gospel.

—Mr. Stearns, publishing agent for the National Temperance Publication Society, is authority for the statement that an appeal will be issued to all the Chicago churches to observe the second Sunday of next June as Temperance Sunday. Orators of national and international celebrity will be engaged and distributed to the best advantage for securing an audience with the thousands of visitors to the World’s Fair.

—The aim of the King’s Household of Bible Readers organization is to know the Book. It was formed in 1885 by Rev. Edwin H. Bronson, of Philadelphia, who hoped to engage in careful, systematic study of the Bible those who hitherto had read only occasionally or to no purpose. Thousands were soon enrolled. The entire Bible is read in a four-years’ course, and members are encouraged to make daily notes and frequent reviews, thus doing thorough work. A new class is forming which all are invited to join. For descriptive circular, address Mrs. E. H. Bronson, Salem, N. J.

—The religious organizations of England are taking steps to express opposition to England’s abandonment of Central Africa, which would imperil mission work in that region.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Among the results of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance the reports mention the Church of Christ in Japan. It is composed of four Presbyterian and two Reformed missions. An independent synod has been organized in Brazil also. In North China the Irish and the United Presbyterian church of Scotland united in May, 1891, as the Kuantung Presbytery. It is hoped that further unions may be consummated in China, but the differences of dialect are very great. The Canadian and English churches in the island of Formosa may unite. It is also proposed that all Presbyterian and Reformed missions in China should be gathered under three separate organizations: one for the north, one for the south, and one for middle China.

SALVATION ARMY.

—Through the work of the Salvation Army, an anarchist of the Herr Most type was recently converted. In relating his experience, in a Methodist church in Pittsburgh, Pa., he is reported to have said: “I was an anarchist because I loved beer. I loved beer because I was an anarchist. My wife loved me and ours, but I loved my anarchy and my beer. She went to work. She washed clothes to support me and my anarchy. I abused the capitalist for making me poor and making my wife work. I drank beer and abused men of money. Finally, when I was unable to make an impression upon the capitalist, I transferred my abuse to my wife. The impression made upon her was worth considering. One day I did consider it. I became a Salvationist and stopped abusing my wife. I also stopped abusing capitalists, who didn’t care for my abuse, and stopped drinking beer.”

—It is said that in New York and other cities many merchants make it a rule to make a reduction in price to members of the Salvation Army in uniform.

The strike of telegraphers on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe railroad, which the public had supposed had been peacefully terminated, may possibly be renewed in a day or two.

COUNTRY.

Superintendent Chislett, of Crown Hill Cemetery, Indianapolis, has selected six men from among the employes at the burying ground to guard Mrs. Harrison's grave. Two men are placed on duty at a time and they serve for eight hours and are then relieved.

President Harrison and party returned to Washington from Indianapolis.

Callery Junction twenty miles from Pittsburg, on the Pittsburg and Western railroad, was practically wiped out by fire.

The Euclid Avenue Opera House at Cleveland was ruined by fire.

On Sunday morning there was an explosion of gas and oil at the pumping station of a gas works in Philadelphia, which was very destructive to shipping. The loss in vessels, wharves, etc., is estimated at $134,500.

By an overflow of the River Saldo, in Mexico, thousands of acres of coffee and cane lands were inundated, and fully $300,000 damages to those crops alone was done. On the hacienda of Pedro Celis 2,000 head of cattle were caught in the torrent of water and swept into the ocean. Fully forty persons in all lost their lives. Hundreds of families were made homeless.

The total cotton crop of the year ending Sept. 1, was 9,035,379 bales, an increase over the previous year of 383,782 bales. The New Orleans Picayune says that the industry has passed through the worst year it has experienced in forty years. A good portion of the crop sold for less than the cost of production, and prices touched the lowest figures experienced since 1846.

The Armour's have completed the largest meat-packing plant in the world at Kansas City, Kans. It will employ 6,000 men.

D. T. Hanks, the tutor and life-long friend of Abraham Lincoln, died at Paris, Ill. He was 93 years old.

The Lutheran Synod of Kansas adopted a resolution declaring against the re-submission of the prohibition question.

The attempt to prohibit the giving of railroad passes to members of the Massachusetts Legislature has proven very unsatisfactory. The mileage regulation has been grossly abused by members. Their car fare will cost the State $30,000 this year.

A new superintendent has been placed over the Carnegie mills at Homestead, Pa. He is said to be more popular with workmen than his predecessor who was in charge at the time of the strike.

The Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad company has given $1,000 to each of the families of the four citizens of Coffeyville, Kan., who were murdered by the Dalton gang. Three of these men were Methodists. The relief fund besides this contribution amounts to $6,000.

Over twenty squares of the city of Milwaukee, Wis., including a large number of small dwellings, railway buildings, and many business establishments, were burned on Friday evening last. The estimates of losses are placed at about $4,000,000. Several lives were lost, and 10,000 persons were left homeless.

OLIVER DITSON COMP'Y, Boston.

Cod-liver oil is useful beyond any praise it has ever won; and yet few are willing to take it—the taste is so vile and it lasts so long. Some stomachs cannot take it, and some are burdened with it.

Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is not offensive; it is pleasant to some, especially children. It is not often a tax on digestion.

Scott's Emulsion is cod-liver oil made far more effectual.

FARM NOTES.

(From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

HORTICULTURAL.

Burn the tomato vines.
Potatoes should be out of the ground now.

We believe in fall plowing for the garden.

Clean up the trash about the garden and burn it.

Beets should be gathered before freezing weather.

Do not leave diseased tomatoes to rot on the ground. Burn them.

This dry fall is a grand time to get tile in that low corner in the garden.

Cabbage will stand quite a hard freeze. But do not pull to store while frozen.

If you have pop-corn do not store it where it will be a camping ground for rats or mice. Remember mice are small.

Stakes, poles and trellises that are fit for use next season should be gathered and stored under cover. If worth saving they are worth caring for.

Tender roses that are not so tender as to need housing should be given some winter protection. Marsh hay wound about them will do good service in this line.

Wait till the ground is frozen before covering the strawberry bed for winter, then cover lightly with marsh hay if you have it; if not, take the cleanest straw you have.

When storing beets, carrots or turnips in the cellar cover them with earth. This will give them to you crisp and firm for Christmas or Washington's birthday dinner.

If you have no root cellar, beets, carrots, potatoes and turnips may be kept safely by burial out of doors, only be sure the pit is drained so no water can reach or settle in it.

Chief Thorpe of the Bureau of Floriculture, World's Columbian Exposition, says: "I want to see pansies, balsams, phloxes, asters and zinnias so exhibited as to have it said they are the very best. Herbaceous plants of all kinds will be seen in great numbers."

Green, immature weeds will increase the manure pile. Mature weeds, either green or dry, will increase the work next year if not burned. The handful of ashes from them is worth much more than the mass of fertilizer they will make if added to the compost heap.

Salsify, or oyster plant, is a favorite winter root, but a poor keeper; if the cellar is the least too warm it grows and becomes flavorless; if the least overdamp it rots. To get the most good from the crop, dig a part and store in dry earth in the cellar; leave balance in the ground where it grew. Cover the rows with manure to prevent hard freezing of the ground, so a digging or two may be made when the first and subsequent supplies give out.

POULTRY.

Don't forget that the fowls can dispose of quite a number of cabbages this winter.

If you are going to change hens or put your flock into new quarters for winter, do it now. Our experience is that it takes a hen about so long to get settled in new quarters before laying.

If you feed soft feed during the winter, give it as the morning meal. In severe weather a meal of whole corn at night will not be out of place; if warmed, even roasted, it will be all the better. Feed wheat, meat and corn now, especially if the hens are a little late in moulting.

The question, "What profit per hen may reasonably be expected?" is often asked. The cost of keep and the receipts per hen differ in different localities and breed, but where accurate record has been kept it has been shown that the usual cost to keep a hen a year is $1 and the gross receipts $2; this gives $1 as the profit. This makes no allowance for wages of keeper. If one was going into the business on a large scale the cost of help would necessarily enter into the expense account, also interest on capital invested, and depreciation in building, etc. These things are too often overlooked when the profit on one hen is multiplied by 1,000, and the conclusion jumped at that the profit on 1,000 hens is $1,000.

LIVE STOCK.

Chili is importing Short-horns from England, and the whole South American country is reviving and improving their cattle industry.

The primary object in breeding should be to get a class of horses that will suit and please the people that are likely to be customers.

Ensilage or roots should be provided for the winter feed of cattle, and if neither of these are to be had, a few acres of rye will often afford a green bite throughout the winter.

Our increasing population will absorb an immense amount of horses, meat and wool, and it behooves us to study the best and cheapest methods of production and gradually get down to fewer numbers and better care.

The greatest expense attached to breeding trotters is in the development of the speed. No matter how generous nature may have been in the speed inheritance, the art of man must be used to bring out this inheritance; and good trainers are an expensive luxury, while a poor trainer is more expensive at any price.

A strike of momentous proportions, involving the members of the sixty-three labor unions of New Orleans, is in full force in that city. The refusal of merchants and manufacturers to recognize the authority of these secret societies in the conduct of their business, created the determination to strike. Arbitration resulted in a conference, which was virtually a recognition of the unions. The latter were not satisfied with this concession, but immediately inaugurated coercion on other grounds, and the "amalgamated council" ordered a general strike, to begin on Saturday last. The tyranny of these secret organizations will soon require a general reformation in the world of labor. While the rights of workingmen should be respected, the wrongs they commit upon the public should be severely punished.

An international organization of railway employees, which includes all classes from trackmen up, is in progress, and meetings in its interest are being held throughout the United States. As it will embrace all existing railway "brotherhoods," its membership is estimated at 14,000. That in union is strength, is an old principle; but it is patent, in these days, that in such unions as this there is also a great deal of selfishness which, too often, overlooks the rights of those outside of the "brotherhood," and becomes criminally aggressive. Of course the element of secrecy will pervade the new order. If all the railroads should secretly combine to protect their interests and defeat the objects of their oath-bound employees, what a bowl of "oppression" would be heard from Maine to Texas! And this movement may lead to that result.

When we read that striking workingmen, at Beaver Falls, Pa., last week, incensed at the opposition they received from citizens and business men, started seven incendiary fires in the town within thirty-six hours, it must be admitted that secret labor unions are schools of crime. The town council and reputable residents, tired of the forced suspension of operations at the iron works of the Carnegie company, persuaded the management to start up with non-union men. The result was as above stated, requiring a doubling of the police force, the patrolling of vigilance committees, and a force of armed men to secure the criminals. If the organized protection of labor means the hindrance of lawful enterprises, and the destruction of property, the unions may justly be condemned as anarchal institutions, designed to overthrow justice and good government.

Yale College Faculty is fast learning the evils of secret fraternities within its precincts, and the lesson promises to be a salutary one. After the killing of young Rustin, last spring, while undergoing the hazing process preliminary to initiation into one of the Greek-letter societies, the Faculty decided to remove all the fraternities from the institution, but was deterred by a petition from them, in which they promised, in future, to confine the initiation ceremonies to a simple signing of the fraternity's constitution. This fall the promise was broken and the Faculty is deliberating concerning the matter. It is generally conceded that the fraternities are doomed to extinction. The spirit of the lodge system is admirably exhibited in this case. Promises made to those outside of the lodge are not considered binding. Yale will do well to rid herself of the whole pestiferous crowd.

GOD'S FRATERNITIES IN CONTRAST WITH THOSE OF MAN.

REV. J. M. FRENCH'S ADDRESS AT THE NEBRASKA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

When Paul said: "Let brotherly love continue," it was certainly in his heart that brothers and sisters in the family at home should cherish toward each other a true and tender affection. He meant that the home, though composed of elements varied in character, and diverse in taste and inclination, should constitute a unity as real as that of any material compound whose elements are held together by the strong ties of chemical affinity. It pleased God to set the children of men in families; and when he constituted the husband as head over the wife and placed the children in subordination to the parents, it was all in the interest of harmony, and with a view to the promotion of kindly, fraternal relations on the part of all. It is obvious that if the happiness of the home is to continue, brotherly love must continue.

Did not Paul have the church in view when he said, "Let brotherly love continue?" It cannot be doubted. He well knew what harm resulted from strife among Christian brethren. He had seen the church at Corinth broken in pieces by internal dissension. He reproved them for disorder in observing the Lord's Supper when, forgetting the law of love, they each did eat before the other his own supper. He rebuked them for the factions into which they had fallen, when one said, I am of Paul; another, I am of Apollos; another, I am of Cephas; and yet another, I am of Christ. When he directed the brethren to walk in wisdom toward them which are without, he meant, no doubt, that they should so deport themselves that those without would be constrained to exclaim, See how these Christians love one another! The division of the church into sects, of denominations into parties, of congregations into factions, is utterly at variance with the injunction: Let brotherly love continue.

The convention will be opened with devotion exercises at 7 o'clock on Tuesday evening. At 7:30 o'clock an address of welcome will be delivered by Rev. L. G. Almen, pastor of the church at New London. Response by Rev. W. W. Ames, of Mnominie, Wis. At 8 o'clock an address, subject: "Modern Freemasonry a Revival of Devil-worship: coupled with scandalous lying artfully designed by the father of lies to set at naught the Word of God and destroy the souls of men," by Rev. W. Fenton, of St. Paul, Minn.

Morning, afternoon and evening, Wednesday, will be devoted to devotional exercises, questions, discussions, free parliament, committees, etc. Rev. W. W. Ames will deliver an address. It is expected that a Christian minister, who is a seceding Freemason, will also deliver an address.

What right have we to set any limit to this injunction? Are not all people who dwell on the earth children of one heavenly Father? Are they not all descended from one earthly father, also? Are we not all brethren? Should not brotherly love be co-extensive with the brotherly relation? This thought may not have been in Paul's mind when he wrote the words, but surely the Spirit of God breathed it into his utterance, that all the sons of men should love one another. The very corner-stone of civil society is the fraternal relation; and patriotism cannot long hold its place in the heart of the loyal citizen, if it be not inspired by the conviction that all the sons of the fatherland are indeed brethren, and bound to love each other as brethren.

We have now before us the three great brotherhoods of God: the family, the church and the state; God's fraternities, in each of which, alike, his exhortation and command is, Let brotherly love continue. In these fraternities we stand as brothers by God's appointment. In this relation we should be kind to each other; we should help one another; we may even be partial.

In the light of all this how are we to regard secret fraternities? Do not these pay great regard to Paul's exhortation? Do they not cry out with all possible emphasis, Let brotherly love continue? Note these important considerations:

1. The secret fraternity is an unwarranted addition to the brotherhoods of God. A brotherhood, it must be remembered, is very different from a mere society or association. The characteristic difference is this, that every brother is required to aid a brother in distress; that is, a brother needing his help; and he is to do this purely on the ground that he is a brother. Members of a literary, scientific or musical society, or of an agricultural or building association, or of a stock corporation, may be disposed to favor one another on the ground of acquaintance, or congeniality, or simply personal interest, however awakened; but they never think of being under obligation as brothers. This is characteristic of the fraternity. It will be conceded that there is a great difference between the mere association and the fraternity. It is patent that the characteristic distinction of the latter is brotherhood.

But who made the members of these orders brothers in the special sense in which they recognize each other? Certainly it was not the heavenly Father. It is the presumptuous claim of every new fraternity which appears that it is the ancient order of something; but not one claims to have derived its existence from any special teaching or sanction of the Word of God. Indeed, you may search the whole canon of Scripture in vain for any divine warrant to recognize the fraternal relation otherwise than in the three great fraternities of the family, the church and the state.

Must we be confined to these? If these are a good thing, and it is universally conceded, may we not add another of the same? Perhaps the Bible is a good book, but it is not large. There are twenty-four large volumes of the Britannica, and it is none too large. Shall we not add to the Bible? Yes, if you will. There are the writings of Swedenborg; there is the Koran; there is the book of Mormon. May we not learn something from the sacred ointment and perfume of the ancient people of Israel? A warning was given not to attempt to add other ointment or perfume like unto these. God has given to his church certain ordinances of worship. These are beautiful and good. May we not make others like them? If you will; but, remember, the practical result of this sort of thing is the papacy, with all its miserable mummeries. No, we may not add to the book of God; we may not add to the ordinances of his appointment; we may not add to the brotherhoods which he has instituted. God would himself have added others if there had been need of them.

2. The secret fraternity is an injury to those which God has given. Perhaps it seems to you a needless refinement to object to secret fraternities as unwarranted of God. You may be disposed to plead for them as certainly a very innocent addition to God's fraternities. Granted that they are innocent, does it follow that they should be allowed? How about that superfluous growth on your face? We shall suppose it is one of those innocent wens which change little with passing years and cause no pain. Does it cause you no pain to go about carrying the deformity? Ah, yes it does; and the surgeon's knife has been invoked to remove many a harmless growth for no other reason than to get rid of the deformity. God has no use for fraternities, or he would have given us some shadow of Scriptural basis for such orders; and if there is no real need for them then they are a deformity, and I should plead for their removal for this, if for no other reason. There is no need for them; there is no place for them.

Are they superfluous only? Do you not know that it is a rare thing for an excrescence to come upon the body which is not more than a deformity? Tumors are recognized as a form of disease, and unless skillfully and promptly attended to cause pain, and even result in death. The analogy holds in respect to unwarranted additions to God's provisions for the welfare of mankind. If we attempt to add thereto according to the dictates of human prudence the result is, not only a deformity, but an injury.

The fraternity interferes with the family. Brothers are estranged by the introduction of matters which may not be confided to each other. Husbands and wives are set on opposite sides of a high partition wall, and they cannot possibly come together within the mystic circle because the wife is excluded for the heinous offence of being a woman. Oh, yes, your fraternity may make more love in the man-made brotherhood, but it is at the expense of the brotherly love of the home. The husband is liable to find this out when he comes home from the lodge in the early hours of the morning, evidently the worse for the night's carousal.

The fraternity interferes with the church. It claims the preference when its appointments conflict with those of the church; it attracts to itself an interest which should go out to the church; it affords church enough for those who have not very much religion anyway, and rather encourages than otherwise the exaltation of itself above every other institution. It is an observation often made that the more interest one takes in his order, the less he takes in his church, and the converse holds good also.

The fraternity interferes with the broad brotherhood of man in civil society. That is just what it is for, and if it did not accomplish this end there would cease to be any motive for its perpetuation. Pause for a moment and reflect. Why have you been asked to join the secret fraternity? Was it not that you might have some advantage thereby over others not in the fraternity? Certainly. But what right have you to this advantage? Do you claim it on the ground of superior merit? or on the ground of any other just consideration? Do you not claim it simply on the plea that you want it and that your order is in position to secure it for you? Certainly. The fraternity richly merits the name of a conspiracy, for it is simply a banding together of a part of society that by concerted action they may gain an advantage over those outside the mystic circle of their order.

I plead for the recognition of the great brotherhood of mankind. In our relations with men in general we may recognize the claims of merit, the claims of need, every natural and just claim; but those which are artificial, never. We have no right under God to give a great advantage to a man who has no other claim upon us than that he can shake hands the way we do, or can pronounce the same pass-word that we happen to know, or gives a sign of distress which we are able to understand. The fraternity teaches us to ignore the just claim of a brother man upon us, and to put in its place the claim of one who has no other right to our preference than that he happened to get into our order, not having been black-balled.

Thus it appears that the fraternity, instead of being an innocent addition to the fraternities of God, is injurious to the operation of brotherly love in every brotherhood which God has given to us.

3. As might be expected, this institution, so wrong in principle, is wrong also in many incidental features. These can only be mentioned. Secrecy is one of these; a feature which awakens suspicion whether there be any other ground for it or not. It cannot be denied that it affords opportunity for dishonorable conduct whenever the temptation arises, and men choose to yield to it. So the Cronin murder was committed. Its extrajudicial oaths are another objectionable feature, not only because unwarrantably administered, but because in themselves harsh, cruel and unreasonable. The unequal yoking together of believers and unbelievers is another evil. Many a good man has learned the lesson of intemperance, of Sabbath desecration, of profanity, of impurity, if not in the lodge room, at least from those associated with him there in close fraternal relations. Most objectionable of all is its Christless religion. This holds against some orders more than against others. Almost without exception the order has its religion which prepares the faithful brother for the Grand Lodge above. This is a natural religion, whose whole tendency is to lead men away from Christ.

It is the part of wisdom, it is the dictate of piety, to have nothing to do with the fraternities which man has multiplied unto himself, and honor in the highest possible degree those which God has given. This is not the argument which is usually presented against secret orders, but I submit whether it is not worthy of most serious consideration. The more closely we can conform to God's plan in all our relations in life, the better for us in this life and in the life to come.

THE ANTI-MASONIC VICAR.

[We reprint this imaginative narrative from the "Household Masonic Library," issued from the Masonic publishing house of Macoy & Sickels, New York City, in 1860. It was written, it would seem, to cast a suspicion of imbecility upon Anti-masonry, by putting into the mouth of the "Anti-masonic Vicar" the weakest possible arguments against the evils of the fraternity. Had the late ex-Pres. Jonathan Blanchard, Rev. David Bernard, Rev. Charles G. Finney, Rev. James P. Stoddard, or Edmond Ronayne, stood in the shoes of the supposititious vicar during this alleged examination, does any one believe that Freemasons would have cared to print their arguments in opposition to the lodge?—EDITOR.]

"I have sent for you, although I know my summons must be inconvenient, because I choose you to be present at an interview which has been forced on me by a deputation from the Freemasons—they aim at persuading me to allow them to assemble in my church. A likely matter, indeed! a very likely matter!"

So spake, with flushed cheek and quivering lip, my well-intentioned, but nervous incumbent, one memorable Saturday in the month of August.

"Very well, sir," was my reply; "you may depend on my heeding and recollecting the sentiments of each party."

"Would to heaven"—this was an aside—"that these Mason people had chosen some other day than Saturday for their conference! Neither sermon written! The Lending Library accounts all in confusion; Mrs. Watkinson's sick baby to baptize; and two funerals in the afternoon, to a certainty!"

[Comment: Vicars are not supposed, in ordinary life, to use impatient or blasphemous language.—EDITOR.]

"They must be cut short—yes! very, very short!" ejaculated the vicar, decisively and emphatically.

"What! the sermons?" cried I, reverting at once to the topic uppermost in my own mind. "Oh, very well: your views, sir, are mine. They shall be shortened to a certainty."

"You are dreaming," remarked my superior, pettishly. "I allude to the speeches, the oratorical displays, the verbiage of these mystics."

"Ah! precisely so," was my dutiful reply. "You, sir, and no other, hold the check-string: the length of the interview must depend on your pleasure. Masons!"—this was another aside—"I wish they were all walled up in the Pyramids. Six: and no tidings. It will be midnight before I shall have completed my preparations for tomorrow."

"I am not narrow-minded," resumed Mr. Gresham, fidgeting fretfully in his chair; "far from it; my views are liberal and enlarged; I never by any chance indulge in a harsh surmise touching any one of my fellow-creatures. But these Mason people alarm me. They have a secret: there is some extraordinary bond, stringent and well understood, by which they support each other. I look upon them as little better than conspirators." Then, after a brief pause, "In fact, they ARE conspirators!"

"You really think so?" said I, for the first time feeling an interest in the subject.

"I do—seriously and solemnly," said the vicar, with an air of the most earnest and portentous gravity.

"Rat-tat-tat! Rap, rap!"

"The Deputation, sir," said the butler, bowing five middle-aged gentlemen into the study.

For a set of "conspirators" they were the odd-est-looking people imaginable. There they stood, a knot of portly, frank-featured, cheerful men, upon whom the cares of life apparently sat lightly, who greeted their pastor with a smile, and seemed in high good humor with themselves and all around them. Nor, while I curiously scanned their look and bearing, could I, for the life of me, imagine a reason why men so happily circumstanced should take it into their head to turn plotters. The foremost of the group I knew to be a man of wealth. He had "a stake," and no small one, in the permanent prosperity of his country. His next neighbor was a wine-merchant, with a large and well-established connection, and blessed with a rising and most promising family—what had he to "conspire" about? The party a little in the background was a Dissenter of irreproachable character, and tenets strict even to sternness. Moreover, on no subject did he dilate, publicly as well as privately, with greater earnestness and unction than on the incalculable evils arising from war, and the duty of every Christian state, at any sacrifice, to avoid it. What! he "a conspirator!" Fronting the vicar was the banker of our little community. And to him I fancied nothing would be less agreeable than "a run" upon his small but flourishing firm in Quay street. And yet "runs" severe—repeated—exhausting "runs," would inevitably result from any widely-spread and successful conspiracy. The banker's supporter was a little mirthful-eyed man—a bachelor—who held a light and eligible appointment under government, and looked as if he had never known a care in all his life. He perplexed me more than all the rest. He, of all created beings, a conspirator! Marvelous!

The spokesman of the party began his story. He said, in substance, that a new lodge being about to be opened within a mile and a half of Fairstream, it was the wish of the brethren (the more firmly to engraft on the noble tree this new Masonic scion) to go in procession to church, and there listen to a sermon from a clerical brother. In this arrangement he, in the name of the lodge, represented by the parties then in his presence, most respectfully requested the vicar's concurrence.

That reverend personage, with a most distant and forbidding air, replied, that he could sanction no such proceedings.

Perplexed by this response, which was equally unpalatable and unexpected, the deputation, with deference, demanded my incumbent's reasons for refusal.

"They are many and various," replied he; "but resolve themselves mainly into these FOUR. First: There is nothing church about you!"

[The trouble is not so much the absence of "church"—the representative of any religion—as of Christianity. The modern church is not of necessity a Christian institution. Mackey, a high Masonic authority, says in his Encyclopædia (page 641): "Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor a substitute for it."—EDITOR.]

The deputation stared.

"I repeat, that of Freemasons as a body, the church knows nothing. You admit into your fellowship men of all creeds. Your principles and intentions may be pure and praiseworthy; and such I trust they are. But the church is not privy to them. The church is in ignorance respecting them. The church does not recognize them. And, therefore, as a ministering servant of the church, I must decline affording you any countenance or support."

The banker here submitted to the vicar, that in works of charity—in supporting an infirmary, a dispensary, a clothing club, a stranger's friend society—identity of creed was not essential. Men of different shades of religious belief could harmoniously and advantageously combine in carrying out a benevolent project. And one of the leading principles of Freemasonry was active and untiring and widely-spread benevolence. Could success crown any charitable project, any scheme of philanthropy, any plan for succoring the suffering and the necessitous, (the operation of which was to be extended, and not partial,) if no assistance was accepted save from those who held one and the same religious creed? "Charity," he contended, "knew no creed. No shackles, forged by human opinions, could or ought to trammel her. He was no friend to his species who would seek to impose them."

The vicar shook his head repeatedly, in token of vehement dissent from these observations, and proceeded:

"Next, I object to you because you are friendly to processions; and, I am given to understand, purpose advancing to church in long and elaborate array. All processions, all emblems, all symbols, I abominate. Such accessories are, in the sanctuary, absolutely indecent; I will not call them unholy; I term them downright profane. What has a thinking being—particularly when proceeding, for the purpose of worship, to the temple of his Creator—what has he to do with processions? They are, one and all, abominations."

The little placeman here briskly stepped forward and said, that "in that Book, with which he was sure the vicar was better acquainted than any one of them, processions were repeatedly mentioned, and never condemned. They occur in all parts of the sacred volume, and in a very early portion of it. A procession of no ordinary description followed Jacob's remains when, with filial love, Joseph brought them out of Egypt into Canaan. A procession, long and elaborately arranged, attended the removal of the ark from its temporary sojourn in the house of Obed-Edom. A procession, glorious and imposing, preceded the dedication of Solomon's temple. A procession—"

"Pray," said the vicar sharply, "do you mean to contend that any one of these processions was at all the counterpart of a Masonic procession?"

"I do not; I disclaim all such irreverent intention," returned the other gravely; "my object was simply to show that, by the VERY HIGHEST authority which man can produce, processions are not forbidden. Usage sanctions their adoption among ourselves. They form a part of our most august ceremonies. When the peers present an address to the sovereign on his escape from the hands of an assassin, on the birth of an heir to the throne, on the marriage of one of the royal family, they repair to the royal presence in procession. At the coronation of the sovereign one of the most important features in the pageant is a gorgeous and lengthened procession. That procession, let me remind you, sir, wends its way to the house of God, and for the purposes of worship. It enters the abbey. There divine service is performed; in the course of which the sovereign receives the crown and takes an oath to the people. These points are pressed on you as pertinent to the subject. Surely, after considering them, you will hold us blameless, if, as Masons, we wish to 'Go up to the house of God in company'—in other words, 'in procession?'"

[No, you go simply to make a display—that's all.—EDITOR.]

"Plausible, but hollow!" was the vicar's comment; then, after a pause, "you have failed to convince me. I object to you, strongly, on the score of your processions, and I object to you still more decidedly on the score of your—secret. You are a secret society; are held together by a stringent oath; now I hold that, wherever there is mystery there is iniquity!"

[Freemasonry is only ostensibly a secret society. About fifty of its most precious "degrees"—rites, passwords, etc.—have been published, together with its animus, its horrible obligations, its pseudo benevolence, claptrap professions,—everything—all made public. It really hasn't a secret worth knowing that cannot be bought for less than five dollars at this office.—EDITOR.]

"A harsh conclusion, indeed!" exclaimed Mr. Walford, the wine-merchant, who now took part in the discussion; "you cannot be serious in maintaining it?"

[But it can be maintained by the most indisputable evidence. The evils of secrecy, especially of Freemasonry, are numerous, and have been fully exposed a thousand times.—EDITOR.]

"When you assert secrecy to be criminal, you have forgotten its universal agency. It has escaped you how largely it pervades both public and private life. In every department its operation is traceable. The naval commander sails from his country's shores under sealed orders. He has private papers which contain his instructions. These he is to open in a certain latitude and longitude. Meanwhile their import is 'secret' to him, and to those who serve under him. But he accepts his trust unhesitatingly. The 'secrecy' in which his orders are veiled does not indispose him towards their fulfillment, make him suspicious of their origin, doubtful of their necessity, or render their faithful performance one whit less obligatory upon his part. His duty is to obey. Take another instance: The cabinet council which deliberates on the interests of this great country, and advises the sovereign in matters of policy, is sworn to secrecy. No member of it is allowed, without distinct permission from the reigning prince, to divulge one syllable of what passes at its sittings. It is a SECRET conclave. But no one questions, on that account, the legality or propriety of its decisions. In private life secrecy obtains. In a commercial partnership there are secrets—the secrets of the firm. To them each co-partner is privy; but is solemnly bound not to disclose them. In a family there are secrets. In most households there are facts which the heads of that household do not divulge to their servants, children, and dependents. Prudence enjoins secrecy. So that, in public and in private life, in affairs of state and in affairs of commerce, secrecy, more or less, prevails; why, then, should it be objected to the Freemason, that in his order there is a secret which is essential to the existence of the fraternity, and which he is bound to hold sacred?"

[Because he has pledged himself to be assassinated if he reveals the secrets of the order, and has foresworn himself to murder the Mason who shall reveal them.—EDITOR.]

"Ha! ha! ha! An adroit evasion of a very awkward accusation!" cried the vicar, with an enjoyable chuckle. "Who is the General of your order? There must be Jesuits amongst ye! No argument from Stoneyhurst could be more jesuitically pointed!" And again the vicar laughed heartily.

The deputation did not join him. They looked on in silence. Perhaps they thought the refusal of the church a sufficient annoyance, without the addition of the vicar's bantering. His pleasantry was not infectious. Perchance they held with the delinquent Negro, in one of our West India colonies, who was first severely reprimanded, and then soundly thrashed, by his owner: "Massa, massa; no preachee too and floggee too!"

At length one of them, with great gravity, inquired, "Whether Mr. Gresham had any further objection to urge?"

"Oh, dear, yes! I am hostile to you, because you COMBINE."

The banker now fired his broadside.

"We do. We are as a city at unity in itself. We form a band of united brethren, bound by one solemn obligation, stringent upon all, from the highest to the lowest; and the object of our combination? boundless charity and untiring benevolence. We must be charitable and kindly affectioned to all; but more especially to our brethren. With them we are ever to sympathize readily, and their necessities to succor cheerfully. Respect are we to have none, either as to color, creed, or country. And yet it is our charity to be neither indiscriminate, wasteful, nor heedless. We are to prefer the worthy brother, and to reject the worthless. And our warrant for so doing is His command who has said, 'Thou shalt open thine hand wide to thy brother, and to thy poor, and to thy needy in thy land.'"

[The Anti-masonic brother is (Masonically speaking) no "brother" of the Masons. He has not paid tribute to the fraternity, and they don't know him by that name.—EDITOR.]

"The latter remark none can gainsay," said the vicar, coldly; "and thus, I believe, our interview terminates."

The deputation retired, desperately chagrined.

The church was closed against them. The new lodge was opened; but there was no public procession, and no sermon. To me, lightly and carelessly as I then thought of the fraternity, there seemed much that was inexplicable in the rebuff which it sustained. Here was Mr. Gresham, a conscientious and well-intentioned man, who lamented, Sunday after Sunday, the prevalence of sorrow, care, and suffering around him; who spoke, with tears in his eyes, of the apathy of the rich and the endurance of the poor; who deplored the selfishness of the age; who averred, bitterly and repeatedly, that "all sought their own"—here was he, withstanding to his utmost a brotherhood who declared—and none contradicted them—that their leading object was to relieve distress and sorrow. Of him they seek an audience. When gained, they use it to request the use of his pulpit, with the view of making their principles better known; of effacing some erroneous impressions afloat respecting them; in other words, of strengthening their cause.

That cause they maintain to be identical with disinterested benevolence and brotherly love.

["Disinterested," when it is purchased with lodge dues and barbarous ordeals! Humbug—drivel!—EDITOR.]

Mr. Gresham declares "off," refuses them his church, and will have nothing to do with them! "They may solve the riddle who can," said I, as, thoroughly baffled, I sought my pillow. "Each and all are incomprehensible. I don't know which party is the most confounding—the Masons, with their well-guarded secret, or Mr. Gresham, with his insurmountable prejudices!"

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Autumn thoughts.—A suggestion for women's organizations.—What one woman is doing.—Odd-fellowship in New Hampshire.—"Boys' Brigades" again.

Even the weather seems to have joined in the Columbus celebration, for surely the oldest inhabitant never saw a fall in which all the features which make this season the fairest in the New England calendar were more happily combined. The rapid changes in the foliage have been almost dream-like. Before the slightest frost had touched the rock-maples, they put on their beautiful garments; and then, almost before we had time to drink our fill of the marvelous effect, and while we were trying to imagine how it would seem to live in Mars, where astronomers tell us all the vegetation is red, they had softly, silently fallen in a night, and were covering the sidewalks with a glowing carpet of kaleidoscopic tints, till one of sensitive soul felt in walking through them as if treading on living jewels.

But does not Ruskin, who has said so many sweet as well as so many bitter things of woman-kind, tell us that this is just what multitudes of sweet, cultured women, who would not meaningfully tread on a worm, are doing every day? thoughtlessly, to be sure, but as really as if they were conscious of the fact—only it is not insensate jewels they are treading on but living souls with the life crushed out of them in the effort to keep body and soul together on the miserable pittance they can earn by doing "slop-work." Every time we see advertisements of a "big bargain sale," if we had sight as keen as the angels, they would seem to us to be written in letters of blood. But the inexorable laws of supply and demand, and the feminine appetite for "bargains," seem to stand like so many grim giants on the side of their oppressors; though the example of a friend of the writer, who occupies no high position, but is only a poor school-teacher, who has most of her life had others dependent upon her, shows what might be done if all Christian women would pledge themselves to go and do likewise. Instead of purchasing dainty, ready-made underwear, she buys the cloth, cuts it out with her own hands, and then hires a seamstress to make it up, to whom it is needless to say she pays fair wages. This might necessitate plainer dressing on the part of women with limited means, and in some cases, perhaps, even a slight curtailment of their offerings to benevolent objects; but let us remember that all charity worth the name begins at home. I firmly believe that if Christian women would form organizations all over our land based on this idea, as our foremothers pledged themselves not to use any of Great Britain's taxed tea, and many noble daughters of a later generation refused to eat or wear the products of the slave's unrequited toil, there might be such a boycott instituted on this white slave-labor as would drive it out of existence. There is another voice to the autumn leaves beside the one usually given them by the poet and the moralist; a stern, fateful voice which "They who tread a golden way,

With hearts of others paving it," may well pause to heed. This is the day of women organizations, and I respectfully submit the above-mentioned idea to our W. C. T. U., King's Daughters, and all those social and benevolent unions whose name is legion. For, to present a brighter side of the picture, when were there so many consecrated workers who are giving their lives to uplift fallen humanity as now?

Foremost in the list I should put the name of Miss Helen Richardson, of the Bombay Rescue Work. As I went forward to greet her, the slight figure, the still youthful face, and soft, refined voice which seems to be the natural birth-right of the cultured English woman, hardly prepared me for a story of such heroic and arduous labor in behalf of our fallen sisters of India, as might appall ordinary flesh and blood, had not the love of Christ filled every nerve and sinew of that delicate frame with electric, resistless energy. The daughter of a clergyman of the Established Church, born to fill the sphere of an English gentlewoman, she voluntarily turned her back upon the society she was so well-fitted to adorn, and became a hospital nurse, in order to more effectually minister among the poor of London, using her allowance to relieve their necessities so lavishly as sometimes to leave herself without needed comforts. Thus she labored on until Rev. W. J. Gladwin, whose name is so familiar to Cynosure readers, heartsick with the constant sight of vice in its grossest form—one whole street in Bombay being entirely given over to houses of ill-fame—after a season of fasting and prayer, wrote on his knees a letter to a lady in England, appealing for women-helpers who would come in the name of Christ, and aid in stemming the awful tide of corruption. Miss Richardson's work in Bombay has been the answer to that prayer. It has taken in all nationalities, not only native girls and Eurasians, but Mohammedan women, Armenians, Japanese, Austrian Jewesses, and others in whom, to the shame of the British government, which allows such a state of things, a regular slave-traffic is carried on. The heavy expense of maintaining a home for such unfortunates, where they can be cared for and receive industrial training, Miss Richardson has hitherto borne almost entirely herself; but the work for a hundred million people has outgrown her means, and her visit to this country is for the purpose of collecting needed funds to place it upon a permanent and satisfactory basis. Hers is a kindred spirit with Josephine Butler, the noble pioneer of the social purity crusade in England, who had to encounter such a storm of persecution and obloquy at its beginning. Few know out of what a cloud of sorrow this refined and lovely woman stooped to redeem the fallen of her sex. She, with her husband, Canon Butler, who has stood so nobly by the side of his brave wife through all the conflict, had just returned home from a few days' absence, when their only child, a girl of twelve, rushed to the head of the stairs to greet her parents, but in her joyful eagerness missed her footing and fell at their feet a lifeless corpse. Surely, as Mrs. Stowe has so beautifully written: "Sorrow is divine; sorrow is godlike; sorrow is reigning on the throne of the universe, and the crown of all crowns has been one of thorns."

I asked Miss Richardson in regard to Freemasonry. Before she left England her attention had not been attracted to the subject; but in India she has found it the same corrupter of justice, the same bulwark to protect licentiousness, that we find it in our own courts of law here in America. I bespeak for this dear sister the prayers of all God's people, for success in her Christ-like work, and as much practical aid as they feel prompted to give. It will be all directly used for the cause, as she works under no board. Rev. A. J. Gordon, 182 West Brooklyn street, Boston, Mass., will receive any contributions for this purpose, or they can be sent to her direct at 250 West 44th street, New York.

The Odd-fellows in New Hampshire, and probably other States, are much exercised over a law passed by the Sovereign Grand Lodge in 1891, and reaffirmed at their last meeting in Portland, Oregon, to the effect that $2 should be the minimum weekly benefit in all cases. "So much," says the Manchester Union, "for Sovereign Grand Lodge legislation." But thoughtful people will be apt to say, "So much for men who will be so foolish as to bind themselves to obey every law made by unknown superiors, whether reasonable or not." The sensible thing to do would be either to come out or stop grumbling. Many of the New Hampshire I. O. O. F. seem to have accepted the former alternative, for I notice that the same paper records it as "an unpleasant fact" that forty-seven or forty-eight certificates of Past Chief Patriarchs, entitled to receive the encampment degrees, were returned to the Grand Scribe, while only fifteen were present to receive them. This certainly looks as if Bro. Kimball's long and faithful work in the Granite State was beginning to bear fruit.

A Cynosure friend and subscriber, who is a native of "fair Scotia," writes, heartily endorsing the censure which has been passed on the movement for "Boys' Brigades;" but asks, "Do the boys of the Boys' Brigades in Glasgow dress in uniforms, bear arms, parade and drill on the Sabbath-day?" and adds, "It is hard for me to believe that my beloved country has come to this." It is true that the movement started in Glasgow, and Prof. Drummond, the author of the "Greatest Thing in the World," was among its chief originators; but I doubt very much whether the Glasgow boys are attired in regular British uniform, drill on the Sabbath, and carry real muskets. I am rather inclined to believe that those who, like the Willimantic clergyman, have taken up this scheme so enthusiastically may have introduced some innovations not contemplated by the original founders. Will some reader of the Cynosure, who is informed on this subject, give us light? Mrs. H. J. Bailey, of Maine, Superintendent of Peace and Arbitration in the World's and National W. C. T. U., has taken up the matter, and I hope their many objectionable features will get so thoroughly ventilated that Boys' Brigades will soon become a thing of the past.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2, 1892.

Another instance of the inability of the authorities of the District of Columbia to cope with the liquor power, under the present laws of the national capital, was brought to light this week by a decision of the Supreme Court of the District, that the Commissioners have no authority to close unlicensed saloons, under the police regulations recently promulgated, and which were made the excuse for discontinuing the prosecution begun under the old law by the recently-dismissed prosecuting attorney. The good people of the city will renew their efforts to have Congress pass the bill regulating the liquor traffic here, which was passed by the Senate and defeated by parliamentary tactics, not votes, in the House, at the last session; and as there will be no election pending during the coming session they are hopeful of succeeding. The temperance advocates who worked for the passage of this bill at the last session and who will do the same at the coming session regard it merely as an improvement upon the present laws, or rather absence of binding laws, and accept it upon the theory that "half a loaf is better than no bread;" they believe, and hope and pray that eventually a majority of Congress will believe with them, that the deadly liquor traffic should be absolutely prohibited, not only at the capital of the nation, but everywhere else. Prohibition is the end sought; but so long as the traffic is recognized by taxation it should be controlled by stringent regulations; then the authorities will have no excuse for favoring rum-sellers.

Did you ever pick up a newspaper at your breakfast table and receive a shock by reading of the death of some one you knew and loved, in a distant city? I had a shock of that sort yesterday morning, when I read in the telegraph columns of a Washington paper of the death, at his home in Petersburg, Virginia, of Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, who had for more than half a century been pastor of one church, every member of the congregation of which loved him as a father and revered him as a spiritual guide. He built up his congregation from a mere handful, in the most squalid section of his city, to one of the largest, and went through personal privations that would have disheartened any man not upheld by a higher power, to do it. His marked ability brought him during his long career many offers of large salaries, and at one time he might have been made a bishop, but he preferred to stay where he began his work, although there were days, early in his pastorate, many of them, when himself and his little family had no meat upon their table. Long before the establishment of missions to work among the criminals in prisons, and among fallen women, he and his good wife were constant visitors to those classes, although their actions were condemned by many good but misguided people. This tribute is not based upon hearsay, but upon actual knowledge, gained as a scholar in the Sunday-school of his church. I never read or heard the words "Blessed are the pure in heart" that the benevolent countenance and kindly eyes of Churchill J. Gibson did not arise before me; he was my ideal of what a minister ought to be; and, although this matter may seem out of place in a Washington letter, I should ever feel that a duty had been neglected if it had not been written. The last time I saw Mr. Gibson was more than eleven years ago, when he read the beautiful burial service of his church over the remains of a child—my own.

President Harrison is bearing his affliction with Christian patience. He has taken up his official work, and the usual routine duties of the head of the White House family. His son and daughter and his daughter-in-law are with him and will remain for an indefinite period; Judge Scott, of Port Townsend, Washington, who did not arrive in time to attend the funeral of Mrs. Harrison (his sister), is also with him, and will for a short time remain a guest of the White House. Mr. Harrison speaks very feelingly and appreciatively of the universal sympathy which has been extended to him.

Miss Clara Barton, president of the "Red Cross" society, with her usual promptness in meeting an emergency, telegraphed the Mayor of Milwaukee to draw on the society for $1,000 to be used for the relief of the sufferers by the recent great fire in that city.

"Reformation Sunday" was observed in the Lutheran churches here last Sunday, by interesting references to the life of Martin Luther.

A "temperance consecration service" was held this afternoon by the W. C. T. U. in their new headquarters building. The attendance was large and enthusiastic.

REFORM NEWS.

NEW YORK STATE ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION.

WALTON, Oct. 27, 1892.

The convention was called to order at two o'clock, in the Covenant church, and was opened with devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. W. B. Stoddard.

Mr. Smith St. John was chosen to preside during the several sessions of the convention.

Letters from Rev. J. P. Stoddard, W. H. Clark, J. C. K. Milligan, Nathan Callender and T. A. Berkman were read. These letters expressed heartfelt regret on account of enforced absence, and most earnest wishes for the success of the convention.

The address of welcome was delivered by the pastor of the church in which the convention was held. He said he welcomed the convention not formally, but sincerely, even as Cornelius welcomed Peter at his coming to Cæsarea. His words were: "Thou hast well done that thou art come." He welcomed opponents of secretism as fellow-counselors, as reinforcements, and as friends in Christ.

The following committees were appointed by the chair:

On Resolutions.—J. W. Tamlin, W. B. Stoddard, William Tweedie.

On Nominations.—George Kilpatrick, S. G. Shaw, Ornan Stimpson.

On Finance.—Lucius Woodruff, George Braze, R. D. McDonald.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard addressed the convention on the theme: "Ought Seceding Lodgemen Publicly to Expose the Lodges from Which they have Seceded?" Reasons why were given: They would confirm exposures already made; they would arouse Christians; they would often bring the peace of God to troubled hearts. Objections were discussed, such as the obligation of the oath, which was shown to be extra-judicial and not binding. Another objection was considered, viz.: That a private exposure would be more effective than a public testimony. This was shown to be invalid; also, the theory that a general condemnation of the lodge would be wiser and better than a specific combination. The address called out a spirited and interesting discussion, in which eight of the brethren took part.

The session closed with prayer by Rev. S. R. Wallace.

EVENING SESSION.

This session was opened with a prayer and praise service, led by Rev. J. W. Tamlin, of Windsor, N. Y.

Rev. S. R. Wallace, of Syracuse, N. Y., presided. After introductory remarks, he introduced the speaker of the evening, Rev. W. B. Stoddard, who explained from the chart the initiatory rite of the Entered Apprentice degree in Masonry.

The session closed with prayer by Rev. J. W. Bohlman.

MORNING SESSION.

The first service of the day, October 28, was one of prayer and conference, conducted by Rev. Milton Kilpatrick, of Meriden, Neb.

An address followed, by Rev. S. R. Wallace. He discussed the subject of "The Secret Orders in Relation to the Strife between Capital and Labor." He proved that secret orders are wrong, hurtful and dangerous to the laboring man. They are subversive of civil authority, and tend to anarchy. They trample under foot God's revealed will. They demoralize business; and in the end the laboring man himself suffers. They have a false and ruinous financial basis. He said that while a few years ago there were 750,000 men in the labor union, he doubted if today there were more than 200,000. The true solution of the problem would be reached through the regenerating power of Christianity. The laborer should also be given a share in the earnings of the business. A process of industrial education should be inaugurated, because foreign labor unions do not allow American youth to master the trades in which they are skilled. The laboring man has a right to work where he will; the employer has an equal right to hire whom he will. It is possible that labor organizations may yet dictate to our State authorities.

The session closed with prayer by Rev. J. K. Reed, of Bovina Center, N. Y.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The session was opened with devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. J. K. Reed.

The following officers were elected for the State:

President, Rev. S. R. Wallace, of Syracuse. Secretary, Rev. W. H. Clark, of Binghamton. Treasurer, Lucius Woodruff, of Binghamton. State Committee, Rev. S. G. Shaw, of Walton; William Tweedie, of Walton; Lucius Woodruff, of Binghamton.

The treasurer not being present, his report was read by Mr. Stoddard. It was accepted and adopted, and is as follows:

L. WOODRUFF, Treasurer.

The Committee on Resolutions reported as follows:

WHEREAS, There is but one true religion, one King and Mediator; and

WHEREAS, This is denied by the Masonic and other lodges when they place all so-called religions on a common level, only requiring those who unite with them to believe in a so-called Supreme Being; therefore,

Resolved, That we call upon Christians and Christian churches everywhere, to disfellowship as Christians those who thus persistently array themselves against Christ.

WHEREAS, Both the lodge and saloon disfavor public inspection, and alike have a tendency to lead men away from Christ, purity and uprightness; therefore,

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to support such measures as we believe will enlighten the people, and thus tend to the suppression of these evils.

Resolved, That we view with alarm the present conflict between the employer and the employed; and believing that this state of affairs is largely brought about by the underhanded methods used by oath-bound secret organizations, we call upon those in authority to enact such laws as shall prohibit the same, and thus encourage an open, fair adjustment of any wrongs found to exist.

WHEREAS, The unselfish teachings of the Gospel, if generally practiced, would lift up the fallen and care for the needy; and

WHEREAS, the selfishness taught by the lodge has a tendency to dry up the fountains of sympathy; therefore,

Resolved, That we exhort Christians to be more faithful in caring for the needy, and thus put to shame the so-called benevolent secret societies that bestow favors alone on themselves.

WHEREAS, It is a well-established fact that the Masonic obligation has often interfered with the administration of justice in our civil courts; therefore,

Resolved, That we urge a thorough investigation of this and kindred obligations administered in secret lodges, believing that a better knowledge, on the part of the masses, will lead to their abolition.

The report was accepted and adopted by the convention.

An address on "Secretism in the Light of the Gospel," by Rev. S. G. Shaw, followed. The speaker's effort was to show the antagonism between the secret empire and the Gospel, in the following regards: Development; The Brotherhood of Men; Self-sacrifice; Personal Responsibility; A Living Ideal; Faith an Essential to Perfection and Man's Highest Good.

The second address was by Rev. J. W. Tamlin. This address was unique, being in the form of a dialogue between the speaker and an imaginary son, who has leanings toward the lodge. The brother showed his auditors some of the evils of secrecy as they affect the Methodist preacher.

The closing prayer was offered by Mr. Hough Munn.

CLOSING SESSION.

The devotional exercises at the opening were conducted by Rev. J. W. Tamlin.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard addressed the convention on the theme: "The Binding Power of the Lodge System."

He described the following sources of power: Its assumption to be a universal religion. Its appeal to avarice and pride. Its supposed secrecy. The degradation imposed on members. Its festive gatherings. Its power of intimidation, universality of brotherhood, its wealth, obligations, organization. Remedies were suggested, such as enlightenment and agitation.

The minutes were read and approved.

A vote of thanks was given to the congregation and pastor of the church whose doors were opened to the convention.

The convention adjourned with singing, and prayer by Rev. Thomas Park.

W. H. CLARK, Secretary.

SHALL THERE BE A WISCONSIN STATE CONVENTION?

POYNETTE, Wis., Nov. 1, 1892.

We rejoice in the many and successful conventions that are being held in the interest of the National Christian Association reforms, and only wish that one could have been held in our State. It was, perhaps, my duty to have called attention to this matter sooner; but as I have been busy, moving and getting the work under way in my new field, this work has been neglected.

I would be glad, for one, to see a rousing con-

CORRESPONDENCE.

TWO ENCOURAGING LETTERS.

HUMBOLDT, Neb., October 24, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I feel constrained to praise the Lord for this, the first State Convention (at Wahoo, Neb.) to discuss the lodge question, and to lay plans for successful work against the whole system of organized secrecy in Nebraska.

This, I take it, is only the initiatory step to something further. The next may be to organize a State Association, sooner or later, if it has not already been accomplished by the late convention.

I think the N. C. A. has done a wisething, and not a moment too soon, in occupying this large field for Christ and sending into it a general agent so able and acceptable to the people wherever he goes, as is Rev. M. A. Gault. His lectures are full of stern facts and convincing arguments, presented in the spirit of Christian kindness, with no word of denunciation to arouse any existing prejudice and excite open opposition, without compromising the truth in the least degree.

Such was the character of his own lecture before an audience not large, but all present were in sympathy with him and would gladly have heard more. It is safe to say, had other meetings followed, the attendance would have been larger, and wider interest awakened.

Unfortunately the appointment in the country was not filled, as it would interfere with a special evangelistic service set for that day. A desire was expressed that Bro. Gault would come again, and assurances were given of his hearty welcome. Since then, I am told, the M. E. church, six or seven miles from town, where regular services are held on Sabbath, will be opened for us when wanted. These and other circumstances clearly indicate a growing sentiment in this corner of the State against the strongest foe of our churches and society at large. Some of the pastors are beginning to realize how bad the situation has become, and see the necessity of concerted action, or all will be lost. It is a call of Providence that should be heeded.

WILLIAM C. BISSELL.

ELLSWORTH, Ark., Oct. 17, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In ordering some books, I have written in haste. Allow me to say that I am well pleased with the Christian Cynosure and the reform movement which it is advocating. . . I made a trip to Texas in July, and cried aloud as Isaiah (58: 1) commanded, which stirred some of the Masons. I have an urgent call to go to Johnson county, this State, to lecture against secret societies. As soon as I get the books that I have ordered of you, I purpose to go. Yours for the whole truth,

S. F. PROCTOR.

A LITTLE RIPPLE IN NEBRASKA.

WAHOO, Neb., Oct. 25, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The first Nebraska State Convention at Wahoo must have caused a little stir, at least, for the secrecy host is now trying to organize a Good Templar lodge here. The fiery denunciations of the secret oath-bound system, and the penetrating appeals to the Christian conscience, could not have been in vain, and now secrecy must be promoting some good cause in order to neutralize, to some extent, the offset of the conventism; for Charles Watts, the G. S. of the I. O. G. T. of Nebraska, sent a letter, with an application-blank, to some parties, a few days after the convention, but hit upon one too earnestly opposed to secrecy to serve as a tool. He sent, instead, the following answer:

"Some one must have played a joke on me, or on both of us, in giving you my name as the proper person to push a work of the kind you represent. By act and word, I oppose intemperance all I can, but I oppose secrecy, organized, oath-bound secrecy, in whatever form, or under whatever pretext, it may appear, as an evil equally great. If you come here to organize a Templar lodge, I must oppose you in all the ways I can. If you get any members of our church to join you, we will excommunicate them. And I will, in all candor, tell you that if temperance is the cause you really work for, then at this place you serve that cause best by staying away. About two-thirds of the temperance workers here are anti-secrecy people, on religious grounds. Now we have the W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. J. M. Lee is the popular and able leader. All the temperance people can unite and work together with that organization. It is open—it is unsectarian, and just answers the purpose.

"When I came here, eight years ago, they had a Templar lodge in town. Your plan has been weighed, and was found wanting. It split the temperance forces, and we had eleven saloons. Our prohibition amendment campaign was fought, with the W. C. T. U. as the main leaders, and we did well. From this you see that if you love temperance rather than secret orders, you will show that by staying away.

"Last week we had the first anti-secrecy State Convention in Nebraska, at this place, and the Masonic fraternity wishes to make use of you as a tool to counteract what little impression our convention might have made. If the temperance bait does not cover the hook better than that, I can see it. Respectfully, ————"

The town papers did not know anything about the convention. One of them only enumerated the number of lodges we have in town, nearly twice the number of churches. No wonder that we have had such a tough time in fighting the liquor interest.

Yours for an open Bible and an open statute book,

S. M. H.

A FAITHFUL BIBLE WORKER IN LOWER CALIFORNIA.

HERMOSILLO, Mex., October 22, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I left Hermosillo on the 12th of May, with 1,000 books, all Bible Society publications, and about 100 of the Tract Society's books, which I disposed of. I then took 450 books to Lower California, on the 14th of August, and disposed of them all. People are anxious to get the Bible. I sold 96 Bibles and 31 Testaments in one day in Lower California.

It looks as though the Holy Spirit was opening the people's hearts to search the Word, by the way they are procuring them. Women selling their flatirons to get the Word, others going without water (as in many places they have to buy water), to get it, while others take their last cent, or even go and borrow the price of the Word of God. When I look back to my stay in Chicago, and then compare the opportunities to read and hear the Word and then compare it with the situation of Mexico, I wonder if the Christians begin to comprehend their blessings? It almost seems as if they took it as a matter of their just dues to have all the blessings, while others go without.

I start in six or seven days into the mountains of Sonora, and will take a horseback ride of about forty days in the trip, or perhaps sixty. It takes work to get the Bible into the hands of the Mexican people.

The social life of Mexico is smutty, to say the least. Fathers and mothers sell their own daughters for the vilest purposes. Nearly all of the women smoke, and a large proportion drink more or less. The men all drink; everybody gambles; lying is almost universal; honor is a scarce article; women are of easy virtue—much more so than in United States. Never do now what you can put off till another time, is the rule of Mexico.

With best respects to all the friends, I am your brother in reform,

B. B. BLACHLEY.

LITERATURE.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE SECRET SERVICE: The Recollections of a Spy. By Major Henri Le Caron. One volume, paper covers, pp. 205. Boston: American Citizen Co., 7 Bromfield St. 1892. Price, 50 cents.

Briefly, this is the autobiography of a detective, actually in the employ of the British government, but who came to America, united with the Clan-na-Gael and the Fenians, and figured as a Land League orator, in order to obtain a better and practical knowledge of the doings of these notorious Irish secret societies. Major Le Caron, in this pursuit of convincing testimony against these disreputable organizations, had, of course, the most ample opportunity of gaining information, and his book is a record of his adventures. Of it he says: "For me there is no such thing as romance to be indulged in here. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth is what I have set myself to tell regarding all those matters with which I shall deal. There are many things, of course, to which I may not refer; but with respect to those upon which I feel at liberty to touch, one unalterable characteristic will apply all through, and that will be the absolute truthfulness of the record. . . . When, years ago, as these subsequent pages will show, I was first brought into contact with Fenian affairs, no fell purpose, no material consideration prompted me to work against the revolutionary plotters. A young man, proud of his native land and full of patriotic loyalty to its traditions, I had no desire, no intention to do aught but frustrate the schemes of my country's foes. When, later on, I took my place in the ranks of England's defenders, the same condition of mind prevailed, though the conditions of service varied."

Le Caron has filled, with gossip about himself and his operations in America, many columns of the daily press. Hence, he is no stranger to newspaper readers. He tells an interesting story, with hints of foreign machinations in this country which should serve to make American citizens more strictly the conservators of their cherished institutions.

The November Century begins the twenty-third year of this popular magazine, and in a manner which, while it preserves the general characteristics that have won for it many friends, strikes out freshly into new paths. The especial features of the current number embrace a portrait of the historian, Francis Parkman, and the completion of his series of historical narratives on the French power in North America, with two short articles (an unfinished sketch), by James Russell Lowell and Edward Eggleston, accentuating Mr. Parkman's work in this direction. The department of current discussion contains several papers: Plain Words to Workingmen, by Fred Woodrow; Does the Bible Contain Scientific Errors? by Prof. Chas. W. Shields, of Princeton, and Some Exposition Uses of Sunday, discussed by Bishop Potter, the editor and Rev. Washington Gladden. Massenet, the composer, who is to be one of the musical directors at the Columbian Exposition, contributes some autobiographical sketches of interest to musical people, with portraits of the author. Other papers and writers are as follows: A Russian National Artist (Ilya Repin), with copies of his paintings, by Isabel F. Hapgood; Sweet Bells Out of Tune, illustrated, by Mrs. Burton Harrison; Alice, a painting, by Wm. M. Chase; An Old-fashioned Thanksgiving, illustrated, by Hezekiah Butterworth; What I Saw of the Paris Commune, illustrated and continued, by Archibald Forbes, with What an American Girl Saw of the Commune, illustrated; The Rowdy, illustrated, by Octave Thanet; Road-Coaching Up to Date, by T. S. Tailer, illustrated; Correspondence with portraits, of Two Brothers—Senator and General Sherman; Portrait of Geo. Wm. Curtis; The New Member of the Club, by Brander Matthews; To Gypsy-Land, illustrated, by Elizabeth R. Pennell; Reminiscences of Brook Farm, by Geo. P. Bradford; Poems by Thos. Bailey Aldrich, Rudyard Kipling, Maurice Thompson, James Whitcomb Riley, Mrs. Mary Bradley, G. B. Bartlett and Robert U. Johnson. The editorial alcoves of this number are also replete with various interesting "Topics of the Times," "Open Letters," and "In Lighter Vein," by several writers—the whole comprising a capital repertory. New York: The Century Company, 33 East 17th street.

A magnificent portrait of Rt. Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone introduces the readers of the Cosmopolitan to a pleasant and recent visit to this "grand old man," by Wm. H. Rideing, at Hawarden, finely illustrated. Sir Edwin Arnold has also an illustrated paper—Japan Revisited, and W. D. Howells a characteristic sketch—A Traveler from Altruria. Other illustrated contributions and writers are: The Drummer of Company E., by Robert H. Fletcher; A Cosmopolitan Language, by M. Q. Holyoake; Lukari's Story, by Gertrude Atherton; The City of Hamburg, by Murat Halstead; Art-Schools of Paris, by Lucy H. Hooper; A War Correspondent at the Fall of Constantinople, by Archibald Forbes; Epping Forest, by Edward E. Hale; Aerial Navigation, by John P. Holland; Social Strugglers, by Hjalmar H. Boyesen; Bird Courtship, by John Burroughs. The poems in this number are by Edgar Fawcett, Margaret Crosby, Chas. J. O'Malley, Mary T. Higginson, Charlotte P. Stetson, and J. J. Piatt. Geo. W. Cable has a thoughtful paper on Education for the Common People of the South; Lewis M. Haupt, one on the Growth of Great Cities, and Brander Matthews another—Two Studies of the South. This number begins a new volume.

The November—the Thanksgiving—number, par excellence, of the Cottage Hearth is wholesome reading for the home-circle. The frontispiece is a quaint reproduction of Whittier's poem of The Pumpkin, followed by Elder Leland's Ghost, illustrated, by Hezekiah Butterworth; The Silver-Buckled Slipper, illustrated, by Semanthe O. Merrill; Grandpa Grace's Thanksgiving, illustrated, by Annie Isabel Willis; In the Firelight, by Margaret J. Preston; Alone on a Burning Wreck, illustrated, by David Ker; The Cricket, by Susan H. Swett; A Day With a Great Frenchman, by Edmund Kirke; A Woman's Motive, by D. H. R. Goodale, and Dorothea Lynde Dix, with a portrait, by Sarah K. Bolton. There are, also, the usual well-filled and varied departments of the World's Progress, the Sabbath, Home Dressmaking, Domestic Science, Home Garden, Household Chats, Girls and Their Doings, Boys and Their Doings, The Arm-chair, New Books, etc. Published by W. A. Wilde & Co., 25 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass.

The Herald of Health for November presents the usual careful hygienic information and suggestions that make this a capital monthly visitor in every intelligent family. Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M. D., writes of the relations of domestic unhappiness and health; Dr. J. Minor Fothergill treats of the city and factory men and women and the air they breathe; the editor continues his valuable "Health Notes"; A. H. Frank sums up the cost of food, a pleasant chapter on domestic economy; the departments "of interest to women," by Jennie Chandler, topics of the month, new books, etc., are in the interest of good health and comfort. Published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street, New York.

OBITUARY.

RACHEL M. ULSH, wife of Benjamin Ulsh (formerly of Silver Lake, Ind., but, since 1885, residing near Bowie, Tex.), died October 15, 1892, in the sixty-eighth year of her age.

She was a servant of Jesus for nearly fifty years, and a friend of reform, as Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Dr. S. L. Cook, Edmond Ronayne and many others well-know, as her home was a resting-place for God's servants. She greatly enjoyed attending the lectures and meetings of these brethren, and all religious gatherings.

When nearing her last hour, she often said that she would like to remain with her companion and friends; but if it was the Lord's will, she was ready to go and be with Jesus and all those who had gone before. It was her wish to meet all her children and friends in heaven.

Funeral services were held on Sunday, the minister choosing for his text: "She hath wrought a good work upon me."—Matt. 26: 10.

She leaves a husband, children, two brothers, and many friends, who, although they will sadly miss her, will love to think of her as being forever free from sorrow and pain.

"Farewell, my friends and children dear,
My long life's work is done;
My Father calls me to come home;
My crown of glory's won.

"Grieve not for me, although on earth
You see my face no more;
Remember, I await you all,
On heaven's blissful shore."

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1892.

Freemasonry is pagan in its origin, devilish in its principles, and hellish in its destiny.—REV. O. P. GIFFORD, of Immanuel Baptist Church, Chicago.

THE NATIONAL ELECTION.

As we go to press on Tuesday morning the polls are open, and the excitement of a great election pervades the entire country.

Rev. J. B. Cranfill, M. D., Prohibition candidate for Vice President of the United States, has an article in a recent Advance, replying to the question, "How Shall a Christian Vote?" It is a plea for the support of the Prohibition party in the approaching election, and is probably as strong an argument in that direction as can be offered. In the course of his paper he presents some important facts and figures, which it will be well for all men of all parties, who have the welfare of our country and our race at heart, to ponder. They can never be too strongly or too often brought before us for consideration. Starting out with the proposition that "we ought to do with a political party that licenses the saloon just exactly what we ought to do with the saloon itself," he says: "We have in the United States at the present time 240,000 licensed dram shops. These dram shops have long ago ceased to be what their predecessors were in the early days of the country, merely places where whisky is bought and sold, but they have become the rendezvous of tramps, thieves, paupers, thugs and criminals of all kinds and sexes. Not only are they the rallying places of the great forces of evil in the country, but they are the recruiting stations of the penitentiaries, the jails and the gallows."

... The saloon controls nearly every city of five thousand population in the United States. It elects the mayor and board of aldermen; it appoints the school trustees and superintendent; it runs the city courts; it bribes juries; it suborns evidence; it even reaches up and brings under its evil power the judge on the bench; it knows no law but the law of success, and bows to no God but the god of avarice and power."

One would think that no other argument against the saloon, would be necessary to relegate them to utter elimination. But it is a lamentable fact that all the leading political parties are holding firmly to the saloon interest, and depending upon it for the success of their principles and candidates. Even good temperancemen, blinded by partisan zeal, forget to "vote as they pray," and will cast their ballots in favor of a traffic that perpetuates the evils so plainly set forth in the foregoing extract. It is madness, perhaps, but certainly no less reprehensible on that account. The man who crazes himself with ardent spirits, and in that condition murders his best friend, is no more culpable than the one who votes to maintain the system that makes madmen and murderers.

On the eve of a great national election, it may be well to see how the respective political parties and the saloon men themselves stand upon the saloon question:

Democratic Platform, 1892.—"We are opposed to all sumptuary laws, as an interference with the individual rights of the citizens."

People's Party Platform, 1892.—"While our sympathies, as a party of reform, are naturally upon the side of every proposition which will tend to make men intelligent, virtuous and temperate, we, nevertheless, regard these questions—important as they are—as secondary to the great issues now pressing for solution."

Republican Platform, 1892.—"We sympathize with all wise and legitimate efforts to lessen and prevent the evils of intemperance and promote morality."

National Liquor dealers' Association.—"We most earnestly favor temperance, and most strongly condemn intemperance. We are in favor of both public and private morality and good order."

Prohibition Platform, 1892.—"The liquor traffic is a foe to civilization, the arch-enemy of popular government and a public nuisance. It is the citadel of the forces that corrupt politics, promote poverty and crime, degrade the nation's home life, thwart the will of the people and deliver our country into the hands of rapacious class interests. All laws that, under the guise of regulation, legalize and protect this traffic, or make the government share in its ill-gotten gains, are 'vicious in principle and powerless as a remedy.' We declare anew for the entire suppression of the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation and transportation of alcoholic liquors as a beverage by Federal and State legislation. The full powers of the government should be exerted to secure this result. No party that fails to recognize the dominant nature of this issue in American politics deserves the support of the people."

LIQUOR AND SUNDAY CLOSING OF THE FAIR

The National Commission of the Columbian Exposition, at its meeting last week, decided to leave the right to sell ardent spirits on the Exposition grounds, next summer, to the local Directory of the Fair. As this directory has already voted to permit the promiscuous sale of liquors at restaurants on the grounds, the question may be considered settled to that extent, and no one knows, now that the government pressure has been removed, how far the Directory may decide to grant privileges of the same sort to other parties.

Similar interest attaches to outside saloons and the closing of the Exposition on Sundays. The hypocritical plea for an open Fair seven days in the week was pungently answered by Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson at a recent public meeting: "Open the Fair on Sundays that the crowds may be drawn away from the saloons," was urged by the Sunday-opening advocates. "It is a round-about way of getting at it," said Dr. Johnson. "Why not close the saloons?"

In this connection, the Presbyterian Banner suggests that the local Directory of the Fair should inaugurate a movement compelling liquor-sellers to close their establishments on the Lord's day, if they are honest in the fears they express about the evil effects of open saloons, in case the gates of the Fair are closed on the Sabbath.

So far as the opening of the Fair on Sundays is concerned, it will require an act of Congress—the same Congress, too, that enacted the Sunday-closing law—to remove the restriction. That august body may be cajoled into rescinding its former action, but no sane man can discover any reason why it should so signally disgrace itself.

MORE MASONIC VAPORINGS.

The November Voice of Masonry, with the enthusiasm of a ten-year-old boy who puts a chip on his shoulder and asks some other boy to knock it off, "dares" the Cynosure to do several things which it is neither its mission nor inclination to perform. We are not to be caught in that sort of a trap, which has for its object our admission that Freemasonry is a Christian institution. Indeed, we know, from high Masonic authority—authority that the Voice of Masonry will not care to controvert, that "Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor a substitute for it;" and to attempt to refute any less authoritative assertion that the fraternity has affiliation with the Christian religion, would be a waste of time.

If the Voice of Masonry was a Christian publication, it would know that the man who "delights in God's laws and trusts in the Lord," is the only one who, "to the best of his ability, discerns and does the will of God." No other man can do it; and such a man, when enlightened concerning Freemasonry, can only detest it. This is the experience of a multitude of Christians.

"The chief reason," says the Voice of Masonry, "for Roman Catholic opposition to Freemasonry is the OPEN BOOK. Freemasonry upholds the open Holy Bible, and protests against keeping the mass of the people in ignorance, and consequently under priestly domination. Freemasonry upholds civil and religious liberty in all the world and sustains the OPEN BOOK as the best means of enlightening all. Roman Catholicism wants no enlightenment, no religion, and no government that is not wholly of its faith."

Considerable might be said about the "open book" (Bible, Koran, or Zend-Avesta), covered with the square and compass, lying on the Masonic altar, upon which initiates are sworn to submit to assassination, or to commit it on others; but we forbear. We begin now to understand who are Gog and Magog in the coming fight.

—President Harrison has, by proclamation, designated Thursday, November 24, as a day of general Thanksgiving for public and private blessings received during the closing year. Let us be thankful that this cherished Puritanical holiday is still spared to us.

—The N. C. A. have in press, ready for delivery next week, an excellent booklet, entitled "The Folly, Expense and Danger of Secret Societies," by Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. It will be sold, postpaid, for $3.00 per hundred, or 5 cents single copy. Orders for more than 300 have already been received. It should have a wide circulation.

—A note from Bro. S. F. Porter, the College agent, at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, November 1, states that he preached, on the previous Sabbath, in the Baptist church at Quincy, Mich. A visit to Hillsdale (Mich.) College showed that the library of this institution contains a supply of anti-secrecy books. After remaining at Mt. Vernon for a week, Bro. Porter expects to visit Gambier and two or three other places in Ohio. A later letter says that he had visited Kenyon College, at Gambier, where he deposited one of the five-dollar anti-secret libraries. Greek-letter secret societies abound in this college, but the president seemed cordially willing to receive the books.

—In Rev. J. P. Stoddard's article, in last week's Cynosure, page 9, middle column, first paragraph, occurred the following sentence. In reading it the first word should be "No," instead of "The," and then it will stand as Bro. Stoddard intended it. The error did not originate in this office: "The patriot who has any heart in his bosom, any conscience, or courage, or loyalty in his soul, or any love for his fellows, or for Christ who 'died to redeem them that were under the law,' can afford to shut his eyes and stop his ears and deliberately turn his back and walk away into the darkness of secrecy, or to sit silent or grumbling under its blighting shadow in such a dawn as already lights the hilltops of the grand old commonwealth of New England."

vention in this State, and wonder if some of the workers could visit Wisconsin and work up one. The lodge power is mighty in this part of the State. Nearly all the nominees for office on the Republican ticket, I am told, are Masons. Masons have been hoodwinked, and the "cowans" are now hoodwinked.

The whole subject needs ventilating in Columbia county. I come in contract with Masons almost every day. Thus I am getting acquainted, and hope to be able to do something bye-and-bye.

J. B. GALLOWAY.

REV. MESSRS. GAULT AND PADEN IN IOWA.

ON TRAIN, NOV. 4, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am enroute to fill appointments at Albia, Oskaloosa, Cedar, Guernsey, Fairview and other points on the way to the Marengo Convention. We are in the heart of an exciting Presidential election, yet the Lord is wonderfully opening doors for the presentation of our cause.

Last week Bro. Paden and I addressed meetings in the Mt. Zion Christian church seven miles south of Blanchard in the Emporia school-house near Blanchard, and in the U. P. church in town. These meetings were arranged by J. H. Walkinshaw, Joseph Armstrong, and Dr. Dodds, and were well-attended, better than the political meetings, especially by the ladies.

At Blanchard the church was crowded, nearly all the lodge members being out.

Bro. Paden spent Sabbath at College Springs. Here we had arranged to speak on Monday evening on the anti-secret question, but canceled the appointment because Bro. Paden could not remain, and because the political excitement was running so high.

I spoke on Sabbath in the Clarinda Covenant church, and also on Monday evening. Sabbath evening I preached in the U. P. church at Page Center.

We missed two good meetings at Tarkio and Braddyville because of not receiving our mail.

We are deeply impressed with the fact that the country is ripe for the anti-secret agitation. Men are conscious that it is a tremendous issue. The issue with Jesuitism is also coming to the front and demands a share of the anti-secret lecturer's attention, for its secret oaths are its most dangerous feature. M. A. GAULT.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND SECRETARY.

Boston, Nov. 1, 1892.

"A word to the wise is sufficient," but drowsy people sometimes require a little "shaking up." I hope our sleepy New England friends are dreaming about the 14th and 15th of December next, and that they will "wake out of sleep" and look unto Bromfield Street church and make sure of a "sitting" in the "house of the Lord." Seats are free and "everybody welcome," but there will be a collection, as a means of grace to the giver and a "freewill offering to the Lord." We want an "all-around blessing," and it may be profitable for us, just at this juncture, "to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said it is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20: 35.) This convention may be the Waterloo which is to turn the tide of battle and mark an epoch in the church and cause of Christ in New England. We have no "Iron Duke" in command, but one greater than Wellington or Napoleon has given His word: "Lo, I am with you," and "His right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory;" "and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." "Have faith in God:" put on the whole armor, and don't for a moment be so presumptuous as to enter the conflict without "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

I notice that Paul, in his message to the Ephesians (4: 18, 19), speaks of "darkened," "alienated," and "ignorant" people who are "past feeling." He attributes their benighted condition to "ignorance," and I shall be pardoned for saying a word to ignorant "New Englanders." Since Boston is the eye of New England, and the "Athens of America," this may seem to some of our Western brethren paradoxical. I devoutly wish it were not true, but I cannot discredit the testimony of my brethren concerning themselves, without bringing them under the woe of Rev. 21: 27, relative to veracity, which God forbid that I should do. I mention no names, and give only, as specimens, a few among many of like cases.

A well-known and deservedly popular D.D. says: "I have not been in a lodge, except a 'lodge of sorrow,' since the war. I would be glad if there were no lodges. It takes as much time and money to run a lodge as it does a church, and if the church had the time and money used by the lodge to help on in her benevolent work, it would be a thousand-fold better for the poor. I know that they have a picked membership of able-bodied and financially responsible members to begin with, and that only such as pay are retained. I know that many are trusting in lodge religion as 'good enough for them!' But there is something to be said on both sides of the question. They do help in cases of sickness or death among their members sometimes, and I really don't know how to treat the case, or just what I ought to do," etc. Paul was not confused when he had a similar case to decide, and the direction given by the Holy Ghost admits of but one interpretation: "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils." 1 Cor. 10: 21. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," etc. 2 Cor. 6: 14-18.

This, brethren, is the "strait and narrow way," which, if prayerfully and humbly followed, will surely lead out of all the complexities and perplexities by which you are seriously embarrassed; and "happy is the man who shall find it."

Another says: "I don't belong to any secret society, and I wish that there were none; but I don't know enough about them to discuss them intelligently," etc. "Why," thought I, as I read the statement, "herein is a marvelous thing"—a sweeping condemnation based on a negative. "I don't know enough about them to discuss them intelligently. Why, these 'orders' assert their benevolence and philanthropy, and even claim to be the hand-maid of Christianity; and is there not danger of ignorantly doing injustice to the 'ancient and honorable fraternities'?"

Suppose we put the case in this form: Here is an infidel. When approached on his personal relations to Christ, he says: "I don't belong to the church, and I don't know enough about your religion to discuss it intelligently. But I wish the church and the Christian religion were blotted out of existence." Would Christ, or Peter, or Paul, or any spiritually enlightened disciple, reply to such carping cant: "Thou has well spoken"? Would he not rather say: The church and the Christian religion are fact and forces among us. "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man." You ought to know. "Light has come into the world." "Old things are passed away." "The times of this ignorance God winked at, but now he commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Your ignorance is your sin, and you ought to repent and to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance." To all who say "amen" to this method of dealing with cavilers, and "don't know enough about secret societies to discuss them intelligently," I want to ask this question: Would you trust yourself to the care of a physician who would not take his own medicine? By all means urge the infidel to "search the Scriptures" and thoroughly inform himself, and let the unlearned go and do likewise, "lest Satan should get an advantage of us." Certainly no under-shepherd, or watchman, can long remain innocent in ignorance of devices which are disintegrating the body of Christ and making havoc among the sheep and lambs of his flock.

Another brother said, when asked to speak: "You know where I stand, and my people know. I am very busy, and really I don't know much about secret societies," etc. I replied: "I have met a host of your near kin, and I know the pedigree of your family, and you are the very man we want to speak at our conventions. If you had nothing to do, I should distrust your piety and you would be entirely out of your element in our company of busy Christian workers. You say you don't know much about secret societies, yet you disapprove and sometimes speak against them in your pulpit. Now, will you come and tell us what you 'don't know' about secret societies that makes you dislike them so thoroughly? Come and make a statement of your case and possibly 'you may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need,' so as to 'be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear.'"

Brethren, since ye are strong, you will kindly suffer a word from one that is weak, and if I should be a little incredulous as to your ignorance, I hope you will seek to disabuse my mind before classing me with "Doubting Thomas."

The fact is I have my doubts:

1. I doubt if any one in Boston, who is intelligent enough to be a minister, is ignorant of the fact that secret societies are depleting the church of Christ of her male membership and legating the prayer-meeting to the representatives of those women who "were last at the cross and first at the tomb" of our Lord.

2. I doubt if they are ignorant of the fact that most of the secret societies practice a religion which is as dishonoring to Christ as was the worship of Cain, from which all false worships emanated.

3. I doubt their ignorance of the fact that secret societies do associate inexperienced young men with adepts in craft who are contagious with vice, immorality and corrupting habits.

4. I doubt their ignorance of the fact that the candidate on his admission to these secret societies must take an oath or pledge, to obey his superiors in society rank and conceal all the secret things of his order.

5. I doubt their ignorance of the fact that the seclusion, late hours and un-Christian affinities of secret societies are incentives to vice and a menace to virtue.

6. I doubt their ignorance of the fact that the society bond is imposed without Divine, and in most instances without legal sanction, and that it separates those whom God has joined in covenant relation in his church and severs the sacred tie of family union by separating those whom God has said "shall be no more twain, but one flesh."

7. I doubt their ignorance of the fact that secret societies are schools in which the concealment of secrets is so thoroughly inculcated that duplicity or artful management to protect those secrets engenders a habit of deception altogether at variance with the example of Him who "ever spake openly," and who "being without sin" had no secrets to hide.

8. I doubt the ignorance of my brethren in the ministry of the fact that secret societies aspire to a censorship of the pulpit, and that they have so far succeeded as to make the average clergyman coy about uttering words that would be averse to the head that plans and the hand that executes, such as dare oppose or expose the real inwardness of the "secret empire" lest their "bishoprick should be given to another."

9. I doubt their ignorance of the fact that attendance at secret societies does quench the Spirit, and that many having consorted with "evil-doers," "walking through dry places" for a time—living a double life, endeavoring to "serve two masters" until, unsatisfied with husks, the prodigal returns, not in penitence and tears, but "he takes with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself," and from this vantage ground, threatens the minister with dismissal and the church with division and contention and bankruptcy if they are rebuked or denied the sacraments of God's house.

10. I doubt their seeming want of interest in our approaching annual convention and the effort to bring to light the hideous things of dishonesty. They feel the grip of the iron hand, and know that "the combat deepens;" and when, in their estimation, neutrality is treason and silence is criminal, these brethren will be found, with head, and heart, and tongue, and pen on the side, not of the oppressor, but of the oppressed; not with the Gentile sacrificers, but with those who "worship the Father in spirit and in truth."

God speed the day! JAMES P. STODDARD.

BACKBONE!

THE CHURCHES NEED IT DEPLORABLY.

On the 29th ult I returned from the Baptist State Convention at Peoria, to fill appointments at Streator on the Sabbath. But the official board of the Congregational church, with less courage and conviction than the pastor, countermanded his engagement in so far as the special work of the N. C. A. was to be presented; and Bro. Riggs, having been but three or four weeks in the place, was constrained to yield. So also in a sense did I. The dear brethren needed some instruction and more faith in God; and being on the ground, I concluded to give them some truth which they would hear, hoping that at some future time they can bear more. Addresses in a temperance meeting, the Y. M. C. A. and a Christian Endeavor consecration meeting filled the day. The Swedish Lutheran brethren wish me to return and speak for them, and another day's work for a future Sabbath is planned.

Bro. Joel T. Buckley was doubly my kind host, entertaining both body and mind. He is 79 years old, yet has the look and vigor of 60. He drove several miles into the country to preach morning and evening to a vigorous new church at Kangley, returning after 9 o'clock at night. Many years of legal practice have enriched his experience, and the relation of some of his cases is as entertaining as a novel. He preaches occasionally; is a pillar in the church; and, as I wrote before, has been twice moderator of the Fox River Congregational Association. The Streator church was re-organized some fifteen years ago by Pres. C. A. Blanchard from a dying or dead Cumberland Presbyterian body. It began with a testimony against the lodge, and the membership is clear, but needs to realize that God is with them in this testimony, and will vindicate both his truth and those who maintain it. A serious division some ten years since, because of this testimony, is remembered rather from its human side than from God's.

Among the pastors of Streator whom I could reach, I failed to find one that had a word of approval for the lodge. The churches of the city are small; their houses will seat hardly one-fourth of the population; and with poverty on one hand, and wealth that puts $500 into the hand of an Ingersoll on the other, their task is a difficult one, but God will bless their faithful effort.

On the 1st inst., the Chicago Congregational Association met at the wealthy suburb of Oak Park. Unlike the German Lutheran brethr

THE HOME.

WHY DO WE WORRY?

Why do we worry about the nest?

We only stay for a day,
Or a month, or a year, at the Lord's behest,
In this habitat of clay.

Why do we worry about the road,
With its hill or deep ravine?
In a dismal path, or a heavy load,
We are helped by hands unseen.

Why do we worry about the years
That our feet have not yet trod?
Who labors with courage and trust, nor fears,
Has fellowship with God.

The best will come in the great "to be";
It is ours to serve and wait,
And the wonderful future we soon shall see,
For death is but the gate.

—Far and Near.

BE GENUINE.

Said an old and successful teacher, recently: "One of the most disheartening traits of character observable in some boys and girls, is the disposition to be someone else, rather than themselves, to repudiate their own ideas, to cast a shadow over their own home-life and occupations, that they may ape the ideas, manners and performances of others."

To do this is surely a grave mistake, for one of the most charming things noticeable in creation, everywhere, is the infinite variety, the wonderful individuality of plants and animals, which make their study so interesting. We all admire the queen of flowers, yet if budding spring-time brought no pansies to talk to and love, no lilies-of-the-valley to cherish, but in their stead only the beautiful roses, would we not sorely miss our other little friends, and sigh for only a few for-get-me-nots? The same variety and individuality that is seen in the lower animals and plants is needed among people for their mutual happiness and instruction.

Dear boy, dear girl, the world needs you individually! If there be anything wrong in your life, strive to make it right. It matters not how humble your origin, how plain your home, or what meagre advantages you have had, it is your privilege to think for yourself, to study thoughtfully, to put your theories into practice, noting the results. Be gentle, be teachable; let the light of all that's best and noblest quicken your vision, so that you can weed out the wrong habits, strengthen the good ones, and engraft upon your character all that is excellent and ennobling, making it a part of yourself, and not like a garment borrowed from a friend, whose use you but half understand.—Jennie Dean Young, in the Housekeeper.

AN ANECDOTE OF LINCOLN.

An anecdote showing Lincoln's merciful nature in a touching light, and from authentic sources, is the one of the sleeping sentinel, William Scott, whose life Lincoln saved after he had been condemned to be shot. Lincoln personally saw Scott and talked with him for a long time. Scott would not talk to his comrades of the interview afterward until one night, when he had received a letter from home, he finally opened his heart to a friend in this wise:

"The President was the kindest man I had ever seen. I was scared at first, for I had never before talked with a great man. But Mr. Lincoln was so easy with me, so gentle, that I soon forgot my fright. . . . He stood up, and he says to me: 'My boy, stand up here and look me in the free.' I did as he bade me. 'My boy,' he said, 'you are not going to be shot to-morrow. I am going to trust you and send you back to your regiment. I have come up here from Washington, where I have got a great deal to do, and what I want to know is how you are going to pay my bill.' There was a big lump in my throat; I could scarcely speak. But I crowded it down and managed to say:

"There is some way to pay you, and I will find it after a little. There is the bounty in the savings' bank. I guess we could borrow some money on a mortgage on the farm.' I was sure the boys would help, so I thought we could make it up if it wasn't more than five or six hundred dollars. 'But it is a great deal more than five or six hundred dollars,' he said. Then I said I didn't see how, but I was sure I would find some way—if I lived. Then Mr. Lincoln put his hands on my shoulders, and looked into my face as if he were sorry, and said: 'My boy, my bill is a very large one. Your friends cannot pay it, nor your bounty, nor your farm, nor all your comrades. There is only one man in all the world who can pay it, and his name is William Scott.

"If from this day William Scott does his duty, so that if I were there when he comes to die he could look me in the face, as he does now, and say I have kept my promise and done my duty as a soldier, then my debt will be paid. Will you make that promise and try to keep it?' I said I would make the promise and with God's help I would keep it. He went away out of my sight forever. I know I shall never see him again, but may God forget me if I ever forget his kind words or my promise."

Mr. Chittenden, who had a personal share in bringing the case of Scott to Lincoln's attention, and who watched his subsequent career, says he became "the general favorite of all his comrades, the most popular man in the regiment, and modest, unassuming, and unspoiled by his success." He died risking his life in the rescue of wounded men, "being shot all to pieces."—Youth's Journal, Pittsburgh.

THE PRIMARY AMERICAN COLLEGE.

In one of the oldest institutions of learning in this country, a college in which hundreds of penniless boys have been gratuitously fed, clothed and fitted for honorable careers, there is a little room in which are preserved the humble belongings of its first founder; the rough settle which stood in his cabin, the iron pot in which he cooked his corn, the heavy wooden platter from which he ate.

"Wooden platters," says an old chronicle of colonial days, "are to be preferred to tin, because as our meat is tough as leather, it is necessary to fasten it with a fork down to the wood in order to cut it."

Probably not one of the lads who now receive the bounty of an education from the long-dead hand of the founder look into the little room without pity for the bare, hard lives of the pioneers in this country. Which of their descendants would choose to be shut into a cabin by vast and gloomy wildernesses, to plow and dig all day, and to eat leathery meat from wooden platters?

But in all the accounts of the lives of these men which have been preserved there is one great event always recorded: the time when they were "converted," as it was technically called; the time when the man resolved to forsake sin and to serve God.

Was a life bare which had even that in it?

What did the coarse food or wooden platters matter if a man found God, and talked to him in the bush?

Now, in these latter days, we do not often enough think of the day when we shall finally turn away from the old life, in which God is not recognized, and take him as our friend.

Can it be that our richly decorated habit of living, the dainty food, the costly service, the beauty and luxury of civilization, which seem necessities to us, come between our souls and the one thing needful for them?—Youth's Companion.

SHORT SERMONS.

There are no promises of help in the Bible for lazy men.—Ram's Horn.

Folded hands are not necessarily resigned ones. The patience who really smiles on grief usually stand or walks, or even runs.—Ruskin.

If you want to turn your back on your troubles, turn your face toward Jesus Christ.—Young Men's Era.

It is another's fault if he be ungrateful, but it is mine if I do not give. To find one thankful man, I will oblige a great many that are not so.—Seneca.

The way of truth is like a great road. It is not difficult to know it. The evil is only that men will not seek it. Do you go home and search for it?—Mencius.

The farmer's occupation will never be taken from him, for the world depends upon him for a living. For the same reason will the church abide and prosper, for should it die, the world dies with it.—United Presbyterian.

All the work of the Samaritan was the result of his first having compassion on the needy man. When the church learns to love the masses as Christ does, it will not have any trouble in finding a way to reach them.—Ram's Horn.

That is the best form of dispensation which secures the best results. We may wonder why God designs us to walk by faith rather than by sight. "My boys," said a Christian father, "may be very well-behaved in my presence, but I would rather have them so when I am out of sight." So if we conduct ourselves as becomes God's children with God out of sight, we are the better tested and the better strengthened, just because he is out of sight.—S. S. Times.

We fall in love with a man who manifests honest enthusiasm in his work. We fall victims, too, to the contagion of his enthusiasm, and find ourselves entering into hearty sympathy with him. Christian people will win the world for Christ when they show an enthusiasm worthy of their glorious position and noble calling. We cannot think of an angel lacking enthusiasm. Is it any wonder, then, that the world hesitates to accept the testimony of one who, though "an heir of God, and joint heir with Christ," seems to hunger after riches rather than righteousness?—United Presbyterian.

SO MUCH TO THINK OF.

"Dear me! I didn't know there was so much as that to it," said Archie. "So much as what?" asked his grandfather.

The old gentleman had just been saying grace at the dinner table, and Archie was looking soberly at him as he finished.

"Why, so much as you put into it, grandfather. Into your grace, I mean.

"It isn't a very long one, is it?"

"No, but somehow there's more to it than to most graces."

"Do they say grace at school?" asked his little sister Hetty.

"Yes, but it sounds different. One of the teachers says it, and there's some noise, 'most always, and—I guess I don't listen very well," he added frankly.

"Let us see what there is in saying grace," said grandfather.

He repeated the words he had used before, and Archie felt half inclined to bow his head at the reverent tones:

"Bless us, O Lord, in the moderate use of these thy bounties, that in body and mind we may be fitted to serve others, and thus to glorify thee."

"Yes, it's only a few words, you see," said Archie, "but I never heard a grace before that told me not to eat more than I really want, and that's what that means."

"Yes," said grandfather, "we who profess to desire to serve our Lord in our everyday lives are not expected to use the good things he has given us in a greedy, gluttonous way."

"I see," said Archie. "That's one of the things I never thought of before. But it isn't wrong to like good things, is it?"

"Not at all, my boy. When God made so many good things for us to eat, he gave us the taste for enjoying them, too. Did you ever happen to think what a tender father he is to his children? He might have made only the common things for us to eat—things to nourish our bodies and keep us strong, without anything of which we could really enjoy the eating."

"Just think," said Archie, "what a lot of good things there are! Peaches and apples and berries"—

"Yes," said grandfather. "Every country in the whole world is busy raising things for men and women, and boys and girls, to eat and drink. Our tea comes from one side of the world and coffee from the other. Our bread and butter we find near home, but our sugar and spices travel a long ways before they are set on the table for us. Beautiful fruits come from every part of the earth. The fowls of the air are ours to make use of, and even the great ocean is full of gifts for us. All bringing their blessings of enjoyment, health and strength—if only we make right and moderate use of them."

"I don't believe I'd forget about the moderate use if I heard your grace every day, grandfather," said Archie, shaking his head soberly.

"But we should not need to be told of our duty every day, my boy. You surely ought to be able to remember that it is a sin to turn good gifts of the Lord into things of evil."

"I'll remember, grandfather," said Archie. "And that makes me think of the other part of the grace. 'That we may be able to do things for other folks and to glorify God'—or something like that."

"That is a good thing to keep in mind, too, isn't it? The good food gives us strength so that we may be able to use our lives in doing good to others, because that is the truest way to glorify God."

"That's the way you do, grandfather," said Archie, "but it does not mean boys and girls. We don't do much for other folks. We just study and play, and tear 'round. But we eat all the same as folks that do things."

"Yes," said Hetty, "we play 'most all the time. I don't do anything except water mamma's flowers."

"You are just like a little flower yourself," said grandfather, patting her pretty head. "Don't you know it is your work to grow, and get strong, and learn? What is it all for? You are getting yourselves ready to work. An apple or a peach isn't good for anything till it has lived through a great many days of summer, sun and wind; yes, and storms and nights, too. So all these days of play and exercise and study, and the good things to eat, too, are fitting you to serve others to glorify God."

"H'm," said Archie. "Plenty and plenty of things to remember about your grace, grandfather. It wouldn't do to take in all the good things, and let yourselves be good for nothing, would it?"—Sidney Dayre.

WHAT IS HEAVEN?

"What is heaven?"—I asked a little child:
"All joy!" and in her innocence she smiled.
I asked the aged, with her care oppress:
"All suffering o'er, O heaven, at last, is rest!"
I asked a maiden, meek and tender-eyed:
"It must be love!" she modestly replied.
I asked the artist who adored his art:
"Heaven is all beauty!" spoke his raptured heart.
I asked the poet, with his soul afire:
"'Tis glory—glory!" and he struck his lyre.
I asked the Christian, waiting her release:
A halo 'round her, low she murmured, "peace!"
So all may look with hopeful eyes above;
'Tis beauty, glory, joy, rest, peace and love.

TEMPERANCE.

A VETERAN'S POSITION.

Rev. W. A. McKay, B. A., Woodstock, has been discussing the "Liquor Question and how to Deal with it," in the First Presbyterian church, London, and the Advertiser gives a good summary of what he said: Rev. W. J. Clark, pastor of the church, occupied the chair and briefly introduced the speaker. The destruction caused by the use of liquor, Mr. McKay said, was going on and there was the consequent amount of trouble and unhappiness. In one year 528 children under the age of fifteen years had been brought before the police magistrate in Toronto. The traffic that produced all this was sanctioned by the government. Too many of the ministers kept silent on the matter, and the people allowed the present state of affairs to continue. How were people to stop this destruction of their children? They must first of all recognize their cause as God's cause. At one time when "days were dark and friends were few," Luther was seen writing with his finger on the table, over and over again, the word "Vivit," "Vivit,"—He lives, He lives. The living God was his strength and encouragement. And he is ours. Prayer should be offered for those engaged in the liquor traffic, for the victim of strong drink, for the wife and children of the drunkard, for public men and for the ministers of the Gospel. And to prayer, earnest, personal effort must be added. There was no lack of church machinery at the present day, but oh, for the fire from heaven. When poor George Ebers went over the Falls of Niagara, one universal sob shook the hearts of the ten thousand people assembled on the shore. But our young men are being ruined in body and soul, for time and for eternity, by a traffic licensed by the votes of a Christian people; and multitudes of professing Christians, by their actions, say let them perish. The license law was a sin against God, a crime against humanity, and a blot on our civilization. "There can be no license without sin," is the declaration of the largest Protestant church in the United States. The Presbyterian church in Canada had declared that the liquor traffic was contrary to the Word of God, and called on all ministers, elders and members, by voice, vote and example, to seek the removal of the terrible evil. But the evil would never be removed so long as men only talked temperance and then voted Grit or Tory. If we are to get prohibition we must vote only for men who will put prohibition above party, and vote want of confidence in any party that does not make prohibition a part of his policy. We might go on forever voting for Grits and Tories, and yet we would not get prohibition. If we were only to get three men in Parliament wholly separate from both political parties, they would do more good than all the party men who denounced the liquor traffic. Prohibition must be put above partyism.

The Advertiser characterizes the address as an able discussion of the liquor question, and says Mr. McKay is a fluent and forcible, and at times intensely fervid, speaker. At the conclusion of his address the audience passed a hearty vote of thanks.

THE CHILDREN OF DRINKERS.

The Herald of Health deals with the drunkard's posterity: Demme studied ten families of drinkers and ten families of temperate persons. The direct posterity of the ten families of drinkers included fifty-seven children. Of these twenty-five died in the first weeks and months of their life, six were idiots, in five children a striking backwardness of their longitudinal growth was observed, five were affected with epilepsy, five with inborn diseases. One boy was taken with chorea and became idiotic. Thus of the fifty-seven children of drinkers only ten, or 17.5 per cent showed a normal constitution and development. The ten sober families had sixty-one children, five only dying in the first weeks; four were affected with curable diseases of the nervous system; two only presented inborn defects. The remaining fifty—81.9 per cent—were normal in their constitution and development. From this series of investigations we derive the sad truth that among the children of drinkers the prevailing mortality is fearful, that the survivors represent a pitiful crowd, afflicted with unsoundness of mind, idiocy, epilepsy, and other disturbances of their nervous system, and that only a very small proportion of their descendants grow up as useful members of society.

NUGGETS.

The Globe seems to have been wrestling with the Maine law problem of late, and to have got into a serious tangle over the whole question. Here is its last deliverance; "The people of Maine are temperate because they have prohibition laws," says one class of philosophers. "The people of Maine have a prohibition law because they are temperate," says another. And there is much truth in either position."

The Christian Patriot, of Morristown, Tenn., says: "There was no brandy in the Passover wine which our Lord used in instituting the great feast of the church. The art of distilling was unknown in his age. There should be no brandy on the communion table. But the wines of commerce, claret, porter, etc., are 'fortified' with brandy to keep them. They should not be used for sacramental purposes."

The London Echo has been considering the problem of when a man becomes a drunkard, and here is an editorial note after an hour's hard thinking: "The Supreme Court of the State of Indiana has decided that he who lies occasionally is not a liar any more than he who takes a dram is a drunkard. It would doubtless tickle a great many persons around here if our Supreme Court would so rule. But, if it takes ten glasses of whisky to intoxicate a man, it does not require an erudite mathematician to discover that he who drinks one glass of spirits is one-tenth intoxicated. So, if it takes ten whopping lies to make a liar of a man, he who tells one is just one-tenth a liar."

The Keystone Good Templar says: "No member shall be permitted to drink the white man's grog," is the pertinent regulation of a newly formed Zulu church in Africa. To which an exchange adds: "In that respect the Zulu church is a step in advance of American churches, which, though they discountenance the use of intoxicating liquors, do not make liquor drinking a test of membership, in which case missionary reciprocity with Africa might be beneficial."

The Chicago Post is well "posted" in political matters. It says: "There is money in politics for the saloon-keeper. His till overflows during a canvass. The 'boys' caucus in his back room, and keep the electric button busy all the while. His opportunities are large. A man in any other line could not embrace them. No druggist could afford to drive his trade away by making his place of business a rendezvous for political heelers, and no small tradesman would consent to jeopardize his business in like manner. So the man who sells rum for a living has it his own way. In his bottles is the potent article that mellowes the workers, and before his mahogany they are welcome. That is why he has such a pull."

Dr. N. S. Davis, of Chicago, who is one of the old and well-known leading medical men of the States, at a meeting of the Chicago Medical Society last month said: "All excesses and irregularities in eating or drinking are injurious, as also are excessive and exhausting mental and physical work. And still more injurious is the use of any unnatural drinks, which, like those containing alcohol, directly interfere with the function of the hemoglobin of the blood and diminish the activity of both the leucocytes and tissue cells, and thereby greatly impair the resisting power of the whole system. Abundant experience has shown that an alley filled with decayed garbage does not more certainly invite cholera germs in the neighborhood than does the use of alcoholic drinks invite them to the tissues of the individuals who use such drinks."

How few tobacco users, either chewers or smokers, realize what an abominably bad breath they all the time carry about with them. Some are really sensitive gentlemen who would keep out of people's way if they did. The Milton Reformer has this note: "A cigarette smoking husband would justify a woman in anything. A man sued for a divorce once upon a time on the plea of 'bad breath;' he got the divorce, whether upon that ground or some other; yet dainty, sensitive women will blandly tolerate the fiend reeking in obnoxious tobacco, until to the dullest sense of smell he seems to be afflicted with a loathsome disease. Don't say that women are not to blame; they could have stopped cigarette smoking long ago had they been so minded. The precocious youths who affect the rice-paper weed are beyond a man's jurisdiction, but they are susceptible to other things besides nicotine."

The Boston Traveller is not a temperance paper and is not usually much given to strong language on the question, but the following from its pages is about as strong as any "temperance fanatic" indulges in. The indictment is true, however: "We are told that throughout this great nation the object of the government is to protect the lives and property of its people, and to make its welfare its principal aim. How, then, is it we see a hideous monster prowling about us in open daylight, carrying ruin and devastation wherever it exhales its noxious breath, and that justice not only refuses to punish its ravages, but absolutely sanctions its atrocities? This monster—an instigator of murder, a propagator of lust, a seducer of innocence, a blighter of our homes, the rapacious, insatiable devourer of happiness, 'licensed to kill' all who have not strength enough, both bodily and mentally, to resist its insidious attacks—is called rum."

whom I met a few weeks before in another part of the town, our cause was not uniformly welcome. To a large number, perhaps a majority, it would have been, but the business committee was two to one against me. A brief argument with them gained a partial promise that five minutes would be given to the N. C. A. request for delegates to a conference, but the fear of a quarrel finally prevailed. God was better to these brethren, however, than their fears. In the afternoon Dr. E. P. Goodwin of the First Church, Chicago, led in a discussion of the sufficiency of the Gospel to counteract public vices. His address was grandly earnest and faithful. Some of the pastors winced under his condemnation of indifference and moral cowardice in the pulpit. They wished to believe there was no moral issue they dared not discuss in their churches. They persuaded themselves that it was so. But at the same time their business committee dared not give the N. C. A. five minutes for fear of a fight! The brethren will have an opportunity to do better, God willing.

Later in the week there was an opportunity to make up some arrears of correspondence, and secure appointments for future addresses in Chicago, for our cause. On Thursday evening I was present when the College church at Wheaton voted to have their reform testimonies read at every communion. One reason given was that one family, having heard them on such an occasion, had gone to another church. It was deemed fortunate that people who do not love truth for truth's sake, but for popularity's, should seek church fellowship elsewhere. "Give them the truth anyway," said Mr. Moody. "If they would rather leave their churches than their lodges, the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members." Amen! HENRY L. KELLOGG.

BUTLER IN THE REFORM FIELD.

DARLINGTON, Mo., November 4, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Through Capt. G. H. Loveland, of Kansas City, I will reach Major Frank L. Ward, of the American Salvation Army, with a copy of my "American Handbook."

I sold a goodly number of books in and around Olathe, Kan.

At Darlington, Mo., I visited with aged parents and brothers and relatives whom I had not met for years. This, my former home, is a thriving, growing village, and will yet fulfill my former predictions as a manufacturing and shipping point.

At Stansberry, a most enjoyable time was had with a brother-in-law, E. M. Hurlburt and family, John Davis and family, a cousin, Mrs. A. Stevens and family, all true and tried Americans. Mrs. Lura Boleyn, wife of Prof. Boleyn of the Northwestern Normal, and daughter of Mrs. Davis, is president of the local W. C. T. U. and wide-awake on the question of organized conspiracy. Here, too, is Bro. C. L. Ferry, our Wesleyan Methodist brother, formerly of Willis, Kan.

Last Sabbath, at the dedication of a union church in old Gentryville, the presiding dominie went out of his way to glory in his Masonic affiliation and idolatry. This is where a Masonic lodge of sun-worshippers is built above one of the churches. There used to be a lodge up-stairs at Mt. Vernon, same county, over a church. Surely Gentry county needs home missionary work among her church people who are thus bowing to organized paganism at this late hour when there is such a universal uprising against the powers of darkness and spiritual wickedness in high places.

We are now at the home of that grand old veteran of freedom, George W. Needels. He is somewhat recovered from bodily and financial wrecks, by cyclone and team run-away, and is planning for years of reform work yet. As we converse, the designs flash on the trestleboard and poor "Hiram" may find that the old war horse of temperance, anti-Romanism and organized conspiracy is a gladiator of whom they may well beware. As the mighty movement gains force and power, he misses more and more the American Freeman, through which we for three years hurled together our hot shot of damaging facts, truths and evidences into the camp of organized outlawry and chicanery. Just now the rallying cry is sounding for the Missouri State meeting at Albany, Nov. 29th and 30th. Let every advanced, progressive citizen of the State report at roll-call. M. N. BUTLER.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A personal appeal.—vs. 26-31. Antioch in Pisidia was a much smaller city than the great metropolis from which the missionaries had been sent out. It was so called to distinguish it from the Syrian Antioch. Going into the synagogue as usual, they were courteously requested to speak if they had "any word of exhortation for the people." It seems that this was a customary thing to do when any stranger was noticed in the audience. A Jew, however distant from the home of his fathers, was never supposed to be ashamed of his religion, or expected to shrink from bearing testimony to his faith. Would that this were true of every professing Christian today! Paul, like Stephen, begins his talk with a summary of Jewish history. Himself a Jew of the Jews, he knew that to touch the chords of national pride and patriotism was the surest way to win their attention. Our lesson begins where, having brought his address down to the times of David, to whom the promises were made of a Son whose reign should be eternal, he suddenly breaks off in an impassioned appeal: "Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, . . . to you is the word of this salvation sent." The Gospel was to be proclaimed to the Jew first. "Because they knew them not." This was really not so strange as what follows: "Nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath-day." This shows us that mere reading of the Bible without any spiritual understanding of it will do us no good. Even our weekly study of the Word in our Sabbath-schools may make us acquainted only with the letter of Scripture, while woefully ignorant of its spirit. We rely on "helps" too much, and lesson leaves, instead of going directly to the fountain-head, so that our Bible study becomes mechanical, the reflection of another's thought instead of our own independent investigation. "And when they had fulfilled all that was written." They had no thought that they were fulfilling prophecy. Wicked men are not the only instruments God uses in unconsciously carrying out his will, but those with minds so darkened by ignorance and prejudice that they are blind to the plainest truths of his Word. It is important that we read the Bible, but how we read it is more important still, for it depends altogether on our spiritual understanding of the truths therein whether we shall be used against our will to advance his purposes like these stubborn Jews, or become conscious, joyful, intelligent co-workers with God.

2. The Gospel proclaimed.—vs. 32-37. "We declare unto you glad tidings." What were these glad tidings? Not the birth of Jesus, not his life, not his death even, but his resurrection. This was the surpassingly glad and great event on which all our hope of eternal life must hinge. It was the substance of David's most remarkable Messianic prophecy: "Thou wilt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." This was the text so strongly emphasized by Peter in his great sermon on the day of Pentecost (ch 2: 31), and Paul follows the same general line of argument. David, instead of ascending into the heavens, "fell on sleep and saw corruption." So he could not possibly have been the subject of his own prophecy. Only Christ, who was raised again and saw no corruption, could fulfill the type.

3. Rebuke and warning.—vs. 38-41. Signs of dissatisfaction and dissent had evidently begun to be visible,—so much so that Paul brings his sermon to an abrupt close after solemnly warning them of the punishment their stubborn rejection of the truth would bring upon themselves. Forgiveness and justification through the man Christ Jesus were now freely preached unto them. To be justified is a different thing from being forgiven. It means to be legally cleared from guilt, to have our sins blotted out as though they never were. But it is plain that many of Paul's hearers felt no need of such a great blessing. In their self-righteousness they believed themselves sufficiently justified by the deeds of the law, and were filled with wrath that Paul should take this occasion to preach the claims of the crucified One. Like many to-day, when unpopular subjects are spoken of in the pulpit, or at the prayer-meeting, they probably thought that Paul had committed a serious breach of decorum and put him down as a disturber of Zion. "Behold, ye despisers." Their unbelief would make no difference with the spread of the truth, or prevent their seeing with wonder and alarm its steady progress, but it would make all the difference between life and death to themselves.

4. The Gentiles desire the word.—vs. 42, 43. Those Jews and Gentile proselytes who were favorably disposed to the truth remained in the synagogue after the angry opposers had left, to ask for a repetition of Paul's sermon the next Sabbath. Thus the very violence of unbelievers was filling honest and candid minds with a desire to know more of the blessed Gospel story.

PRO AND CON.

Report of the Committee on Education adopted by the Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church:

"The American public schools are in danger. The danger is occasioned by the very thing that Washington said should not be tolerated—foreign interference. Against this interference we emphatically protest. Firmly believing that the pope and the bishops are criminals against some of the best things in human life, we stoutly affirm that the Roman policy in America should be put in quarantine.

"Compulsory education is a civil necessity in this country. We must protect ourselves from the tide of ignorance and prejudice rolling in upon us from Roman Catholic Europe, or perish in the threatening devastation.

"Wherever the Latin church flourishes her people are criminally kept in ignorance, and the state is wickedly denied its independence. She says: 'If the pope demands it the authority of the State must be braved, human affections must be disregarded, life must be sacrificed.' Therefore, reaffirming our thorough confidence in the public school system,

"Resolved, That we as a church stand opposed to any encroachment from any quarter that would lessen the influence or diminish the vigor of this most essential factor in our national well-being."

PER CONTRA.

In our day we see governments far and wide setting up a new worship of Moloch, in which it requires the children to be offered to the favorite idol, not hideous in appearance like the Moloch of old, but attractive and fascinating. The modern idol feeds not on the bodies of the children, but on their souls. The children are not consumed with the material fire, but their souls are weaned from God, deprived of all instruction in their duty to God. When the Moloch-worshipping State can effect this it exults. And what is this Moloch of our times? The godless public school.—Catholic News, Chicago.

CENTRAL OHIO CONFERENCE.

From the Report of the Committee on Moral Reform in the recent Wesleyan Central Ohio Conference:

"6. We condemn the present system of strikes, by labor organizations, as tending to anarchy, and every evil thing which may grow out of it, and we regard it as the legitimate offspring of organized secrecy."

He who lives only to benefit himself confers on the world a benefit when he dies.—Tertullian.

The doctrine that "The backs of our vices should bear the burden of our taxes," is based on the notion that we can serve ourselves by our sins and make coins of our crimes.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOMELY GYMNASTICS.

That there is not much sanitary or strengthening influence in the operation of dusting is evident; and yet many women, disdaining heavier work, reserve this domestic duty for themselves and waste much time upon it. Muscular motion is of little value unless vigorous and swift. The slow walk and loitering movement do not rouse the blood from its torpidity. The lowest labor when zealously performed may be followed by an unexpected hygienic effect. There is the instance of a penniless young man, threatened with a fever in a strange country, shipping as a deck hand to return and die among his people. During the voyage he scrubbed away the dirt from the ship-boards, and with it the disease that had invaded his life craft. A story is also told of a family whose women were of the delicate, ailing sort. Misfortune obliged them to perform their own domestic work. What seemed for them a sad necessity proved itself a double blessing. They gained what they had never known before, robust health; and their enforced economy restored them to a prosperous condition. Not all physicians are clear-sighted or independent enough to prescribe as did one of their number. A young lady supposed to be suffering with anæmia, nervous prostration, and other fashionable ills, sent for the family doctor. "Is there anything I can do to get well?" she asked, after the usual questioning. "There is," answered he; "follow this prescription faithfully." The folded scrap of paper read as follows: One broom; use in two hours of house-work daily.—Alice B. Tweedy.

A SIMPLE REMEDY FOR SPRAINS, ETC.

Many people still rely upon wormwood and rum, arnica and other applications in the form of liniments in the treatment of bruises and sprains, and ignore that simple but most efficient remedy of all, hot water. There is no medicine known that approaches it in value in injuries such as these in which the skin is not broken.

If a train of cars is derailed, wreckers are sent out at once from headquarters; and the greater the number the sooner their work is done. The blood may not properly be likened to these men, for it is nature's means of repair, and when an injury occurs she immediately diverts to the affected parts a large supply of blood freighted with the needed materials. In some instances, of course, supply is much greater than is actually required, and the work of restoration is in consequence obstructed, but the excess is practically made up of lookers on, or interlopers, as it were, for which nature is not responsible.

The ball field seems to be very favorable for bruises and sprains, and one would naturally suppose professionals, at least, would be well up in the most approved form of treatment. Players, however, are often disabled for weeks by hurts that ought to be repaired in a few days.

If an injury is so located that treatment can be conveniently applied, as on the hand, the arm or leg, at once after receiving it, the affected parts should be plunged into water as hot as can be borne and kept there for several hours. When the bath must be discontinued the injured parts should have water dressings applied, and these in turn be kept hot until all the tenderness has been drawn out.

Severe bruises, wrenches and sprains, when treated in this way, are far more quickly cured than by any other known means. And the sufferings of the patients are infinitely less than where liniments, lotions, etc., are used. In such injuries, after the soreness has been relieved, there is generally some swelling or puffiness of the parts to overcome.—Hall's Journal of Health.

As one result of his efforts, thousands of people eat cheese with pastry so as to prevent indigestion, and when indigestion follows they blame themselves for not eating enough cheese, when it is really because they have eaten too much of it. Cheese is really about the hardest thing to digest that a man can swallow. The lightest kinds take four or five hours to digest, while the heavier varieties take eight or ten hours. Instead, then, of expediting the process and preventing indigestion, cheese gives the stomach exceptionally hard work to perform and is responsible for a large amount of discomfort and bad temper."

FARM NOTES.

SEASONABLE HINTS.

Give the hens chopped onions occasionally.

Do not try to winter more hens than you can care for well.

Clean up, whitewash and get the hen-house ready for winter.

Treat your wife as well as you do your stock. She will appreciate it.

Clean up the coops and give them a dose of coal oil before putting away for the season.

Fruits and flowers have been rightly called "children of the light woven from sunny air."

See that there are no cracks in the hen-house through which draughts can strike the fowls.

No one can afford to buy manure until he has first made use of every pound produced at home.

A small herd of cattle well fed will pay better than a large one that just "pulls through."

Stick to the breed that you have done well with. Improve and build it up rather than let it fall back.

In the Chicago market, small hen turkeys sell better than others after New Year's. But have them fat.

There is no meat that varies more in price than poultry, between choice fat birds and "scallawag" stock.

If you have no extra feed do not buy a lot of stock this fall because it is cheap. It will be dear (to you) before spring.

No mercy should be shown to the dog that rushes out and barks at a passing team. He should be shot at sight.

Fresh fruit is thought to be a preventive of the "Grippe." The bitters they contain are thought to act as a tonic.

Fattening fowls, young pullets and old hens kept for laying eggs do not require the same food—either in quality or kind.

Do not wait till you are obliged to give full winter feed before you begin to add anything to that gotten from the pasture.

When pressing hay weigh each bale and mark the weight on a tag or small lath attached. The lath is less liable to lose in transit.

If you cannot dress poultry nicely, send live to market; that is, unless you prefer to sell it at a home market rather than ship.

Grit is an important factor in successful poultry-keeping. The keeper must have it in his character and the fowls in their crops.

Sell surplus fowls as soon as ready for market and try to have them ready before Thanksgiving time or else after that and before Christmas.

Give the fowls some sunflower seed about twice a week, but not too much at a time, and it will give them a glossy coat after they are done moulting.

There are some farmers who pride themselves on their fine bred stock that have nothing but "scrub" children. What are you doing to improve yours?

It requires but little time and attention to manage a small flock, but if it is intended to go into poultry raising as a business it means work and plenty of it.

Do not have an army of cockerels with your flock of hens. If not fat enough to make good eating, keep by themselves till fat—then sell or kill them for home consumption.

If your stock are depending upon a two-wire fence for winter protection it is time you built some barrier to hedge out foreign wind and snow. Provide shelter now before the cold days are here.

Old hens that are too fat to lay will make elegant roasters, and will pay better disposed of as such, than to keep for the few eggs they will lay this winter; at least our experience has taught us that.

Any four-year-old hens that are moping about will make you more money if put at once upon the manure heap, than they will to be put there after you have fed them another peck or so of corn. Fact.

If not too dry crowd the fall plowing. If you have but one team and have two or more hands on the farm "set" the wagon in the corn field and husk into that, and have the team draw up at the close of each half day's work.

If you have any little chicks that are peeping around frosty mornings because they need stockings to make them comfortable, it will be humane and money in your pocket if you take their heads off at a single blow with a sharp hatchet.

Do not permit the refuse cabbage leaves and the soft and unsalable heads to waste in the field. They are excellent food for all kinds of stock. Feed them in the stall, if possible, so that all will be utilized. If not, turn the stock in the field as soon as you have removed the good heads—before the rest begin to decay.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

On the one hand there's $500 in cash; on the other, there's a cure for your Catarrh. One of these two things has got to come to you—that's promised and agreed by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

But, do you think they'd make any such promise if they weren't sure that you'd be cured? That has come to thousands, through this Remedy, when everything else has failed. By its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, the worst chronic cases of Catarrh in the Head have been perfectly and permanently cured.

That's the reason they're willing to take such a risk. This is what they say, clearly and plainly: "If we can't cure your Catarrh, no matter how bad your case or of how long standing, we'll pay you $500 in cash." If they have faith enough to say that, isn't it safe for you to have a little faith, too?

CURED

"About seven or eight months ago I was attacked by a cough, and at once began to take a medicine much advertised as an expectorant, and continued using it until I had taken about six bottles. Instead of giving me relief, it only made me worse. I tried several other remedies, but all in vain, and I don't think I had three whole nights' rest during my illness. I began to think that had laid hold of me, and my hopes of recovery were all gone. I was a mere skeleton, but a friend of mine, who had been some time away, called to see me. He recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and kindly sending me a bottle, I took it, but with little hopes of recovery. I am thankful, however, to say that it cured me, and I am to-day enjoying the best of health."—J. Wilmot Payne, Monrovia, Liberia.

The secretary of the treasury has issued an order fixing the value of the Austrian florin at 40.6 cents and the Austrian crown at 20.3 cents. It is likely that importers, chiefly concerned, will appeal to the board of general appraisers for relief. They claim the value of a florin is only 32 cents.

Forest fires broke out on the "knobs" south of Brownstown, Ind. The flames spread fast, carrying with them destruction of valuable timber. Many thousand dollars' loss.

The Ohio Iron Company of Zanesville, which has been shut down for the past eighteen months on account of refusal of the officials to sign the scale, has fired its furnaces and begins with non-union men.

Four prisoners attempted to break jail in Norfolk, Va., but were thwarted by the jailer and a deputy sheriff. Two of the prisoners were shot and killed and the others driven back at the point of a revolver.

Catarrh in the Head

Not a Local Disease.

Because catarrh affects your head, it is not therefore a local disease. If it did not exist in your blood, it could not manifest itself in your nose. The blood now in your brain is, before you finish reading this article, back in your heart again and soon distributed to your liver, stomach, kidneys, and so on. Whatever impurities the blood does not carry away, cause disease. Therefore, when you have a snuff or other inhalant can at most give only temporary relief. The only way to effect a cure is to attack the disease in the blood, by taking a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which eliminates all impurities and thus permanently cures catarrh.

CATARRH OF THE HEAD

THE SUCCESS of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh is vouched for by many people it has cured. Give it a trial.

A note from Rev. W. C. Paden informs us that preparations for the Missouri State Anti-secrecy Convention are progressing slowly but surely. Rev. T. M. Chalmers, M. N. Butler, L. C. Ebey and others, it is expected, will deliver addresses. An effort is being made to extend the anti-secrecy reform work rapidly and widely, and secure a large attendance at the Convention, by means of printed programs. Bro. Paden and other friends are praying earnestly that this gathering may be good and profitable. We are sure that all Cynosure readers will say amen to that prayer.

Rev. M. A. Gault held meetings on his way to the Marengo Convention in the Associate Presbyterian church, near Albia, and in the U. P. churches at Cedar, Nassau, Fairview and Guernsey. He preached before the professors and students of Penn College, Oskaloosa, Sabbath, Nov. 6, and the same evening addressed a meeting in the Friends' church in the same place. He found many good friends of the cause at all these points, who, he says, are hungry for more meetings, and the people turn out better to hear a discussion of the secret society question than any other issue. This is cheering intelligence.

Those who anticipated any commercial depression to follow the overwhelming Democratic victory of last week were disappointed. The clearing-house returns show a gain in transactions, throughout the nation, of 11 per cent., while there was a falling off of more than 25 per cent. in the number of business failures. The money markets show a tendency to increasing ease, and the produce and live-stock markets generally manifest a healthy advance. The retail trade of Chicago, last week, exhibited the maintenance of a good volume and satisfactory receipts. These results indicate that politics and business, with Americans, are separate factors in national progress, and not necessarily in opposition to each other as affecting the general prosperity.

This week a meeting of Roman Catholic archbishops is in session in New York. The matters under discussion include the Faribault system of education, originated by Bishop Ireland, and favored by the pope, but opposed by Archbishop Corrigan and the Protestants of Minnesota; also, what measure of support should be accorded to the new Roman Catholic University at Washington; also, the establishment of an ecclesiastical court in the United States to try complaints against offending prelates of all ranks. Hitherto such cases have been forwarded to Rome for adjudication. The proceedings of this meeting, whether conducted secretly or openly, will possess interest for all American citizens, as it is another step in the progress of the aggrandizement of the hierarchy in this country.

The general result of the Presidential election gives Weaver (Third or People's party candidate) 23 electoral votes, in the States of Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Nevada and North Dakota; Harrison, 122 votes, in Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan (9), Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, Washington and Wyoming; Cleveland, 299 votes, in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan (5), Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio(?), South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia. Total electoral vote, 444; necessary for an election, 223. The estimated popular vote cast is 824,200, divided as follows: Cleveland, 603,000; Harrison, 202,700, and Weaver, 18,500. The Fifty-third Congress will be largely Democratic. Owing to the peculiar character of election laws in Michigan, the State is divided as above indicated, the Democrats securing 5 votes.

At 8 o'clock an address, subject: "Modern Freemasonry a Revival of Devil-worship: coupled with scandalous lying artfully designed by the father of lies to set at naught the Word of God and destroy the souls of men," by Rev. W. Fenton, of St. Paul, Minn.

THE CHURCH THE BULWARK OF THE LODGE.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE NEBRASKA STATE CONVENTION, BY JOS. W. MORTON, D. D., NORTH LOUP, NEBRASKA.

Some years ago, I held a conversation with an intelligent friend on the subject of Freemasonry. In reply to the opinion which I expressed very freely, that Masonry is a great evil, he remarked in substance: "I have a brother who has been a Mason for many years. He is a Methodist minister and a very good man. I cannot believe that there is anything very bad in Masonry; if there was, my brother would not belong to the lodge." This gentleman had no personal knowledge of the institution. In this respect, he was in much the same position in which the large majority of Freemasons were, up to the time of their initiation; for it is the settled policy of all secret societies to conceal, as far as possible, their real character from the uninitiated.

As far as I know, the gentleman I refer to never became a Mason; but, had the circumstances been favorable, he would have joined the order, without a moment's hesitation, simply on the strength of his brother's example; and he had several sons, all of whom, it may be fairly presumed, would be ready to follow the same example of their godly relative. Were we permitted to scan the inward history of all the secret orders, we should doubtless find that hundreds of thousands of their members are in them because Christian men and women of good reputation—ministers, elders, deacons and leading church members—were there before them. On no other principle is it possible to account for the fact that self-respecting men will enter organizations of which so little is known beforehand. It cannot be denied that a very large percentage of the membership of the various secret orders, at least in this country, consists of members of what are called "Evangelical churches." These have followed each other into the lodges, and are, in their turn, followed by other members of the community. Of course, it is true that many would join these orders, even if no Christians were found in them; but, if all Christians should abandon them they would soon lose their prestige, and find their true level among the other "works of darkness."

It is to be regretted that we have no present means of ascertaining what proportion of the six hundred thousand Masons in the United States are members of Evangelical churches; but we know that these Masonic Christians are very numerous. It has been estimated that about four out of five of the ministry of one of the largest Protestant denominations in this country are members of the Masonic fraternity. This may, or may not, be an exaggerated estimate; and the proportion in some of the other popular denominations is probably about the same.

The proportion among the laity of the several churches is much smaller, for obvious reasons. Still I think we shall not be far out of the way if we estimate that one-fourth of the Freemasons of the United States are members of Evangelical churches; and would it be unsafe to allege, that as many as one-third of the members of such churches, in this country, are connected with one or more of the secret orders? Whatever may be the true answer to this question, it can not be denied that all the orders commonly known in this country are well-represented in most of the Protestant churches—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, Red Men, Grangers, Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, Grand Army of the Republic, Knights of Labor, Farmers' Alliance, and many others, too numerous to mention. All these are welcome to the Lord's table, if they choose to approach it.

Now, whatever may be her form of government, any church that receives to her fellowship any considerable number of members of secret orders must inevitably lose the moral power to testify against those orders. Nay, she will justly be considered an aider and abettor of these orders and their principles. Even if she professes to disapprove of secret societies, the fact that she adopts their members as her own destroys all confidence in her profession. The world judges her not by her words, but by her actions; and these declare that the principles and practices of secret organizations are in harmony with the Gospel of Christ. This is all the endorsement that they desire. They dread the adverse testimony of the church, and, like the demons in the Gospel, they plead to be "let alone." It is a notorious fact that these orders are "let alone," in undisturbed possession of the ground which they severally occupy, by all those churches that have opened their doors to their members. And this enumeration of churches includes all the large denominations of Protestant Christians, except the Lutheran, together with most of the smaller ones.

Because the churches of Jesus Christ have tenfold more moral influence in the community than any other class of citizens, I maintain that the church, speaking in general terms, is the bulwark of secret societies. This statement does not apply to those individual churches, or denominations, that have severed their connection with all secret orders; but to those, being the large majority, that open their doors wide to the members of the secret kingdom, from the Freemasons to the Grand Army. Certainly, it is not necessary to spend time in proving this proposition, which is so evident to all. To prevent misunderstanding, however, there are two things to which I wish to call special attention:

1. So far as I have observed, no Protestant denomination has ever formally recognized, or endorsed, any secret order. Individual ministers of the Gospel have been heard to say, publicly and privately, that Masonry is not only a religion, but one of the best religions in the world; and it is not many years since a distinguished minister of the Baptist denomination was reported in the papers as saying that Odd-fellowship is a handmaid of religion and of the church; but no Protestant church, I think, has ever put forth, in her organized capacity, any such sentiment. This is not necessary, and would not be desirable. The rulers of the secret kingdom neither demand nor wish for any formal endorsement on the part of the church. They very well know that the church which is not against them is for them—just as truly as those who are not for Christ are against him. No church that I know of ever formally endorsed human slavery; but no one now hesitates to admit that the American church, fifty years ago, was the chief bulwark of American slavery. True, some of the denominations had formerly borne strong testimony against that peculiar institution, and these testimonies had never been expunged from their records; but, by receiving slaveholders to their fellowship, and even advancing them to high places in their councils, and by apologizing for the traffic in human flesh, they had practically nullified those testimonies and thrown the whole weight of their influence in the opposite scale. So there are denominations to-day, which formerly testified manfully against secret societies, but which now refuse to re-affirm their former testimonies; thus practically endorsing the secret kingdom, with all its works of darkness.

2. I would not intimate that secret societies are the only evil thing to which the church of Christ has formerly given, or is now giving, her support. As we have just remarked, a few years ago she was the main-stay of American slavery. She is to-day, at least, an indirect supporter of the liquor traffic. She is largely responsible for that "race prejudice" which, in open defiance of both law and right, drives respectable men and women from hotel tables and from first-class railroad cars, simply because of the color of their skin. These are a few, and only a few, of the evils which she has, directly or indirectly, endorsed. We might almost say that the church has, at one time or another, dallied and flirted with every evil that is done under the sun; and, in view of these wicked and oft-repeated dalliances, the wonder is, not that the church is weak and sickly to-day, but that there is any church in the world at all. Had it not been for that immortal life secured to her by her glorious Head, she must have perished long ago from the face of the earth.

Among the evils upheld by the Christian church, secretism stands pre-eminent; not, perhaps, because it is in itself worse than some others, but because it is informally incorporated in the church and interwoven with its membership. Drunkards, rumsellers and distillers are generally refused admission to the Lord's table; but Masons and members of all other secret orders are not only found among the laity of most of the churches, but are even advanced to the highest places among the ministry. If secretism is an evil at all, it is certainly the favorite evil of our day, and ought to receive the immediate attention of every reformer.

But is it really an evil? Is it wrong for the church of our Lord to be the bulwark of the lodge? If secretism is a good thing, these questions must be answered in the negative. The church should not only tolerate, but actively uphold and defend, these secret orders, if they exist for the glory of God and the good of humanity. Hence the whole question as to the attitude which the church should sustain toward these institutions must be determined by their moral character and influence. If they are wrong in principle, unjust in their workings, and disastrous in their results, every Christian should not only keep aloof from them, but testify against them. Such, I firmly believe, is the moral character of the secret societies of to-day; and the church, instead of apologizing for them, as she is doing now, should, in all legitimate ways, use her great influence against them.

I propose to offer a few reasons for this belief:

1. Some of the most powerful secret societies of to-day are despotic in their government. Their members, at their initiation, renounce all right of private judgment in reference to all matters pertaining to the workings of their several orders. I do not bring this charge against all the secret organizations; but it is notoriously true of several of the largest and best known among them; as, for instance, Masonry and the several labor organizations. It is a well-recognized principle among Masons that the Master of the lodge wields a power that is absolute over the other members; and any, even the least, disobedience of this authority subjects the offender to punishment. The same despotic authority is exercised in the labor lodges; except that in these this absolute power is exercised, not by a single individual, but by a small number of superior officers. For example: A company of men are working quietly in a factory. They are all satisfied with their employer, and with their wages. They have no grievance whatever. Suddenly a "walking delegate" of the labor lodge to which they belong makes his appearance among them; and, at a sign from him, without a spoken word, they are all compelled by their lodge obligation to lay down their tools and leave the shop. They have sworn to do this, without asking for any reason other than the arbitrary will of their leaders. The power of these leaders is quite as arbitrary and irresponsible as that of a general over his soldiers, in a time of actual war. It is, I think, safe to say, that there are more than one million men in the United States, members of labor organizations, who have surrendered to their superior officers all right of private judgment, in reference to matters vitally affecting themselves and their families, to say nothing of their employers and the community at large. Their slavish submission to their masters is quite as abject as that of the members of a Masonic lodge to their Master. How far this spirit of despotism may prevail in other secret societies, I am not prepared to say; but we have good reason to suspect that there is more or less of it in them all. Certainly, they all very often show a spirit of despotic intolerance toward their fellow-citizens who do not belong to the lodge.

Now, the true Christian religion is unalterably opposed to despotism, in the church, in the state or in social life; and no Christian can consistently have any affiliation with tyranny of any kind; therefore, the church of Christ should have nothing to do with such secret societies, or receive their members to her fellowship.

2. Most secret societies, if not all of them, are founded upon selfishness. God has founded three institutions among men, and no more—the family, the church and the state. These were designed to secure his rich blessings to all men alike. True, they have often been corrupted and diverted from their original purpose; but that purpose was, to secure to every human being a fair and equal opportunity to "glorify God and to enjoy him forever." Now, if any additional institutions are ever needed, or may properly be established—of which we have serious doubts—they should always be auxiliary to one or the other of these three, and should invariably be founded upon and governed by the same principles. These principles are the very opposite of selfishness. If I am a true child of God, the cardinal principle of my life must be, the sacrifice of myself, if need be, for the good of my family, for the good of the church to which I belong, for the good of the state of which I am a citizen, and for the good of the human race that are scattered abroad over the face of the whole habitable globe. Anything short of this is narrow, selfish and un-Christian. True Christian charity does, indeed, begin at home, but its goal is the utmost bound of human habitation. On the contrary, the general rule among secret societies is, that their benefits are strictly confined to their own members, and, to a limited extent, to their families. The "charity" of the lodge is appropriately expressed in the prayer so often quoted: "God bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four and no more. Amen." Who ever heard of a Mason, as a Mason, doing anything for the relief of any one who was in no way connected with his fraternity? The churches send their missionaries and visitors down into the "slums" after the degraded—the very outcasts of society; but the Masons and Odd-fellows never do anything of this kind; nor do any of the secret orders that I know anything about. In all their workings they are consistently selfish. Perhaps the "Grand Army" may furnish an occasional exception to this rule; but in no proper sense can any of them be said to be auxiliary to either church or state. Much more might be said on this point; but the selfishness of secret societies is so readily apparent to the most casual observer, that no further proof or illustration is needed.

3. Some of the more popular secret societies of the present day claim the right to exercise powers that belong exclusively to regularly constituted civil government. Therefore, their very principles tend to lawlessness and rebellion. The well-established law among civilized nations is, that while a voluntary society has the right to punish its members by exclusion from membership, or by temporary suspension, or by moderate fines voluntarily paid, they have no right to punish corporeally. The moment they lay violent hands upon a member, they usurp the prerogative of the state; and usurpation is of the nature of rebellion. Now, it is a fact that no intelligent person denies, that Masonic law affixes the penalty of death to what Masons do indeed consider the most atrocious of all crimes, but which, in the eye of the civil law, is no crime at all, nor even a misdemeanor; I refer to the violation of the extra-judicial oath that binds the Mason "ever to conceal and never to reveal" the secrets of the order. For this alleged crime, a man cannot even be indicted by a grand jury; yet, every time he takes a Masonic degree, every Mason invokes upon himself a most horrible death as the just punishment for breaking this foolish and illegal obligation; and Captain William Morgan and many others have suffered this murderous penalty at the hands of their brethren. Masons may deny this, if they will, though some of them have acknowledged its truth to me; but it is a part of the history of the country. There are, it is claimed, some six hundred thousand men in America, to-day, who claim this right of inflicting the death penalty on their fellow-citizens; not for murder, or arson, or treason, but for an imaginary crime, unknown to either common or statute law. Shall the church of Christ defend or apologize for such an institution? May God forbid it!

But, while the principles of Freemasonry are, perhaps, more diabolical, in this respect, than those of any other secret society in this country, with the possible exception of the "Clan-na-Gael," the Mafia, and a few other small associations of assassins, yet, in their practical workings, in their actual deeds of darkness, they are completely thrown into the shade by some of the labor organizations of these modern times. These societies have existed in America for at least a hundred years. Whether they have always been secret or not, I am not able to say, not being familiar with their early history. They have, I think, been secret ever since I knew anything about them. These labor organizations claim to be, in a special sense, the friends of the laboring man. This is an honorable position for any man to take, if he is sincere in assuming it. But what do you think of that "Knight of Labor," or member of any other labor union, who stones or clubs another laboring man, not a member of his society, who may be just as needy as himself, and whose only fault is, that he has presumed to step into the vacant place from which the other has voluntarily resigned? For my part, if the Governor should say to me: "Send me the most contemptibly mean man—the most arrant hypocrite to be found in the State of Nebraska,"—I should go straight to that man and say: "Friend, the Governor wants to see thee." If there is in the wide world a body of men that show more unmitigated selfishness, in their corporate capacity, than the most of these labor unions have exhibited, especially within the past few years, I confess I do not know where to look for it.

The right of laboring men, or others, to organize for mutual benefit, I believe no one denies. Whether it is wise for them to do so, is an open question; and many intelligent workingmen prefer to keep away from such unions. It is also freely admitted that men have a right to "strike," when they conceive it to be their interest to do so; though the act of striking in a body, without previous notice to their employers, would hardly pass muster, if squared by the "Golden Rule." But when a body of strikers have voluntarily surrendered their places in a factory or other place of business, and then attempt to prevent other workingmen, who are willing to work, from taking and occupying those places, they occupy a position that is but slightly removed from rebellion; and when they enforce this attempt by violence, or threats of violence, they become fit companions of the highway robber; and when they resist the officers of the law, who are protecting these innocent citizens in their God-given and constitutional right to earn their bread by honest toil, they levy war against the government under which they live, and are guilty of treason. Strikers have done this thing repeatedly within the past few years; and at this very moment the leaders of the recent "Homestead strike" are held under the charge of murder, and, in all probability, will soon be called to face the additional charge of treason.

(To be concluded.)

The Oregon Decision in Favor of the Radicals.—Comments by Bishop Milton Wright.—The Lodge Denounced.

THE OREGON DECISION.

On fourth and fifth pages of this paper, we give in full the opinion of the Supreme Court of Oregon in the Philomath College case. The statement of facts (as found by Judge Pipes) being very lengthy, is omitted, but it will be published in some form hereafter.

The court, besides other important points, holds: (1) That "request" and "two-thirds of the whole society," in the amendment clause of the constitution, means just what those words purport; "request" meaning "the active concurrence of the members, and not a passive acquiescence;" and "two-thirds of the whole society" meaning two-thirds of the enrolled membership. (2) That the commission plan, the commission work, and the vote on that work were all illegal; and that the people were under no obligation to vote at that election. (3) That "the commission, without any authority whatever from the General Conference, and in violation of the express provisions of their warrant, changed the time when the new constitution should go into effect, thus attempting to render any proclamation of the bishops prior to May 13, 1889, unnecessary." (4) That the action of the General Conferences of 1885 and 1889 was legislative and not judicial, and that this body, legislative, was amenable to its own rules; hence, while the Watson vs. Jones decision is good law, it does not apply to this case. (5) That minorities have "some rights that majorities are bound to respect;" that the minority "has a right to believe that the majority will be governed by its highest law, the constitution;" That the idea is to be rejected, "that the majority could declare that white was black in defiance of the terms of the constitution, and it was so, and the minority had no remedy except to withdraw from the society."

The opinion is very able, and will well repay a careful perusal by our readers.—Christian Conservator.

LIBERAL BUNCOMBE.

In what the Telescope styles a "lucid" article, Rev. W. J. Shuey expatiates upon the Oregon decision. George Francis Train may, at some time, have been as wild and reckless. Mr. Shuey does not hesitate to affirm what he and every other well-informed person knows to be not true; (1) That the Oregon decision does not affect the Chinese Mission property in Portland; (2) That not one civil right is involved in our church cases—as if property rights are not civil rights; (3) That the General Conference of 1885 interpreted Article IV. of the constitution to mean that two-thirds of those voting (though less than one-fourth of the enrolled membership of the church) could authorize a change of the constitution; and that Article II. Section 4 permitted a change of the confession of faith; while that very body said those constitutional provisions "are so far-reaching as to render them extraordinary and impracticable as articles of constitutional law;" (4) That the General Conference of 1889 judicially decided that the commission plan, the commission work, and the vote on that work, complied with and fulfilled those constitutional provisions; while that General Conference said nothing whatever of that kind; (5) That the majority may pass from the legal and true constitution and confession, and go under a new and illegal constitution and confession (and excise all the preachers and members who did not do that illegal and revolutionary thing) and yet remain the only true church, while those loyal to the true constitution and confession become outsiders!—this being Mr. Shuey's pet invention, and a very small one even for him; (6) That religious freedom gives a majority a right to do such revolutionary things at its pleasure, thus violating a solemn covenant, and that if restrained by civil courts from diverting church property from the constitution and confession under which it was acquired, that majority thereby becomes entitled to the crown of martyrdom!—whining martyrdom like that of polygamists, when lust is restrained by wholesome law!

Does Mr. Shuey, smarting under defeat, not know that his statements are false? Evidently he thinks he owns the whole earth, and that it is cruel in the Supreme Court of Oregon to say nay. —Milton Wright, in Christian Conservator.

RADICAL UNITED BRETHREN AND THE LODGE.

North Michigan Radical United Brethren in Christ—Conference of North Michigan, 1892:

As a conference we re-affirm our loyalty to anti-secrecy principles. We believe the organized secret orders to be a menace to good government, against the spirit of our free institutions, and a mighty hinderance to impartial justice in our courts. We sympathize with labor, but can in no way sanction the effort of labor orders to better the condition of the laborer by enforcing strikes, by which the law is ignored and the life and property of our citizens is made insecure. We believe the thousands of dollars annually spent in the lodges by professed Christians should be given to a higher and holier end; that the church of Jesus Christ suffers, while the orders grow fat, in many a community, because of this constant flow of money into the treasury of the worldly lodge. Jesus said, "Ye are not of the world." Then why, we ask, should Christians give their wealth in the maintenance of an institution which is strictly worldly in its spirit and objects? "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and I will receive you," and ye shall be my sons and daughters."

Missouri Radical United Brethren in Christ—Conference of Missouri, 1892:

WHEREAS, We believe secret societies, which do their business in the dark, or under cover, are a just cause for suspicion; and,

WHEREAS, The many eruptions in our country to-day, causing bloodshed and distress, are but some of the results of secrecy; therefore

Resolved, That we adhere more closely than ever to our principles on this point, and that we stand aloof and free from all appearance of evil.

ANTI-SECRECY IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The following anti-secrecy declaration was unanimously adopted by the Erie Annual Conference of the United Brethren in Christ (Radical) September 17, 1892:

As the years go by, we are more fully convinced that our position in opposition to all secret societies is right.

In view of the late developments at Homestead, with its savage attacks on men seeking to earn their daily bread; with its burden thrown upon the innocent law-abiding citizens; with the sight of the lonesome homes made so by the calling away of dear ones to defend the honor of this Commonwealth in its endeavor to restrain the selfishness and despotism of morally illegal societies holding charter from the State;

We, as law-abiding citizens, in the name of God, of righteousness and equal rights, demand that the Legislature of this Commonwealth cause the surrender of all secret society charters, that its people may live in that peace and unity with the equal rights and privileges contemplated by the fathers of this great republic, to which all State constitutions should be framed in harmony; and we earnestly ask the assistance of all churches to accomplish this end.

As a conference, we will cheerfully acquiesce in our restrictive rule and will so endeavor to instruct all persons coming to our communion, that there shall not from misapprehension be any cause of friction.

THE PRESIDENTS ON MASONRY.

John Adams, Second President, never joined a secret lodge. This is the statement of John Quincy Adams, his son, Sixth President, who said: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

James Madison, Fourth President, said: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

Millard Fillmore, Thirteenth President, with others, said: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Dare any of the Presidential candidates in the approaching election as frankly denounce the fraternity?

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Fads in walking.—Venal voters in New Hampshire.—The Maine farmers and prohibition.—A Romish Chautauqua.—A cowardly church.—The D. K. E. at Yale.

Occasionally the firmest believer in the Bible account of man's origin will feel his orthodoxy rudely shaken and catch himself leaning involuntarily towards the Darwinian theory. A friend pointed out to me, the other day, that a variation of the "Grecian bend" of former years was now afflicting many of our foolish young men and maidens to an alarming extent. "I call it the 'Harvard bend,'" she said laughingly, "because I noticed it first among the Cambridge collegians, but I was not aware it had spread to Wellesley." As the name imports, it causes its victim to walk with an insane bend of the body, which sets you to wondering what ape first originated such a fashion for all his or her fellow-apes to imitate. Others, with a concentration of energy worthy of a better cause, have taken up what they call the "English walk," though I fancy cultured English people of either sex would be the first to disown such a style of gait. This is the opposite of the "bend," Harvard or Grecian, and consists in holding the whole body unnaturally stiff and rigid, with the arms akimbo and the feet toeing in, reminding one slightly of a frog trying to walk on its hind legs. Fashion is the modern Circe. She turns her devotees into any shape she chooses.

New Hampshire seems to be as deep in the mud as Connecticut in the mire, as regards venal voters. Those towns which have the smallest proportion of such, according to recent authority, are those where the inhabitants consist chiefly of native Americans, and where King Agur's prayer, "Give me neither poverty nor riches," has been, in the case of most of them, fulfilled. Kensington, a small town in the southeastern part, with only 140 polls, has about 20 per cent of venal voters, and Seabrook, 60 or 75 per cent, the prices at which men will sell their votes ranging from two dollars upwards, and as low, in a few cases, as fifty cents. It is no mere coincidence, by the way, that Rockingham county, where Frank Jones' great breweries are located, has the worst record in this respect of any part of New Hampshire. These facts must come home to every thoughtful mind with an ominous significance at this particular time, when, if ever, our country needs not only voters with clean hands, but who will rise above mere material issues, and cast their ballots for truth and righteousness, without stopping to think whether they will be richer or poorer for it.

"The farmers of Maine," says a leading paper in that State, "were never so little in debt, and census statistics show that they are rapidly paying off their mortgages." This does not look as if the farmers suffered from prohibition, even if not allowed to economize their surplus crop of apples by working it up into cider. This was the scarecrow which lost us so many prohibition votes in Massachusetts at the time the constitutional amendment was pending. In the tobacco-growing districts, large Republican gains are expected, simply because that party, by levying the high duty of two dollars per pound on Sumatra tobacco, "protects" this special industry;—a fair specimen of the selfish and mercenary motives which will influence thousands of country voters to-day, whose only thought is to guard their pocket-books. Is it strange that the next step is a downward plunge into the lowest depths of venality and corruption? I speak advisedly in saying "the lowest," when in one country town in New Hampshire a native employed as a farm servant, when asked whether his father and brothers were Democratic or Republican, answered in all innocence, "I don't jest know ex-act'ly; yer see, folks mostly sell their votes in Seabrook!"

It looks at present writing as if the prohibition vote in New England, especially around Boston, would be smaller than usual. The high moral character of Harrison will partly account for this decrease, as well as the unwise action of some of our Third party campaigners, to whom a certain saying, current I believe among the colored people, that "easy blows kill the devil," might be very appropriately quoted. The distrust which the anti-Romanist party feel for Cleveland and his Tammany allies is another strong factor in the situation. We do not want to see again in the Presidential chair one who is hand-and-glove with the papal See, and who disgraced the whole country by sending a government vessel, with flying colors, to greet the papal nuncio. At the Columbus celebration in Chelsea the Father Matthew Society tried to break through the lines of the public school children as they were marching in procession, and only the interference of the police prevented the attempt from succeeding. "This effort of adult Catholics to prevent Protestant children from taking part in the Columbus-day celebration," says the Woman's Voice, "shows the spirit which animates Romanism." Spirits of another kind animated the priestly participants in the late dinner of the Alumni of the College of our Lady of Angels, given at Hartford, Conn., recently. Sherry, claret, Roman punch, cognac, et cetera, flowed like water, according to press reports.

The Romanists have been trying to set up a summer school at New London, Conn., on the Chautauqua basis; a ridiculously incongruous idea when one considers that Chautauqua stands for freedom of thought and popular education in its widest sense; and, in short, for everything that Rome especially antagonizes. A Romish Chautauqua would be an oak growing in a thimble. Think of the members, instead of an examination, being obliged to subscribe to a creed prepared by the Jesuit vice-president, and instead of being given a diploma, allowed to kiss the archbishop's hand!

The cowardly attitude of many of our Protestant churches was well-illustrated lately by the course of the Committee of the First Unitarian church in Brighton, which was promised to the women voters of Boston for a public meeting. Speakers were engaged, and invitations sent out, when, at the eleventh hour, the women were notified that they could not have the Brighton church, the only reason being given that "the meeting would be liable to engender sectarian feeling;" it might have been added, "especially just on the eve of election." Edward Bellamy sounded a true note of warning when he wrote that "the condition in which the 400th anniversary of Columbus' discovery finds America should suggest, instead of jubilation and cannon-firing, a season of fasting and prayer that God may save the great experiment of human liberty from a disastrous ending."

The sad death, last spring, of Wilkins Rustin, the Yale student who died of injuries received at his initiation into the D. K. E., has not prevented that society from breaking its agreement to abolish all blind-folding and rough play. The Faculty, learning that they recently took a candidate blindfolded through the street—the same way in which young Rustin met his death—has presented to the students three alternatives: Either to give up their organization entirely; to become simply an open social body, or to submit to constant surveillance from the Faculty. It is said that the students intend to adopt the second, and become an open organization; but how long before secrecy will creep in? I doubt very greatly whether the D. K. E. either can or will reform. The traditions of its past are all against any such supposition. In fact, the authorities of Harvard and Yale deal with this question much as our legislators deal with the saloon, and might, like these latter gentlemen, save themselves an immense amount of trouble if they would adopt the only true method of solution—Prohibition with a big P.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9, 1892.

Mr. Cleveland is elected, and Washington has again passed through the excitement which people appear to regard as necessarily consequent during the two or three days preceding a national election day, and upon that day and night. There was certainly no good reason why there should have been any undue excitement in Washington or elsewhere on account of the election held yesterday. Nevertheless, it was here; and among the thousands who thronged the places where telegraphic reports were made public, it required no special effort to see its demoralizing effect. Red faces, blood-shot eyes, excited voices and other certain indications that intoxicating liquor had been freely drunk, were all too plentiful. This is bad enough, but there is more to come, showing the demoralizing effect of election-day excitement.

Just as every drunkard has to begin his downward career by taking his first drink, so every gambler has to begin by making his first bet; and the Washington young man who passed through the excitement of last night and the continual invitations to do one or both that were pressed upon him everywhere he went, with the single exception of the Y. M. C. A. building (where by the thoughtfulness of the managers the returns were bulletined outside by means of a stereopticon, while a continuous Gospel meeting was kept up on the inside of the building), without doing either, won a victory over himself that is certain to prove valuable in his future contests with temptation. I am satisfied from an observation covering a number of Presidential elections that not a few of the young men of Washington who have fallen by the wayside took their first drink or made their first bet while demoralized from the effect of the excitement prevalent on our crowded streets while the telegraphic returns of a Presidential election were being received.

While it is hardly possible to entirely eradicate the excitement at such times, it is easily possible to prevent much of the attendant demoralization. It is in the power of the authorities under the present laws to prevent all open betting, for every individual in the long list of names published in the local papers as having made bets has made himself liable to conviction and punishment under the gambling laws of the District. The distinction is too fine for me, but there are numbers of reputable citizens who would consider it a disgrace to be found in a gambling hell betting on the so-called games of chance, and yet find no difficulty in convincing their consciences that betting on an election is entirely harmless and quite the gentlemanly thing to do. A bet is a bet; I see no difference between one made on the street or in the parlor of a private residence and one made in the lowest gambling dive. No man can make a wager of any sort, no matter what his surroundings may be, without, in his heart, becoming a gambler.

Another thing that the authorities might, if so disposed, do to lessen the demoralization on such occasions would be to order the closing of all bar-rooms in Washington on the day and night of all national elections. A lawyer of wide local experience informs me that the Commissioners have ample authority under the present laws, loose as they are in many respects, to do this. The liquor dealers would, of course, oppose any such order, for the traffic of election day and night is very profitable to them; and, if it is fair to judge from the actions in the past of a majority of the present Board of Commissioners, the opposition of the liquor interest would outweigh the wishes of other people.

A friend makes a suggestion, which in view of the success that attended the Y. M. C. A. innovation, in bulletining the election returns at its building, is worth thinking about. He says: "I feel certain that much of the gambling and drunkenness of which I was a most unwilling witness last night might be prevented by lessening the number of people on the streets, and that it might easily be done by having election returns bulletined at every church in the city, thus gratifying the feverish curiosity of the people to know the result without compelling them to come into contact with the professional gamblers who frequent the corridors of the big hotels and the bar-rooms."

The Government of the United States performed an act of justice this week which shows it to be the possessor of the moral courage, which so many individuals lack, to humiliate itself when in the wrong by apologizing to a government weaker than itself. The apology was officially tendered to the Canadian government by the Secretary of State, the cause therefor being the recent action of American officials in capturing and taking through a portion of the Dominion of Canada a man charged with having committed a crime in Maine. This apology was truly the act of a Christian nation, and reflects more credit upon those who made it than would the winning of a great battle.

REFORM NEWS.

BRAVE NEW ENGLANDERS.

We recall a time when, in our nation's peril, brave men were needed, and, thank God! they were not wanting. There were some, however, who when "weighed in the balance were found wanting." You possibly knew some who were loud in protestations of valor, who, when the crisis came, after mature reflection, decided to keep quiet. Canada had special attractions for that kind of patriots, as furnishing a safe refuge until it was settled whether the "bear or the butcher should have the meat."

There was a loquacious patriot out West, who raised a company and marched to the front with flying colors. Coming suddenly one day upon a squad of rebels, without waiting for orders the boys sent them flying in hot haste. Looking about for their captain, he was discovered securely hidden behind a log, doubtless greatly elated at his first victory over the enemy. He was loyal and patriotic, of course, for he had raised a company and led his command right into the enemy's country. He resented indignantly the charge of cowardice. His was simply wise generalship—that "discretion which is the better part of valor." Why peril so valuable a life as his own, when the boys could take the exposure and do the fighting? The boys, however, uncharitably took a different view of the case, and after hearing from them the captain resigned his commission. Strange to say, the country was saved without further valuable services from him.

Happily such cases were rare during the late war, and they ought to be more exceptional in the moral and spiritual conflict upon us. An army is besieging the citadel of our liberties under command of the "secret empire." Directed by one mind and with one aim, the two grand divisions have but a single end in view. One wing of this vast army receives orders from the "Black Pope;" the other from the "Most Pious Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General."

The encroachments of this grand army upon our Republican institutions, our public schools, our Protestant faith and our prayer-meetings, are calling for brave men and women to repel their insidious attacks. New England has detected the approach of one wing of this host, and her brave men and women have sounded the alarm. Now they are kindling signal fires upon her high places. But while looking toward Rome many have failed to note the stealthy approach of the other wing of this army that has come unchallenged even into our halls of legislation and the sanctuaries of our holy religion. This is no time to compromise with the Jesuit, who is traditionally the friend of despotism, ignorance and lawlessness, but it is the time to wage a righteous warfare upon his twin brother, the titled, sworn and pompous hierarchy of the "secret empire," whose principles are as odious, and whose records are as black, as those of the order of Jesuits.

Do you ask, What can I do? Allow me to suggest:

1. You can pray for God's blessing upon the general work, and especially upon the New England Convention. Pray that God will "send out his light and his truth" upon this subject, until those who are "at ease in Zion," and silent in the pulpits, shall find rest only in testifying to the truth and preaching the Gospel in its fullness.

2. You can announce the meeting in your pulpit or prayer-meeting, and urge the people to attend, and in many places secure a notice in your local paper.

3. You can send for tracts and bills to distribute among your neighbors, and personally invite them to come.

4. If you are in health, you can probably attend yourself, and by proper effort bring others with you.

5. Whether present or absent, you can give something to aid in meeting the expenses of the work, and be both richer and happier for your offering to the Lord.

6. If it is not possible for you to attend, you can write a brief letter to the convention, showing your interest and which side you are on.

The time is at hand. Only a few days until Dec. 14th and 15th. Make up your mind and "do what you do quickly."

May the Spirit guide you in all your ways.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

HOW SHALL WE REACH THE CHURCHES?

OUR REFORM BELONGS TO THEM.

This question reverses a popular theme which the churches have long been agitating—"How shall we reach the masses?" The best answer they have found is ours:

GO TO THEM!

The judgment of Dr. Pentecost, given the other day as he was starting back to his London pulpit, is that of all who desire the success of the National Christian Association. "This reform belongs to the churches. They should take it up and bear its responsibilities," was his remark.

It is not a new question in our councils. On the 23d of March, 1889, the N. C. A. Board voted that President J. Blanchard, then editor of the Cynosure, "be requested to attend meetings of various ecclesiastical bodies and speak where opportunity offers." This resolution was at his own suggestion. No one seemed more clearly than he to realize the importance of this mission; and, although he was not permitted to engage personally in it, his frequently expressed desire, and the disposition of a part of his estate, has made a beginning possible.

Important reasons for this work are:

1. The churches of Christ have a mission to maintain a true and pure worship of the true God.

2. The lodges practice and promote false worship to the farthest limit possible in a land of open Bibles.

3. Mere self-defense—the struggle for existence—therefore demands that the churches take up this reform.

4. It is the most economical way of salvation from the lodge: since (1) every pastor can more or less do the work of a paid lecturer, and do it better. (2) The expense of gathering an audience in a hired hall is little needed when the ordinary Sabbath congregations shall have the truth fairly presented to them.

5. When all the churches of Christ shall come to hold the lodge as an enemy, by no means to be tolerated inside their gates, the reform we urge shall have been largely accomplished.

These are among the considerations on which the work of the N. C. A. Corresponding Secretary, for a few months past, has been based. Up to Nov. 1st I had visited personally nineteen church assemblies and twenty-six churches, beside correspondence with two or three times as many more. These church bodies have appointed, or agreed to appoint, some twenty representatives to the N. C. A. annual meeting, and it is hoped as many more can be secured. This will be a deputation, not selected by the Board or its committee, but by authority of the churches themselves. It is responsible to the churches; represents them; reports to them; and, if God shall give us grace, will inspire something of the prophetic zeal among them. It will, in denominations where the voice of warning is seldom or never heard, gain a hearing. It will give the enthusiasm of co-operation, and the consciousness of the power of numbers as well as of the power of God.

The effort has not been in vain, though made in weakness, and not reaching the success we would be glad to report. The following notes and extracts from letters mark the interest felt in this work among the churches:

From the secretary of a Classis of the Reformed Church in America:

In reference to your communication to the Classis of Wisconsin on the subject of secret, oath-bound anti-Christian societies, Classis took the following action:

That Rev. J. P. DeJong be and hereby is appointed to represent Classis at the annual meeting of the Association.

That our pastors be encouraged to give instruction in regard to the dangers of secret, oath-bound societies as they may deem best, and that in this matter they be referred to former acts of Classis.

The Iowa yearly meeting of Friends received the memorial of the N. C. A., and adopted a resolution which was printed in the Cynosure of October 27—page 8.

The secretary of the Illinois Conference of the Swedish Mission churches, Rev. H. Sundquist, reports:

As to our action in regard to your proposals concerning secret societies, I am glad to inform you, that we, on reasons presented, adopted a resolution declaring our conference not in favor of such organizations.

The General Conference of these churches, meeting in Rockford, Ill., appointed two representatives.

The Corresponding Secretary of the Iowa Christian Convention (Disciple church) suggests that an arrangement might be made to secure a hearing at some future meeting of that body.

Action of the United Presbyterian Synod of Iowa:

The subtle tendency of organized, oath-bound secrecy in destroying the influence of Christianity has been manifested in recent events as never before. The National Christian Association with headquarters at Chicago represents in theory our sentiments in opposition to these orders. Therefore,

Resolved, That we appoint a representative to meet in conference with other representatives of church and ministerial assemblies at the annual meeting of this Association for consultation and such action as shall seem best to promote the kingdom of God and save men from the lodge.

The delegate provided for in the above resolution is Rev. James Parker, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

From the secretary of a Classis of the Reformed Church in America meeting in April, 1893:

We will be glad to have you come and address the Classis on the subject proposed. I personally am very much in favor of the movement, and have no doubt that the Classis will act favorably in the matter proposed in your memorial. May God speed the time when we shall know of the secret, oath-bound societies as a matter of past history only, such as the slavery question in this country now is. Your society will accomplish the greatest work of the age if successful, and certainly will speed the coming of the kingdom of Christ. May God grant it!

A pastor of the Primitive Methodist church writes:

We have had the subject discussed in our ministerial association meeting, but most of our ministers are members either of the Odd-fellow or Freemason lodges, or both. I wish most sincerely that some thoroughly posted speaker could visit our conference (May, 1893) and address us on the subject. If you can help us in this respect, please do so.

This article must not be prolonged. I trust it will place before the readers of the Cynosure one branch of the N. C. A. work, in which I ask for their deepest interest and most earnest prayers. What God will do with it we may not now know, but confidently believe he will make this agency useful in promoting the kingdom of Christ.

FROM BRO. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

KNOTTSVILLE, Ky., Nov. 9, 1892.

We are now at the mouth of Green River, Kentucky, where about two dozen or more houseboats are the homes of the people. There is no church here, but from the interest manifested, I think that if the right man could stay here, one could be built within a year. There is, also, no Sunday-school, but I leave Sunday-school papers to

CORRESPONDENCE.

EXCITED FREEMASONS.

PHOENIX, Arizona, Nov. 5, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have received the last Cynosure, containing the sermon of Rev. J. M. Foster, and I wish you would publish it in pamphlet form.... I consider it a master-piece, and just what we need.

Since I last wrote to you I have lectured here and have terribly stirred up the wrath of the Freemasons, so that my life is in danger. I have numerous friends, also, but they are mostly afraid to speak out or act. I had but little idea that there was so much devil here until lately, but I shall not back down, or cease to expose their foolery. So the howling will continue, but I have won over a large number of lodge-men, and that is what angers the Masons. Yours,

J. K. GLASSFORD.

THE XEROPHAGISTS AND THE MOPSES.

Nov. 7, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In the Cynosure of Nov. 3, 1892, is a description of the Xerophagists, a quondam Masonic society of Italy, in precisely the words which Mackey employs in his Masonic Dictionary, the Bible of Freemasonry. I will add, in the words of the same author, a description of the Mopses, a similar German society, and a word of explanation and comment from another source:

"In 1738 Pope Clement XII. had issued a bull, condemning and forbidding the practice of the rites of Freemasonry. Several brethren in the Catholic States of Germany, unwilling to renounce the order, and yet fearful of offending the ecclesiastical authority, formed, in 1740, under the name of Mopses, what was pretended to be a new association, devoted to the papal hierarchy, but which was in truth nothing else than Freemasonry under a less offensive appellation. It was patronized by the most illustrious persons of Germany, and many princes of the empire were its Grand Masters. The title is derived from the German word mops, signifying a young mastiff, and was indicative of the mutual fidelity and attachment of the brethren, these virtues being characteristic of that noble animal.

"In 1776, the Mopses became an androgynous order, and admitted females to all the offices, except that of Grand Master, which was held for life. There was, however, a Grand Mistress, and the male and female heads of the order alternately assumed, for six months each, the supreme authority."—Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry.

"Twice, at least, within Masonic history, by Mackey's admission, has Masonry worked 'under another name and occupation.' The first instance was as the Mopses, the Mastiffs, in Germany, on the promulgation of the first bull against the order, when it first assumed the role and title of the handmaid of religion, or auxiliary of the church, to preserve existence. The second was in Italy, on the same occasion and for a similar reason, as the Xerophagists, or dry livers, the first pretended Masonic temperance society. It still perseveres on both lines, for it performs religious rites to perpetuate its claims of being a handmaid, and has created temperance orders without stint to buttress itself. In the first-named country, it finally became androgynous, which, apparently, annihilates all claims of not initiating women. But, perhaps, the initiations had not yet reached the point that requires the exclusion of females. This, perhaps, may suggest the source of the Italian societies of the present day. They are the Xerophagists or their successors. The Mopses, perhaps, suggested the androgynous character of the Illuminates, or the latter was the survival of the former."—My Experiences with Secret Societies, with Key to Masonry, page 79—See Cynosure. *

LITERATURE.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE SECRET SERVICE.

I have just been reading a book of 205 pages, entitled "Autobiography of Henri LeCaron, the Spy, Clan-na-Gael Center, Fenian Commander, Land-League Orator, but Always a British Detective." For twenty-five years he was in the employ of the British government as a detective. In this capacity he joined the Fenian movement, and became an officer, all the while reporting everything that was said and done. Then he joined the Clan-na-Gael, took their oaths, and reported all the doings of their secret conclave.

This method of procedure is entirely unjustifiable. It is treason to truth, and trampling under foot the sacred ordinance of the oath. It is gross sacrilege.

The revelations that he makes are shocking. Who would have suspected that T. V. Powderly, the president of the secret order known as "The Knights of Labor," is a member of the Clan-na-Gael? Here is what he said in a Clan-na-Gael convention, held in the club-room of the Palmer House, Chicago, in 1881: "The killing of English robbers and tyrants in Ireland, and the destruction by any and all means of the capital and resources, which enables them to carry on their robberies and tyrannies, is not a needless act. Hence I am in favor of the torch for their cities, and the knife for their tyrants, till they agree to let Ireland severely alone. London, Liverpool, Manchester and Bristol in ashes may bring them to view it in another light."

Patrick Egan (according to LeCaron) was the head of the Fenian movement; personally responsible for the Phoenix Park murders; stole $100,000 of the Land-League money, and is to-day a fugitive from justice of the English government; and yet President Harrison appointed him our minister to Chili. A greater insult to honor and justice could not be offered.

As to the order Clan-na-Gael, the author says: "The ritual and forms of initiation were framed entirely upon Masonic precedent; and, to the vast majority of the members of the clan, the statement will come, no doubt, as a great surprise, that the much-vaunted secret forms of the Masonic order need be secret to them no longer, inasmuch as that, when being admitted to a Clan-na-Gael club, they were going through the same forms and ceremonies as attached themselves to that great source of mystery and wonderment in the eyes of the non-elect, the Masonic brotherhood. I have often laughed to myself at the surprise shown by some Masons on the occasion of their initiation to Clan-na-Gael clubs—for there are Masons in the clan—at being brought once more into contact with the familiar procedure. One great feature of similarity exists between the two ceremonies. In both the candidate is impressed with a deep sense of awe and respect, to learn subsequently that nothing very mysterious or wonderful is to come within his knowledge."

Though the effect is the same, however, the causes are very different. In one case, that of the Mason, nothing very strange happens, or is committed to his secrecy, for the simple reason that the practice of brotherly love and charity requires no unusual strain, either on his powers of wonder or reserve; while in the other the poor confiding Irishman is simply intended to play the part of a dupe, to move and subscribe to order, but to be trusted in no single regard, until by jobbery or manipulation he works his way to the higher ranks of the organization.

J. M. FOSTER.

Boston, Oct. 31, 1892.

THE BEASTS OF EPHEBUS. By the Rev. James Brand, D.D. With an Introduction by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. 8vo., pp. 206. Chicago: The Advance Publishing Co. Price, in cloth, $1.

This is nominally a book for young Christians; in reality, it is a book for every well-regulated family, as a guide to a better way of living. With Christianity as its basis, it shows the numerous evils that are found in modern society, and the necessity of avoiding them. The tendency of its teachings is upward and onward—the progression instituted by the Christian religion, and that excellence of life and character which flows from conversion. Of course the converted young man or woman will more highly appreciate the benefits of overcoming the works of the flesh and of darkness that beset them in their every-day life, and will by prayer and supplication seek strength to conquer these "beasts," while "others, seeing their good works," may also be led to glorify God by following their example.

The author was long a faithful and fruitful minister to the students of Oberlin College, where he had unsurpassed opportunities for learning the perils which most threaten young persons, and of preparing their minds to resist the blandishments of evil. Its fifteen chapters are so many timely warnings against the enticements of the city, love of money, bad books, the theater, card-playing, social clubs, popular dances, misspent nights and Sundays, Sabbath desecration, impurity, tobacco, infidel associations, etc.

Of the book, President Clark says: "Only a pastor who has mourned over mangled lives and wasted possibilities in youth could have written such a book. From personal experience I know that some of the questions here treated perplex many young Christians more than any other problems of the day. I wish that every young person in all the land might read it."

A TREATISE ON MORTGAGE INVESTMENTS; Applicable to Investments Generally in Farm and City Property Mortgages; and showing how to make an intelligent and judicious selection of such securities and attend to the details of such investments. By Edward N. Darrow, Minneapolis, Minn. One volume, flexible covers; pp. 50. Price, $1.00.

The processes upon which the author enlarges relate to brokers and their business; how to make proper application for securities; definition, illustration, desirability and abuse of debentures; guarantees, and the character and force of mortgage securities, etc. We are not aware that the field covered by this book has heretofore been treated so thoroughly in a popular form; and its comprehensiveness tends to make it all the more desirable for the use of those for whom it is intended—those who are seeking safe investments.

It is for sale by the L. Kimball Publishing Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

CURRENT MAGAZINES.

The Arena for November has several articles of peculiar interest, but which may provoke healthy criticism. These are: Lord Salisbury's Afghan Policy, by Rev. Thos. P. Hughes, D. D.; The New Education and its Practical Application, by Prof. Jos. R. Buchanan, M. D.; Psychical Research—Its Status and Theories; The Bacon and Shakespeare Controversy, continued, by Edwin Reed; Asiatic Cholera, with Practical Suggestions, by Henry Sheffield, M. D., and Alcohol in its relation to the Bible, by Henry A. Hartt, M. D. Other papers are as follows: The West in Literature, by Hamlin Garland; The Volume of Currency, by N. A. Dunning; In the Year 10,000, by Will N. Harben; Dawn in San Diego, by Joaquin Miller, with a portrait of the poet; A Scrap of College Lore, by Will A. Dromgoole; The Poet's Prayer, by Gerald Massey; Some of Civilization's Silent Currents, by B. O. Flower; Books of the Day, etc. Boston: The Arena Publishing Co.

The Social Economist for November opens with an article by Mr. Geo. Gunton, the editor, on the Industrial Decline of Lancashire (Eng.), tracing it to the economic policy of Great Britain, based primarily on free trade and low home wages. In Lancashire the sign of industrial cessation, and even decay, is generally apparent. The Incorporation of Trades Unions is discussed by Kemper Bocock; Mr. G. H. Sandison, in the Initial Anarchist, claims that the capitalists, and not the bomb-throwers, are the real anarchists; this tenable position is judiciously criticised by the editor. The old question of Who Pays the Tariff? by an anonymous writer, is reopened; Trades Unions and Civilization defends the organization of labor. Other topics are discussed. A Woman's Commonwealth, by Channing M. Huntington; Current Economic Discussion, What Others Say of Us, and other editorials, close a number of this magazine that appeals to a large constituency of intellectual readers and reformers. Published by the College of Social Economics, 34 Union Square, East, New York City.

On former occasions we have noticed a pleasant little monthly—The Sunny Hour—"published by a boy for boys and girls." We have always liked the spirit and purpose of this contribution to juvenile literature, partly because it is highly creditable as a literary venture by a lad of fifteen, but principally because its young and talented conductor is also the projector and promoter of a noble charity—the providing of shoes to a large number of poor, barefoot children and youth. The latest issue of his magazine tells of his success in the following outburst of gratitude for the blessing that has fallen upon his labors:

"This is a Thanksgiving number. The Sunny Hour gives thanks for many things. It gives thanks that the good Lord has, through noble people, given the money necessary to start the Permanent Barefoot Mission. It gives thanks for the shoes and clothes that it has on hand towards providing the little barefoots this winter. It gives thanks for the friends that are working for it all over the wide world. It gives thanks for the feeling of personal interest that children and parents have for it. It gives thanks that it has no debts, and that it is successful in its little way, and it gives greater thanks that it has been the means of doing its duty towards all the poor and oppressed, who have asked its help. And it not only gives thanks, but praise to His holy name. I would like to say to my readers that faith in prayer has brought its own proof, for I asked that the money for the starting of the Permanent Barefoot Mission might come before Christmas, and it has been given, and the most of it is now paid in."

We are sure that every reader of the Cynosure will love and honor this dear boy, whose name is Tello d'Apéry, and whose address is 18 West Fourteenth street, New York City.

A dollar and a half in hand now, for a subscription to the Cynosure, is better than two dollars a year hence.

OBITUARY.

Died on the 14th of October, ult, Mr. CYRUS PATTON, of Hanna City, Illinois, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. This brother was born in Adams county, Ohio, October 24, 1817, and brought up in the faith and teachings of the Reformed Presbyterian church; but he afterwards joined the United Presbyterians. In early life he was intensely opposed to slavery, and warmly espoused the cause of the slave. In later years he was a zealous promoter of the work of the National Reform Society; a praying and contributing supporter of the N. C. A. in its opposition to secret societies; gave his personal influence and vote in hostility to the liquor traffic, and was also an uncompromising foe to public evils generally. As a fitting close to his long and exemplary career he died in the hope of a crown of eternal life. His death adds another to the list of stalwart reformers who have recently gone to their reward.

LODGE NOTES.

Tennessee, in 1891, had but one I. O. O. F. more than one hundred members—McMinnville Lodge, No. 146, 114 members.

The Grand Master of Ontario, Canada, I. O. O. F., is "pastor of the Methodist church at Bowmansville." Quite unlike some Grand Masters we have known!—Companion.

The Insurance Economist says that Dr. J. T. Husland, of Detroit, chairman of the board of trustees, characterizes the lately exploded "Iron Hall" "as the worst den of thievery he ever got into."

"The Medinah Temple Company, of Chicago," with a capital of $500,000, has been incorporated. The object is to erect a twelve-story building as a home for the Shriners. The upper stories will be in the style of a Mohammedan mosque. On each corner will be a spire-like turret, treated after the Moorish style of architecture.

The German Odd-fellows of New York State recently dedicated their newly enlarged Home at Unionport, Westchester county. The Home derives its support from membership taxes of twenty-five cents per capita annually. In addition to this revenue, fairs and festivals are periodically given by the various lodges to swell the income.—Companion.

In the seventy-three years of the Independent Order of Odd-fellowship, Ohio has only had two of the thirty-two Grand Sires of the order—Thomas Sherlock, of Cincinnati, who served in 1845-47, and Samuel Craighead, of Dayton, who served in '58-'60. Both are still living, honored members of the order they served with distinction. Ohio never had a Deputy Grand Sire.

As a proof of the extravagance of the refreshments in some lodges, there is one lodge which admits owing over £40 for liquid, and over £20 for solid refreshments, and have not the money to pay the bills. We are simply shocked at this revelation, and trust that some stringent steps will be adopted by the Board of General Purposes to purify and curb the festive proclivities of such brethren, who do not reflect credit on the craft.—Sidney (N. S. W.) Freemason.

The Catholic Bishop of Dublin is slightly fanatical. At the time of the holding of the bazaar in aid of the Masonic Female Orphan Schools, he issued a letter to the clergy under his control, to be read in all the churches, that he was determined to excommunicate any Roman Catholic, "with bell and book," who ventured to "subscribe even a poor half-penny to the fund." The munificent sum of more than one hundred thousand dollars was secured for the worthy object, notwithstanding.—I. O. O. F. Companion.

A writer has well said that our order has its enemies, and that they are composed of two classes: one consists of the treacherous, despicable perjurers, who have agreed to be loving towards fellow-men, and then, for the sake of favor or gain, have arrayed themselves as opponents to the most complete and magnifi-

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1892.

Freemasonry is pagan in its origin, devilish in its principles, and hellish in its destiny.—REV. O. P. GIFFORD, of Immanuel Baptist Church, Chicago.

THE RESULT AND ITS CAUSES.

The victory of the Democrats, on Tuesday last, was even more decisive than was first supposed.

Although the "People's party" receives thirty-five electoral votes, Mr. Cleveland will have a decisive majority over all in the electoral college.

The Democratic majority in the House will be substantially maintained, and it now seems probable that after March 4 they will have the Senate.

In looking for the causes of this entire reversal of the verdict of four years ago, we notice:

1. The general conviction that the protective tariff policy of the Republican party, as embodied in the McKinley bill, tended to build up great monopolies, and to enrich the capitalists, at the expense of the farming and laboring interests. The general depression of the agricultural interests; the exceedingly low prices of our great staples, wheat and cotton, and the prevalence of strikes, have all given emphasis to the general protest.

2. The widespread conviction that under Republican rule there is danger of encroachment on the rights of the States by the general government, and that the party in power will, for the sake of securing continued support, unjustly interfere with State and municipal elections. The objection to the Federal-Elections bill that was so warmly endorsed by Mr. Harrison was not that it was designed to secure the ballot to the Negroes of the South, but that it was likely to be used for party purposes in all sections of the country.

Although this measure has been disclaimed in the present campaign, its ghost has haunted the Republicans, and been a strong incentive to Democratic success.

3. The election of Mr. Cleveland is a protest against general extravagance in legislative, and especially in pension appropriations. Mr. Cleveland was doubtless defeated in 1888 by the soldier-vote, and mainly because of his pension vetoes. A more careful consideration of the facts has led to a reconsideration of the popular verdict. There has been manifestly great extravagance in pension legislation and immense frauds in securing pensions. Instead of paying about $28,000,000 for pensions, as was contemplated by Grant and Garfield, we are paying about $150,000,000,—a greater amount than the cost of any standing army in Europe. The popular reaction has vindicated Mr. Cleveland.

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1892.

Since this will not reach the readers of the Cynosure until after the close of the campaign, it is not designed for political effect, but rather to suggest thoughts for the future.

The recent election has been notable for the apathy of the masses of the people. Never, since "the era of good feeling," during the administration of James Monroe, has there been so general a conviction that the result would bring neither remarkable prosperity nor calamity, as now. To all except the professional politician the outlook, while not all that is to be desired, is on the whole quite promising. Experience has shown that no mere change of administration makes any essential difference with the material prosperity of the nation, and that there are other causes far more potent than political influences that do affect us. Of the two candidates of the two great parties, both have given us a respectable administration. Neither of them is wanting either in patriotism or administrative capacity. But Mr. Cleveland had the most votes, and fairly won the contest.

Besides this, there was very little at issue between the two parties—certainly no great moral question. Concerning the tariff, either would not hesitate to collect our national revenues, mainly from duties on imported articles, and either would have such duties so arranged as to afford incidental protection. Concerning the details, neither party is a unit, and neither would make sudden or radical changes. The difference between the Mills and the McKinley bills, on the average, was about seven per cent. With reference to silver coinage, both parties are opposed to free coinage at the present ratio with gold, and both are in favor of it at a true, or commercial, ratio. The Democrats favor a repeal of the tax on State-bank issues, but no one proposes a return to an irresponsible State currency.

There are at least three great questions which demand the practical attention of the American people, and which a "party of great moral ideas" ought to take up and agitate, until a righteous settlement has been reached. They are:

1. What is the duty of the national government towards such citizens as are deprived of the right to vote for members of the House of Representatives and Presidential electors, which right is granted by the Constitution of the United States?

Whether it was wise, at the close of the war to have adopted the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Constitution, which were designed to secure the elective franchise to the ex-slaves, is now a question that it is too late to discuss. The question now is, Whether the Constitution and laws shall be obeyed. That the colored population in several of the States are deprived of their Constitutional rights is unquestioned. It is also true that this deprivation applies not simply to the ignorant, but equally to the intelligent and cultured. It is not a question of education, or capacity, but of race and caste. This question has been so ably discussed by Judge Tourgee, and by President Harrison in his annual message, that it is needless to further consider it, except to say that the real issue is one of law versus anarchy—a question that lies at the basis of every system of civil government.

Because the Lodge bill was not popular, and tended largely to cause the defeat of the Republicans in 1890, the party has abandoned its position, and is now as indifferent to the Constitutional rights of the Negro as all parties formerly were to his natural rights. A party of great moral ideas could never have a nobler plea, or better vantage-ground, than the advocacy of a measure to secure a free vote and a fair count to every American citizen. The Civil Rights law and the Federal-Elections bill, were both Republican measures, but have both been abandoned for the sake of party supremacy.

2. What ought to be the attitude of the general government towards the traffic in intoxicating drinks, and especially towards its continuance in the District of Columbia and the national Territories? The city of Washington, with its more than 1,200 saloons, as well as many other unlicensed places of sale, has a larger percentage of arrests for crime than any other city in the nation. This crime is mainly the result of the liquor traffic. Either of the two great parties could, if they would, enact and enforce a prohibitory law in the District; but, so far from doing this, both parties consent to the illegal traffic in the national capital, where the laws are enacted. Neither Mr. Harrison nor Mr. Cleveland has favored prohibition in the District or anywhere else. Both are committed to high license, and both regard the whole question much as Stephen A. Douglas did the slavery issue. He "did not care whether slavery was voted up or voted down."

Perhaps nothing so strongly indicates the subserviency of both these parties to the liquor interest as the fact that the choice of a commission to inquire into the nature and effect of the liquor traffic has been urged on Congress for the last twenty years, and, though it has passed both houses of Congress, has always been defeated by the liquor interest. Just as all parties once obeyed the behests of the slave-power, so now the drink traffic is the controlling interest in the nation.

3. What should be the attitude of the general government towards secret, oath-bound combinations, and especially where it has exclusive jurisdiction? On this question there is a great and growing moral blindness. The present generation seems to have forgotten the testimony of such eminent men as William Wirt, J. Q. Adams, Daniel Webster, Wm. H. Seward, Thad. Stevens, John C. Spencer, and a host of others, who but a few years ago gave such emphatic testimony against the lodge system. The danger is as real now as then, and the sources of danger are many times multiplied. The solution of the labor question, one of the most intricate problems of our times, is largely, if not solely, a question of secret combinations. So long as either employers or employes selfishly combine to antagonize what are assumed to be opposing interests, so long will there be conflict, in which the weaker party will always be the sufferer. The solution of all questions between labor and capital is either through arbitration or profit-sharing. Each of these plans assumes that there is a community of interests, while the secret labor unions have, as a leading object of education, the antagonizing of capital. The fruits of secret labor measures have been the oppression of non-union laborers, and often practical anarchy. Their immense growth has done nothing to settle the true relation of capital and labor, but rather to intensify the antagonism.

A political party that shall duly consider these questions may not at once secure the approval of the masses, but, it will be in harmony with Him who "was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," and will triumph with him.

THE GERMAN ARMY BILL.

The steadfast resistance which the German reichstag has offered to the emperor's pet project of increasing his already vast army is a most hopeful indication of the continued peace of Europe, and shows the growth of intelligence and self-respect among the masses of the Teutonic race.

The people of Europe generally are beginning to do their own thinking, and have a growing disinclination to be made the targets of bullets and bombshells. Every new invention of fire-arms and ammunition increases the costliness of war, and renders a resort to military conflicts more uncertain and less probable. But what is most important is, that the masses have learned that whether they are on the side of the conquerors or the conquered, they are always the victims, and that they can ill-afford to be the tools of despots, either to murder those who have never done them a wrong, or to be murdered instead.

Christian people, the world over, are not becoming less patriotic, but they are finding that true patriotism does not demand either the practice or the spirit of war.

THE COLUMBIAN EXHIBITION AND AFRICA.

It is proposed, during the Columbian Exhibition, to hold a Christian Conference in reference to Africa, and to consider what can be done to promote the material and spiritual welfare of its people. Such a conference will, of course, be entirely undenominational, but will represent the best and most aggressive element in all of the denominations, and will be aided in its counsels by men of eminent practical wisdom and thorough knowledge of the country.

The Advisory Council, of this which is technically called "An African Ethnological Congress," will include some eminent men, both in Europe and America—such men as De Bragg, Wissman, Schweinfurth, Du Challu, Carl Peters, Sir Samuel Baker, and (not least) H. M. Stanley, who are expected to give it their aid and probably their presence. It can scarcely fail of a vast moral influence.

AN INSULT TO CHRISTIANITY.

The local Directory of the Columbian Exposition has declared, by a vote of 26 to 4, in favor of keeping it open to the public seven days in the week, in direct opposition to the expressed wishes of hundreds of thousands of Christian citizens of the United States, and in utter disregard of the condition attached to the liberal donation of $2,500,000 made by Congress at its last session. The resolution of the Directory is a compromise, evidently influenced by the money of saloon-keepers and other unprincipled disregards of the Christian Sabbath.

The names of the four directors who, in the face of such overwhelming wickedness, dared to resist the motion to open the gates on the Sabbath, are Eugene Pike, I. N. Camp, E. G. Keith and John C. Welling. Mr. Pike is a Chicago capitalist; Mr. Camp is a member of the honored firm of Estey & Camp, organ manufacturers; Mr.

Keith is president of the Metropolitan National Bank, and Mr. Welling is first vice president of the Illinois Central Railway. Let them be duly remembered and respected as men who have the courage of their convictions and dare to do right.

These resolutions (too long to be printed here) are intended to influence Congress to rescind the condition attached to its generous appropriation. If such a measure prevails, the Christian world, at home and abroad, in pursuance of a solemn duty, will, by its protests and absence from the Exposition, place itself nobly on record in defense of Christianity and the honor of its glorious Founder. The Exposition is not a necessity, but a money-machine, engineered by worldly-minded men for their own glory and profit, and will afford an excellent field for the exercise of true Christian self-denial.

THE CONQUEST OF DAHOMEY.

The recent conquest of Dahomey, with the probable capture of Abomey, the capital, is one of the achievements of aggressive warfare which will excite much less than the usual criticism, even among those who regard all war as barbarism. The bad King Behenzin has not only shocked the entire world with his monstrous cruelties, but has repeatedly broken faith with the French authorities whom he thought he could successfully defy. Several hard-fought battles showed great bravery on the part of his army, made up largely of female warriors, but inflicted little direct loss on the French. It is said that great honors await Col. Dodd, who has so skillfully and rapidly carried on the war. But the French will find a more deadly enemy than African armies. The malarial fevers will be harder to overcome than the best disciplined troops. Unless the French can secure the allegiance and co-operation of the people, they will be unable to hold the country as a colony, and, except the gaining of a few trading ports, will have had but a barren victory.

THE NEW ORLEANS STRIKE.

The great strike of workingmen in New Orleans, which was noticed in these columns last week, and in which sixty-three labor unions participated, reached a sullen settlement, for, as at Homestead, last summer, much dissatisfaction is expressed by many of the workingmen. The committee appointed by the unions to confer with employers are openly denounced and charged with treachery in having sold out the labor element. Their leaders, they say, have surrendered every point for which they had contended. A dispatch from New Orleans, on Friday last, reports that business was gradually being resumed. Non-union men were not being discharged to make room for strikers. The colossal failure of the strike means that the backbone of the unions is broken and that the American Federation of Labor is out of business in that State. The strikers visited the governor, who told them that he intended to put a stop to the present condition of affairs and that if it was necessary he would call out 5,000 militia. Immediately after this interview the workingmen learned that the United States district attorney had filed suit against the president of every union on a strike in the United States Circuit Court.

The men are charged with violating the interstate commerce law. The governor sent for the merchants' committee and a consultation was held. The result was that the strike was settled and the strikers were defeated at every point.

A NOTABLE COMMENT.

The volume of SERMONS AND ADDRESSES by the late editor of the Cynosure is receiving excellent commendation from the best reviewers. A host of readers are speaking like words of praise. The book-buying season is now here. Let this multitude of readers be doubled by sending to the N. C. A. for a copy of the volume.

The Independent, of New York, everywhere valued for its book reviews, for pre-eminence in various departments, says of the volume in its October 13th issue:

Dr. Blanchard was a radical. He followed the line of a mechanical logic relentlessly, with full conviction and without flinching. This collection of his sermons..... gives renewed utterance to the preacher's lifelong protest against secret societies and Roman Catholicism, and they stand up for a radical Puritanism, developed not from the Lutheran negation, "It is not forbidden," but from the positive ground, "There is authority for it in the Word." The sermons are always honest, always strong and always refreshing. They are keyed in a gentle tone, and speak persuasively. They reflect the impression of a high-strung and noble man.

—Rev. W. I. Phillips, Field Secretary and Treasurer of the N. C. A., left Chicago, on Monday evening last, for Marengo, Iowa, where he represented the interests of the Association at the annual Iowa State Anti-secrecy Convention, on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman was a visitor in the Cynosure office on Thursday last, on his way to resume pastoral labors in Lind, Waupaca county, Wisconsin. He was laboring in this place last summer when he resigned to begin an agency for the theological department of Berea College. He returns at the earnest request of the people. May his labors be abundantly blessed.

—Prof. Kletsing, of Northwestern College, Naperville, near this city, lately gave the students of that institution a talk on secret orders. His objections to the lodges were well-received. The faculty, students and patrons of this institution are in practical harmony in their estimate of the danger of the secret system. Prof. Kletsing is a member of the N. C. A. Board.

—A good anti-secrecy reformer writes that "Iowa is too much Republican for our work. This party tries to stifle all reforms." We trust the proceedings of the convention of the Iowa State Christian Association (opposed to secret societies, and auxiliary to the N. C. A.), at Marengo, this week, will have a beneficial effect in waking up the drowsy, convincing the doubtful, and bringing the opposition to a sense of its guilt in perpetuating the evils of the lodge. Let the agitation continue.

—Lady Somerset, in an address at Evanston, Ill., last Sunday evening, paid the following graceful tribute to the W. C. T. U.: "When I read the history of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union I know that it has never turned to the right or left. I know its members have often sacrificed even social ties, and I believe they will go on to divine victory, and in after time their work will stand as a monument of what woman has done." The Christian people of the United States will heartily indorse this sentiment.

—The recent election, like many similar ones in bygone years, was prolific in foolish wagers, and the press for a week past has recorded the payment of election bets by wheeling winners about the streets in barrows, sawing cords of wood and other athletic performances, attractive to gaping crowds and suggestive of spirituous beverages and tobacco. The average city man is a betting animal, and finds amusement in the excitement of minor vices and follies. There has been a good deal of money wasted in this manner that might have been more usefully expended.

—As a matter of general intelligence, it is announced that the trial of Rev. Dr. Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, has been further postponed until the 28th inst. The amended charges and specifications against him enter more fully into details than at the previous trial, and occupy thirty-five pages of a good-sized book, but are no less condemnatory than at first. It was reported, not long since, that the seminary proposes to withdraw from its fellowship with the New York presbytery, and in its independent condition support the cause of the doctor.

—The trial of the Pennsylvania State militia officers, who suspended private Iams by the thumbs for insubordination, at Homestead, last summer, resulted in their acquittal. The charges against them were for illegal and cruel punishment; but the ordinary stringency of military discipline does not appear to have been exceeded in this case. Iams receives but little sympathy, and the verdict of the jury meets with general approval. Whenever and wherever authorized military rule is required for the protection of the public peace, while it is always an arbitrary form of government, it (as at Homestead) becomes both tolerant and salutary. Certainly the peaceable citizens of the mob-beleaguered town found it an acceptable alternative.

—Catholics are justly incensed by the remarks addressed personally to Rev. Mr. Maurélian, of that church, by Robert G. Ingersoll, in this city. The clergyman called at a hotel, expecting to find and call upon Bishop Spaulding. By a blunder, the clergyman was ushered into a room in which he encountered Col. Ingersoll and several other persons. "I asked," he states, "if Bishop Spaulding were in the room, to which he replied: 'No, sir; Bishop Spaulding is not here.' I then remarked that there must have been a mistake at the office, for I was told Bishop Spaulding awaited me in Room 33. This same gentleman, without giving me a moment's time to excuse myself and leave, then continued: 'But I am a bishop; I am a pope; I am Colonel Robert Ingersoll; don't you see the danger into which you have fallen?' And this was said in a loud tone, with all the emphasis and sarcasm possible, and it naturally provoked a laugh at my expense among the ladies and gentlemen present." Col. Ingersoll's "pleasantry" is usually too caustic to be agreeable.

—One of the missionary secretaries in Chicago has had some experience with the lodges in the trans-Mississippi region. He says that in locating young pastors he used to advise them if they combatted Freemasonry, to be sure and kill it; and then if it killed them they should have a monument. In one case a young pastor was sent to a remote country church which worshiped in the only upper-story hall in the place. Because of its location the same hall was seized upon by the Masonic lodge, and its meetings were held on Saturday evenings. The insignia of the lodge were left about the pulpit, and made an inglorious display on the Sabbath, like the Roman eagles in the Holy Place of the Jerusalem temple. The seats were removed to the sides of the room, and tobacco juice and cigar stubs smeared the floor. The young man was horrified. The lodge trappings were removed, but only when he had emphatically ordered it. At length, when a drunken Masonic spew was left on the floor he could endure it no longer, and denounced the violation of the sanctity of the house of God and condemned the lodge as degrading to the soul and body of man. As a result the Freemasons picked him up and dropped him over the fence, so to speak, and went on with the lodge infamy.

M. N. BUTLER'S WORK IN MISSOURI.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am making a re-canvass of part of Missouri, searching out old friends and listing new ones for future co-operation. The divide and nullification of the United Brethren church by the Liberals has made it necessary to revise our register, as some who were once loyal to this great cause are now in the ranks of the enemy and marching under the banner of darkness and anti-Americanism.

At Eagleville, Harrison county, it cheered me greatly to meet Bro. George C. Moore, J. Mumma, George F. Pierson, and that bold uncompromising friend of truth, Elder B. F. Miller. They gave me a hearty welcome and a hospitality most cordial. Then it did me good to sell copies of the "American Handbook" to Rev. L. O. Markel, the M. E. pastor, Rev. J. O. Whitworth, the South M. E. minister, and Elder Willis Allen, of the Christian church, in whose place of worship a Bible-reading was given on the night after the national election. All the ministers are square on the lodge issue, and are reading up; so that, all-in-all, this trip promises good, as at Eagleville and Andover literature was left at the farm-houses for miles around, giving the cause an effective hearing that could be had in no other way.

At the latter place Bro. Wm. Thompson, Wm. Harroff, Jacob and Conrad Poush, and others, are firm for the right. A Bible-reading was given on Friday night to an interested audience in Bethel church. But more anon.

M. N. BUTLER.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

THE HOME.

HAD I BUT KNOWN.

Had I but known that nothing is undone
From rising until setting of the sun,
That full-fledged words fly off beyond our reach.
That not a deed brought forth to life dies ever;
I would have measured out and weighed my speech,
To bear good deeds had been my sole endeavor—
Had I but known.

Had I but known how swiftly speed away
The living hours that make the living day,
That 'tis above delay's so dangerous slough
Is hung the luring wisp-light of to-morrow:
I would have seized time's evanescent now!
I would be spared this unavailing sorrow—
Had I but known.

Had I but known to dread the dreadful fire
That lay in ambush at my heart's desire,
Where from it sprang and smote my naked hand,
And left a mark forever to remain;
I would not bear the fire's ignoble brand,
I would have weighed the pleasure with the pain—
Had I but known.

Had I but known we never can repeat
Life's spring-time freshness or its summer-heat,
Nor gather second harvest from life's field,
Nor aged winter change to youthful spring;
To me life's flowers their honey all would yield,
I would not feel one wasted moment's sting—
Had I but known!

THE SURPRISES OF LIFE.

It has pleased Him who gives us life, and who takes it away, to diversify it with a series of surprises, sometimes sad, sometimes pleasant. But in either case, unexpected. Indeed, were it not for the surprises that come so frequently; were we certain that to-day will be as yesterday, and that to-morrow as to-day, life here would be dull and dreary indeed, a burden far too great for us to bear. It is because to-day is not altogether as yesterday that we are sure to-morrow will not be altogether as to-day. But for this our life would be but a treadmill, or prison, with its unvarying round of enforced sameness of labor. We ought to be very thankful that our heavenly Father does thus isolate every day and keep from us the issues of the days before us.

But we are not quite submissive to this ordering of things. We are too proud to confess that we know not what shall be on the morrow. This lesson, as to our own ignorance and dependence, is one which we have to learn by bitter experience. But after a thousand disappointments in trying to improve upon the methods of divine Providence, we find out at last that God's way is better than our way, and come to say, not with surly acquiescence, but with perfect peace and trust: "If the Lord will, we shall live and do this or that."—N. Y. Evangelist.

A STORY OF A COLLEGE GIRL.

Many who are striving for a college course are sometimes discouraged and think it will be an impossibility for them to accomplish it. But let me tell my young friends that it is a mistake to allow such a feeling to take possession of them. I know from a personal experience that "all things come round to him who will but wait." It is not my purpose, however, to tell my own story, but that of another. I will say, though, that when I was about sixteen I was disappointed over almost everything that I had intended to do in this world, and I felt that it would be impossible for me to be anything or do anything, when one day I read an article in one of our magazines on "Girls and Colleges." In this article, written by a woman, I found these words: "Don't give up the idea of at least one year in college until you have celebrated your fiftieth birthday." These words came to me as an inspiration, and then and there I said, "I will graduate from B—college if I can do so before I am fifty."

What before had seemed an impossibility seemed now very possible with so many years before me, and although I left school as soon as I could get a third-grade certificate, and continued to teach for several years, yet when Providence at last opened the way for me to attend school again I was able to enter college as a freshman. But to proceed to my story; and I will give it as nearly as possible in the heroine's own words:

My people were German Lutherans. My mother was a very religious woman in her way, but I early felt that there must be something more of religion than I had ever been taught. I think now that I was the only really religiously-inclined one in the family. My father was in business, a paying one, and if he had only attended to it carefully and let liquor alone we would have been very comfortable as far as this world's goods go.

My mother was very much opposed to girls receiving much education. All she thought necessary for them was to get the barest knowledge of the most elementary branches, become good housekeepers and finally get married. But I felt that I must have an education, and I thought if I could only go to school long enough to get a third-grade certificate I would be perfectly happy. How I worked for this and how many scoldings I received I can never tell, but they are written indelibly upon my heart.

After struggling in every conceivable way to get along, deprived of all those little niceties so dear to a girl's heart, often going insufficiently clothed, I at last attained my heart's desire. I was a full-fledged teacher. I taught two terms and then went back to school. In the meantime a new principal had been installed in our village school, a very different person from my former teacher—broad in every respect: one who thought that a girl was just as good as a boy; that she was not born for the sole purpose of being either a pet or a drudge for man, but for a companion in the truest sense of the word. These were strange ideas to me—and coming from a man, too.

Under this noble man I worked for three months, and then went again to teaching. Before my leaving school for the second time he talked with me very seriously about woman's work and her personal responsibility to God for the development of her talents. He said that the intense love I had for books was not a happening, but a divine gift. My mind should be made strong to think and act by thorough cultivation and development. He earnestly urged me not to think of giving up until I had at least completed a course in our State normal school. This advice was as chimerical apparently as a dream; nay, an utter impossibility. But still it clung to me: I could not shake it off, and the longing for it to be something more than a dream became so great that it was with me sleeping and waking.

In the course of a few days I received a letter from my teacher, full of encouraging words and useful hints. He also sent me a General History to study during my spare moments, so that I should be ready to take an examination upon it when I returned home.

How I worked! I fairly devoured the subject. So anxious was I to do full justice to it, and to show my appreciation of his thoughtfulness, that I forgot all about my former dreams and dreamed instead of Gustavus Adolphus, Napoleon and the like. And so the term went by. So interested was I in the book I was studying, that I often told the children about it in such simple language as they could understand. I was greatly surprised the last week of school to have the director offer the school to me for the next term, with the same salary that they intended to pay to the male teacher whom they had expected to hire. I found I had made my reputation in that district because I "was such a good scholar and wasn't afraid to tell the youngsters lots of things they couldn't get out of a reader." I wrote to my teacher this pleasing news, asking his advice about accepting the offer. Another letter full of good cheer and congratulations came by return mail. As there was only a week between the terms I concluded to stay in the neighborhood.

This week was the turning point in my life. I met a lady who was a graduate of the State normal school who had friends there. She examined me carefully, and thought that with the work I had done outside of the school, if I were sure that I could stand the examinations, I could get through in two years. I thought I could after thoroughly reviewing all the studies I had been over. She also told me that often a student hired a room and did her own cooking, and that made the expenses much less. So I said I would bend every effort toward getting enough money to go for a year. She inquired into the state of my finances and found that I had enough to carry me through one term if I were very careful.

She advised me to go next fall and not wait for anything. "Go at once with what you have, and perhaps the way will be open for you to stay longer. If not, your chance for getting a position will be improved even by this term's work."

Of course I accepted the advice and went. And by one help after another I was enabled to stay until I finished. My path was not altogether strewn with flowers, but, thank God, I did not tread under foot the few tiny blossoms that cheered and strengthened me on my way. At first I was very sensitive; and it is a fact that many of the girls did snub me because I was poorly clad and could not in the nature of the case be as lively and full of fun as they were. And for a time I was in danger of being as unjust to other noble souls as these silly girls were to me; for because some had slighted me I made up my mind that no one wanted to have anything to do with me, and did not make any effort to respond to those who were kind and friendly.

But this passed away. I had genuinely hard times. I have known what it was not to be quite sure where my next loaf of bread was coming from. Often when, in going to my rooms from recitation, I had smelled the odor of roast meat and vegetables, mingled with the aroma of Mocha and Java. On getting home I cried, because I wanted some too; and, although I was hungry, my little piece of salt pork and slice of bread went down very hard.

A girl in the same house with me used to spend more for knick knacks than I did for all my expenses. She very frequently had marshmallow roasts in her rooms with a few of the girls, and she always asked me to come in, but I did not dare to go for fear that I might act as if I were hungry.

One morning I was sitting on the steps of the porch, feeling faint and hardly caring to get the little breakfast that I would have to force myself to eat, when the lady who lived next to us called to me that she was in a "peck of trouble."

How was that? I asked. I soon found that the washerwoman she was expecting was sick and couldn't come, and perhaps wouldn't be able to all the week. The boiler was on and all in readiness, and she would have to do the washing herself or find another woman, which she thought was almost impossible, as they were all so busy.

My heart leaped into my mouth. Here was my chance. Dare I do it? Yes, I would. Anything was better than this dreadful faint feeling which I knew a good meal would take away. I told her that I had three hours that I could help her in if she would let me. She thought at first that I was joking; but when she found that I was in earnest she told me to come right along, for breakfast was ready and I could eat just as well with her. Perhaps you can't understand what that breakfast was to me. A generous piece of steak, a potato, sweet bread and butter, and a cup of fragrant coffee—do you wonder that I broke down and could hardly eat for trying to swallow my sobs?

"Poor child, you are homesick. Never mind, dear; the vacation will soon be here," was her delicate comment,—for I am sure she must have surmised the truth. Then, excusing herself on the pretext that the baby must be awake, she called out from the door to eat as much as I possibly could, as the washing was very dirty.

Oh, that blessed woman! She seemed an angel sent to minister unto me, and to this day she is different to me from any other woman. Her kindness and delicacy could not be surpassed, and all that morning as I rubbed and rubbed I prayed God to bless her, and I believe he has.

Then she told me if I had time to spare from my studies (how kind her way of putting it) she would be glad of a little help. It often was quite hard to get the breakfast dishes done because of baby, and if I would come every morning and do them for her she would be glad to have me breakfast with her and pay me just what I thought was right. I tried to make her understand how gladly I would do so and my breakfast would be compensation enough. I cannot begin to tell how that woman helped me, and never once offered me charity. It soon became the established order of things for me to breakfast with her and then do up the work. Then I came in and got the 3 o'clock meal and stayed to dinner. Mondays and Tuesdays I worked two hours before I went to recitations, and Saturdays four hours, and she paid me a shilling an hour for all I did. Having plenty of generous food I did better in my studies; then, too, I had some one to talk with about my difficulties, and many a knotty problem she enabled me to solve. She did all this for me and yet helped me to keep my independence intact.

She mentioned incidentally that she had worked her way through college, and she was glad to see so many girls willing to do the same thing, instead of staying at home a burden to their fathers and no special good to themselves, simply because they had not enough good sense to put their paltry pride in their pockets and say, "I am poor, but I am ready and able to work." She did not tell me, however, that she had worked her way with literary work. She kindly put me in the way of such work, for which I received fair remuneration, so that my last year in school was free from the worry of financial difficulties.

I graduated. With honors? I hope so; and then I secured a good position as preceptress in one of our growing northern schools. Here I met Mr. Hampstead; and after we were married we came to the university. Another year and we will both graduate, my husband from the law school, and I shall be able to write B. A. after my name.

My story is a very simple one, of earnest endeavor and faith in the Allwise One, and if by your telling it any girl will be encouraged to go on and develop to the best of her God-given powers, I am more than willing that you should relate it.—Elizabeth Gaites.

OCCUPATION.

"Occupation," says Edward Everett Hale, "is a formative influence to which I am largely indebted." In his early home the children always had a multitude of things which they were eager to do, and consequently they had no time for lounging. Undoubtedly it was the parents' wise thought, of which the children were unconscious, that kept them always so happily employed. And this is one secret of success in bringing up boys. There are scores of things which healthy boys will enjoy doing if they have a little direction and the knowledge that some one else is deeply interested in the success of their projects. There is nothing that will repay a mother better than the time spent in devising enjoyable occupations for her children, and the more she conceals her part in the planning, the more successful will be the results. Especially when going away from home for a day or longer, she will do well to leave plenty of occupations, in-doors and out, which may be carried on during her absence. The thought of her pleasure on returning in seeing all they have accomplished, will add zest and purpose to the children's efforts.—Anonymous.

EARLY MENTAL DEVELOPMENT.

Both common observation and the closest scientific study have made it plain that youth is the period of sense ascendancy. From this, most important conclusions follow, which we cannot ignore without paying a heavy penalty. Attention has been called to the infant in order to show that prior to all school education, nature asserts herself and points the way in which the human brain and mind develop. Any education that overlooks these facts is directly against the organization we possess, and must be more or less of a failure. How far our methods have been and are in harmony with them I shall presently attempt to show.

For the moment let me follow the child out of the stage of infancy into that of school age. The boy of five, let us suppose, is sent to school a perfect stranger to books and the usual educational equipment. Everything on the road to school attracts him to such an extent that likely enough he may arrive late. When at school the teacher may find him so restless that the question of keeping him in order so that he shall not disturb others is a matter of serious difficulty. So long as he can be kept in action things go well enough, but to keep this activity within bounds is the problem.

Very often repressive measures that quite paralyze his nature are resorted to in order to adapt his organism to the environment instead of the reverse being attempted. It is forgotten too often that if this young creature were not active, even restless, impulsive, inattentive—i. e., ever ready to secure some new impression—he could not develop after nature's plan.—Popular Science Monthly.

MADE KNOWN IN THE BREAKING OF BREAD.

Though he talked of the kingdom and all it would bring,
The disciples knew not that they walked with the King.
At the evening repast, on the home table spread,
He was known unto them in the breaking of bread.

So we wonder, we question, we doubt and we fear,
Seeking Christ in the distance who liveth so near,
And then back to the hearthstone at eventide led,
He is known unto us in the breaking of bread.

Through the swift transformations, the movements sublime
That have startled the ages, and still fashion time,
The divine hand appears; but its glory is shed
Through the acts we count simple, like breaking of bread.

With the purest emotions our hearts may have burned
When the presence of Christ was but dimly discerned;
Yet the spiritual hunger no other has fed,
He is known to all souls in the breaking of bread.

TEMPERANCE.

AN UNRECOGNIZED FACTOR.

A wide-awake young New England minister, Rev. Mr. Galbraith by name, in a recent sermon, made the following keen observations:

"In the last few years all the New England States have taken backward steps on the liquor question. We see local Solons sitting to preserve the lives of infant lobsters and ridiculing measures to preserve boys. Politicians may safely snub the church, but they will crawl before the wielder of the beer mallet. It is an age of commercial unrest, and this is confined to no class. Ministry and laity, rich and poor, bards and bankers are all in the race for money. It is an age of syndicates; the interests of life are ruled by stock gamblers; wages are getting lower; rents are going higher; the cost of living is increased; the distance grows greater between the poor and the house of God. Put your ear to the ground and you will hear a ground swell that will not down. The race for wealth is desecrating the Sabbath. The Sunday paper meets us on the way to church. Sunday labor is becoming alarmingly prevalent, and nothing but a miracle can save America from becoming a Sunday bar-keeper at the World's Fair. There is a wave of miasmatic literature sweeping all over the land. The quail of realism—God save the mark—teaches that all men are impure, all women fallen. When the leading member of an evangelical church will give a card party in a down-town hotel on the night when his church is holding revival services; when the elite of Boston—yes, its evangelical church members—will go to hear an actress whose portrayals the press dare not print as she gives them, then it is time for the church to be aggressive and outspoken. We have the means; we have the men. Oh, for a baptism of the Spirit!"

The only vitally important omission of this progressive pastor is that he did not say, "We have the women"—as well as the men. The grotesque stupidity of the church in these times is that she does not utilize in every one of her departments the power of Christian womanhood, and that the Christian voter does not place her side by side with himself at the ballot box, that together they may vote out the reign of rum and ruin. When we have descended through a few more circles of perdition the church will perhaps discover this method as the one that can right up the ship of state, well-nigh submerged under the yeasty foaming, tawny waves of alcoholic liquor, tobacco and impurity.—Union Signal.

THE BAPTISTS ON PROHIBITION.

At the Baptist convention for Ontario and Quebec, held in Brantford last week, the following resolution regarding prohibition was unanimously adopted. There is not another Christian church in Canada more unanimous on the great temperance question than the Baptists:

Resolved, That in view of the disastrous effects of the use of alcoholic stimulants upon the physical, social and moral well-being of the masses, and of the evil influences of even the moderate use of such stimulants by church members, we desire as a convention of the Baptist churches of Ontario and Quebec to deprecate in the strongest possible manner the habit of moderate drinking indulged in by many Christians, and to express the firm belief that nothing short of total abstinence can meet the standard of New Testament Christianity in this regard. We also desire to reaffirm our oft-repeated opinion that total prohibition of the liquor traffic by Dominion legislation is the only remedy for the evils of this traffic, and to call upon all the churches represented in this convention to use every legitimate effort by vote and influence to secure such legislation. We earnestly hope that in this effort Christian philanthropy will overrule political sympathy, and that Baptists everywhere will declare themselves on the side of right and temperance, irrespective of political parties, and thus hasten the time when soberness and righteousness shall prevail in all our communities.—Canadian Templar.

STARTLING STATISTICS FROM A SCHOOL.

"I hurt my finger this morning," said Carrie, a child of seven years, in a primary school to-day, holding up her little hands for the teacher's sympathy.

"How did it happen?" asked the teacher.

"I went to the saloon for beer, and the screen door swung back and pinched my fingers. I cried hard, it hurt so," said the child.

"Why did you go there for beer?"

"My mamma sent me."

"Oh," said the teacher, "little girls should not go to the saloon. They see men drink and play cards and hear them curse. It isn't a nice place for children. Tell your mother the teacher said please do not send you there again. We must be little ladies here, and ladies do not go to such places."

"I go there, too," said another child.

Then the question was carefully asked: How many children in this room sometimes go to the saloon for beer? Forty-eight of the fifty present raised their hands.

It seemed incredible that so many children should become acquainted at an early age with the interior of a saloon. The average age of these children is about eight years, or less. They do not belong to the lowest stratum of society, by any means, but are children of well-to-do work-people, living in one or two rooms, wearing quite good clothes; some of the mothers go out to work.

Many pitiful incidents occur to show the general demoralizing influences of the saloon on any neighborhood. One dear little girl, Bessie, had been absent from school some days. The children said she could not come for she had no shoes. Teachers more often supply these, and other much needed articles, than is generally known, so Bessie's shoes were furnished.

One day the teacher went in search of her in the dirty back street where the family kept a cheap boarding house. The little maid was seen coming down the street with an old shawl over her head and shoulders, and with something on her arm, but her bare, little feet red and cold on the frosty sidewalk.

"Where are you going?" questioned the teacher.

"To the butcher's shop," said Bessie readily.

As she tucked the ragged old shawl around the child she discovered a tin pail instead of a basket on her arm.

"You are going for beer, aren't you, dear?" asked the teacher.

"My father sent me," said the child trembling with fear.

Later the teacher made an earnest effort to induce the parents to allow her to place Bessie where she would be well cared for and taught; but no, they needed her to run errands. A startling murder occurred in this miserable family the following Sunday, and Bessie was released from the cruel father forever. In a drunken fight with the mother the father struck her with a chair; a boarder tried to defend her but was in danger of losing his own life, when he seized a heavy iron poker and struck the striker dead.

The convenient saloon is almost wholly responsible for this and other terrible tragedies. Familiarity with such scenes is demoralizing to the children of a whole neighborhood. Tender hearts are hardened and the way paved to a downward career.

God speed any wise measure to free the land from this terrible blight upon childhood, and curse upon manhood.—Lucy A. Wiggin, in Union Signal.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Gospel a two-edged sword.—vs. 44, 45. The preaching of Paul and Barnabas made a great stir in the city, both among Jews and Gentiles, though in different ways. We can imagine how Paul's sermon was the general theme of conversation, discussed in the market-place, at the workmen's bench, and in the homes of rich and poor; with angry denunciations by some, curiously by many, as any newism might be talked about to-day, and by others with a more or less firm conviction that the story of the cross was no mere fable, cunningly devised by men, but in truth God's way of salvation for a sinful race. As a result of this agitation, the next Sabbath almost the entire populace flocked to the synagogue "to hear the word of God." They did not go to hear a brilliant sermon or enjoy fine music, or to see the fashions, which are the motives that it is to be feared actuate too many church-goers at the present time. It is to be noticed, however, that men like Paul and Barnabas, who preach not themselves but the Lord Jesus, are not apt to attract the latter class of hearers. To see this concourse of Gentiles gathered together to hear about the death and resurrection of the hated and despised Nazarene, filled the Jews with indignant envy—the same malignant feeling which led their priests and rulers to crucify him. Paul and Barnabas were drawing away possible proselytes. They may have wanted to see these Gentiles turned from their idols, but only that they might bind on their necks the heavy yoke of their own ceremonial law. They did not want to see them made free in Christ Jesus. How often the same spirit prevails now. It is certain that the cold shoulder is often turned to evangelists by denominational churches, and their work regarded with envy and suspicious fear lest it should draw converts away from the bondage of creeds into the liberty of God's Word, which "is not bound."

2. The apostles turn to the Gentiles.—vs. 46-49. "Paul and Barnabas waxed bold." All this violence and blasphemy only made them stand more firmly on the truth. Paul knew that his mission was primarily to the Gentiles, for this had been revealed to him at his conversion. Here was proof that the time had come for him to take up his life-work. The knowledge that we are in the path of duty in itself gives boldness. "Seeing ye put it from you." Paul and Barnabas were simply God's spokesmen. If the Jews refused to hear the offered message of mercy, all responsibility on their part was ended. Their stubborn rejection of the Gospel was but carrying out God's divine purpose and leaving the apostles free to proclaim the offer of salvation to the farthest limits of the Gentile world. "As many as were ordained," etc. Bartimeus was "ordained" to be healed of his blindness because he put himself in the way of being healed. It was in this sense that these believing Gentiles were ordained to eternal life. They put themselves in the way of eternal life; and in the spiritual, as well as in the natural world, the law of cause and effect holds good.

3. The apostles banished.—vs. 50-52. The Jews succeeded in raising such a storm of persecution, that Paul and Barnabas were obliged to leave the city. The persecution must have been harder to bear from the very fact that it did not emanate from the baser sort, but their enemies stirred up the chief men of the city, and the devout and honorable women. Paul had his noblest helpers among the female sex, and without doubt his bitterest foes. But there was some excuse for this latter class, as the customs of those times kept them in a state of ignorance, which is the natural evil of bigotry and prejudice. Women in these days who oppose a righteous cause are far more blameworthy, for they have the privilege, not enjoyed by their sisters in ancient times, of thinking and judging for themselves. "And the disciples were filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost." The former follows on the latter as a natural consequence. The most spiritual Christians are always the happiest, no matter what may be their outward circumstances.

4. Farther persecution.—ch. 14. vs. 1-7. At Iconium the same story is repeated. The success which attends their work arouses the unbelieving Jews to stir up the Gentiles against them, though the opposition does not at first take the form of open violence, for the apostles "abode there a long time, speaking boldly in the Lord." This is what we need to-day: men who will be bold in Christ, speaking the message that is given them without fear or favor. The city was divided by their preaching, and part were friendly to the apostles, while part sided with the Jews, so that they had to flee once more. It is no compliment to a minister to say that everybody is suited with his preaching, for the Word of God faithfully proclaimed has always this dividing power.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Congregationalist says: "In Berlin the whole strength of the government is exerted to build forty new churches this year and next. In Chicago the Methodists alone have built nineteen churches and five others are in course of construction. These are all built for the working people, and, it may be added, by the working people."

—Dr. Baume, who returns from India on account of ill health, began his work in that country in 1859. In 1866 he came to America, again returning to his Indian field in 1883. He served successful pastorates in Naini Tal, Poona, and Bombay. He is greatly beloved by fellow missionaries of all denominations.

—Two hundred and fifty-one new students have registered in the College of Liberal Arts, Northwestern University. Of these, 137 call themselves Methodists. The Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, and Baptists are largely represented in the remaining 114. The total registration in the college is 490, an increase of twenty per cent over last year.

—The 126th anniversary of old John-street Methodist church in New York City was celebrated on a recent Sunday. Bishops Newman and Walden and others shared in the festival.

—The German Methodists have a mutual insurance company for insuring their church and parsonage property. The secretary recently reported the cost of insuring on the mutual plan for nine years at only $1.65 on $100 of insurance.

—The Woman's Home Missionary Society, in annual session at Grand Rapids, Mich., reports thirty-five homes and schools, with a valuation of $225,000; number of conferences, seventy-five; members, over 50,000; and contributions during the last four years, $347,741 cash, and $247,849 supplies. The report of Mrs. A. R. Clark, treasurer, showed $31,349 brought forward; $67,000 supplies; received $95,783 cash, and $8,847 in local work, a total of $127,123. All obligations of the year are paid; and $3,076 remains in the treasury.

MISSIONS.

—There are 11,388 stations and outstations in Protestant Foreign Missions; 4,693 male missionaries; 3,228 female; 40,083 native laborers; 726,883 communicants; and an income of $11,106,714. This would make the whole number of communicants (not adherents) less than one million among all the millions of heathendom. Yet let us remember that the number of communicants does not begin to show all the good done. Much foundation has been laid for future building. Much seed has been sown for harvest yet in the future. But look very briefly at a few separate fields. China: Population perhaps 350 millions; somewhere near one-fourth the population of the earth; Protestant missions began in 1807; now 1,296 foreign missionaries; 522 churches; 37,287 communicants. Africa: Population quite indefinite, from 127 millions to 250 millions; about 620 stations; 710 ordained missionaries; 175,000 communicants; 800,000 adherents. These figures may or may not include the Christians in the more civilized parts of South Africa. India: Population (including more than British India) over 280 millions; 571 stations; 148,497 communicants; 420,475 adherents. These are only a few items. The facts of missionary history are numerous and diverse; and many of them are grand.—American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions Almanac.

—Of the 139 missionary societies represented at the general conference of Protestant foreign missions, in London in 1888, 18 represented all other races and 121 represented the Anglo-Saxon race.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The late Government statistics show that there are now about 140 denominations in the United States. Of these there are fifteen different varieties of Methodists, fourteen of Baptists and twelve of Presbyterians.

—Bishop Westcott, Episcopalian, believes that the revised version of the New Testament has brought the words and thoughts of the apostles before English people, with a purity and exactness never attained before, and that the next generation will fully recognize its authority.

—The Triennial Congregational Council at Minneapolis expressed strong sympathy with the colored people of the South, because of the lynchings and abridgement of their suffrage rights.

—Statistics recently published show that the growth of the Roman Catholic church has not been as rapid, during the last decade, as that of other denominations. The communicants of the Roman church increased fifteen and a half per cent; of the Congregational church, thirty-three per cent; of the Methodist Episcopal church, thirty per cent; Presbyterian church, forty per cent.

—Eighteen of the London theaters are occupied for divine services on Sunday evenings.

—Rev. Dr. J. W. Chapman has resigned the pastorate of Bethany of Philadelphia, to become an evangelist.

—An English clergyman has just celebrated his "iron" wedding, the seventieth anniversary of his wedding. He is ninety-seven years old, and his wife ninety-nine.

—During a recent trip by wagon in Southern Maryland, Bishop Paret traveled four hundred miles, visited twenty-seven churches, was beyond the reach of the telegraph, never saw a railroad for the whole time, and was at no time more than forty miles from Washington.

—The last hundred years of missionary work has put the Gospel and the Bible within reach of 500,000,000 of the race.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—The Episcopalians, at the General Convention which they have just held in Baltimore, resolved to be guided by the League for the Protection of American Institutions and to accept no more appropriations from the government for the support of their mission schools for Indian children. The argument that clinched their determination to reject further aid, was that the Catholics got a great deal of money from the federal treasury under the contract system.

—Rev. Dr. Rainsford, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, has taken to the stump as a partisan politician. He advocated "gilt-edged" saloons, instead of prohibition.

—The Episcopal House of Bishops has ruled that no minister shall marry persons under 18 without the written or spoken consent of parent or guardian, nor divorced persons, except the innocent party in a case of adultery or parties once divorced seeking reunion. Baptism and the communion are to be refused to persons married in violation of these rules except penitents in danger of death.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The Salvation Army will supply the London public schools with firewood under contract with the school board; 1,250,000 bundles will be required.

—The officers of the Salvation Army hope to realize $250,000 from the collections during "self-denial week." In 1888 the sum thus raised was $75,000; in 1889, $100,000; in 1890, $150,000, and in 1891, $200,000. General Booth wants a committee of investigation appointed to look into his social scheme. It has been suggested by the London Chronicle, that the Prince of Wales name this committee. A colony in South Africa is contemplated.

Y. M. C. A.

—Next Sunday begins the annual week of prayer, which will end on the 19th inst. This is the twenty-seventh recurrence of special supplication throughout the Union, for the blessing of God upon the work of the Association among the young men.

All the offices and departments of the Columbian Exposition have been removed to Jackson Park.

A 30-inch gas main, near Monroe street and Michigan avenue, upon which men were at work, ignited from lighted gasoline burners and exploded with terrible force, destroying $25,000 worth of plate glass in that vicinity, creating great consternation and severely injuring two of the workmen.

A dynamite cartridge five inches long was found by Route Agent Smith in a mail pouch on the east-bound Chicago & Alton train. There was no address on the package and no one knows how it got in the pouch. The matter is being investigated.

Three safes were cracked open on the North side in a single night, and nothing was left in the shape of a clew to give the police even a ghost of a show to run down the perpetrators.

COUNTRY.

The seventh annual meeting of the World's Convention of Christians at Work was opened Thursday in Boston.

If the Grand Jury of Bristol county, Mass., finds an indictment of murder against Lizzie A. Borden, the trial will take place in New Bedford, probably in January.

The strike of street railway men at Columbus, O., has been amicably settled, as has that of the granite workers in New Hampshire.

The usual "fall gales," both on the great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, have been marked with great severity and destruction of shipping. Last week, along the Lakes, the damages to property reached nearly $500,000, including the loss of a dozen vessels and the lives of twenty-five sailors. The insurance losses on the inland waters exceed those of any previous year. A terrible storm on the Atlantic—a hurricane—was encountered at sea by the North German Lloyd steamer "Spree;" the passengers were kept be-

That Chautauqua Idea.

Not long since while traveling we heard some gentlemen conversing about Chautauqua. One said it was a beautiful place by the sea. Another that it was where such luscious grapes were grown. Another said it was not a place; that the true Chautauqua was not a place but a grand idea.

Each one tried hard to convince the other that his way of thinking was right and the other all wrong. Now it seems to us that none of them were right. We think we can find many to bear us out in our view of the matter. Our idea of a very beautiful Chautauqua, in fact many of them, can be found on our last page.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. make an offer of the Chautauqua Desk, a Chautauqua Piano Lamp or a Pittsburgh Onyx Banquet Lamp, which will make the word memorable in many households for years to come.

They have been before the people for a long time, and although they seem to offer an immense bargain, they fully carry out all they promise.

For many years an esteemed communicant of Trinity Episcopal church, Newburgh, N. Y., always says "Thank You" to Hood's Sarsaparilla. HOME AND HEALTH.

WHEN MEAT IS COOKED.

The orthodox rule for the cooking of meat, fish and fowl is to allow a quarter of an hour to every pound; yet this recipe needs to be mixed with brains. Some families like rare, others well-done, meats; again, a joint may be unusually thick or remarkably thin; again, full-grown and mature meats, such as beef and mutton, are, best with red gravy oozing from them; while immature or white meats, such as lamb, veal, pork, etc., are absolutely dangerous unless done through to the bone. A good rule is to allow twelve to fifteen minutes, according to the taste of the family and the thickness of the joint, for the cooking of every pound of beef and mutton; fifteen to eighteen minutes for the cooking of every pound of pork, veal, lamb, ham, bacon, fish and every kind of fowl.

Accidents happen, however; the oven may be too hot or too cool, the fire too slow, and—what not? So a cook should learn to know, by the appearance of the meat itself, when it is sufficiently cooked. How can this be done? By carefully observing the appearance of the meat around the centre bone or bones. If the learner be in doubt, the blade of a knife can be run in about an inch to the bone, and the meat slightly raised and examined for a moment or two. After one or two trials, this will be found to be an infallible method. It is quite right that next to the bone beef and mutton should be red and juicy, but if the beef be blue or the mutton has that strange, raw look peculiar to mutton that has just felt the heat of the fire, the joints need a little more cooking; while white meats should be white, even to the bone, with the exception, perhaps, of lamb, which many people prefer with a little pinky juice oozing through.

DELICIOUS LEFT-OVER DISHES.

A delicious dish is made by cooking together a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour, stirring these until they bubble, and pouring on them a half-pint of milk, still stirring constantly. Into the white sauce thus made stir the picked up remains of cold boiled, baked or broiled fish. About two cupfuls will be the right proportion to the amount of sauce. Season it well and toss it with a fork until it is heated through. Add the juice of half a lemon just before serving.

A dish that will commend itself to vegetarians is prepared by heating a pint of stewed tomatoes and adding to this a cup of cold lima beans and one of cold corn out from the cob. Cook together five minutes and serve.

Cold lamb, veal or chicken is excellent warmed in a sauce made by melting together a tablespoonful of butter and one of currant jelly, and adding to it a salt-spoonful of dry mustard. When the mixture simmers lay in the meat cut in thin slices and let it cook about three minutes. Pepper and salt to taste.—New York World.

A COOL HEAD.

Nothing conduces to a successful meeting of emergencies better than a cool head, with a feeling of perfect confidence that everything is going to come out all right. Whether things are "coming out all right" or not, at least, the feeling of quiet self-control makes one better able to work toward the good result. To a mother this self-possession is invaluable. In a large family small events calculated to upset the domestic machinery are constantly occurring. It seems to be a law of nature that children should continually have hairbreadth escapes, and come within an inch of losing their lives. But it is equally a law of nature that they should escape.

BLACKING THE STOVE.

Coffee is used for mixing blacking for the stove, in order to make it stick closer and last longer. Most housekeepers prefer the old-fashioned blacking to any of the cements, because of its lasting qualities. The cement is easier to apply, as it requires no labor in polishing. No stove should be blacked more than once a month, but it should be kept clean by instantly wiping off any clots of grease which may be spilled upon it. The flues of a stove should certainly be cleaned as often as once a month.—Boston Cultivator.

ADULTERATIONS.

The American Analyst says: "The United States Department of Agriculture, Division of Chemistry, have just published another bulletin, giving the results of analyses made by chemists all over the country of honey, maple syrup, molasses and candies. The report is an astonishing expose of the dishonest methods of otherwise respectable business houses in labeling adulterated goods as 'strictly pure' or 'warranted strictly pure, and in some instances even positively guaranteeing the goods not to contain the very adulterants found.'"
